Mr. KEAN. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the remaining salary due Hon. LUMAN H. WELLER, of Iowa, as a Representative from Iowa for the Forty-eighth Congress, be paid in standard silver dollars. [Laughter.]

Mr. WELLER. I desire to accept that amendment, and I trust that the House will honor me by voting for it. I do accept it. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

The question being taken on the adoption of Mr. WELLER's amendment, the House divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 95.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UMATILLA INDIAN RESERVATION, OREGON.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask now to call up Senate bill 66, providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, the second reading being at length, as follows:

An act providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes.

Whereas the confederated bands of Cayuse, Walla Walla, and Umatilla Indians, residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, have expressed a willingness to settle upon lands in severalty on their said reservation, and to have the residue of their lands not needed for such allotment sold for their benefit: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States cause lands to be allotted to the confederated bands of Cayuse, Walla Walla, and Umatilla Indians, residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, as follows, of agricultural lands:

To each head of a family, one hundred and sixty acres; to each single person over the age of 18 years, eighty acres; to each orphan child being under 18 years of age, eighty acres; and to each child under 18 years of age not otherwise provided for, forty acres.

Allotments to heads of families and to children under 18 years of age belonging to families shall be made upon the selections made by the head of the family; allotments to persons over 18 years of age not classed as heads of families shall be made upon the selection of such persons; and allotments to orphans shall be made upon selections made by the agent in charge, or other person duly authorized by the Department. In addition to the allotments of agricultural lands to said Indians in severalty as herein provided, there shall be reserved a reasonable amount of pasture and timber lands for their use, to be used by said Indians in common, and there shall also be selected and set apart for an industrial farm and school six hundred and forty acres of agricultural lands. Before any allotments are made, a commission of three disinterested persons to be appointed by the President shall go upon said reservation and ascertain as near as may be the number of Indians who will remain on said reservation, and who shall be entitled to take lands in severalty thereon, and the amount of land required to make the allotments; and thereupon said commission shall determine and set apart so much of said reservation as shall be necessary to supply agricultural lands for allotments in severalty, together with sufficient pasture and timber lands for their use, and 640 acres for an industrial farm and school, not exceeding 120,000 acres in the aggregate for all purposes; and the same shall be in as compact a form as possible. Said commission shall report to the Secretary of the Interior the number and classes of persons entitled to allotments, as near as they may be able to, the metes and bounds of the tract by them selected for said Indians, and designate the particular tract selected for an industrial farm and school; and if the same shall be approved, the said tract shall thereafter constitute the reservation for said Indians, and within which the allotments herein provided for shall be made. The said tract shall be surveyed, or so much thereof as shall be required for allotments, and as soon as such surveys are approved the selections and allotments shall be made. The President shall cause patents to issue to all persons to whom allotments of lands shall be made under the provisions of this act, which shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State of Oregon, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever: Provided, That the law of alienation and descent in force in the State of Oregon shall apply thereto after patents have been executed, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided further, That any Indian or Indians residing upon said reservation who may desire to remove to or settle upon any other reservation shall be permitted to do so, and shall retain their right to share their equal proportion of benefits to be derived from any fund that may arise from the sale of any of the lands of said Umatilla reservation, and in addition the equitable value of the right to take lands in severalty on said reservation, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior and taken out of said fund; and the same shall be expended from time to time for their benefit in establishing them in their new homes in such manner as the Department shall direct.

SEC. 2. That as soon as the report of said commission in respect to the new boundaries of said reservation shall be approved, the residue of said reservation lands not included in said new lines shall be surveyed, if not already surveyed, or if the stakes and monuments, if surveyed, have become so obliterated that the lines can not be ascertained, and the same shall be appraised and classified into timbered and untimbered lands; and in case where improvements have been made by any Indian or for the United States upon such lands, such improvements shall be separately appraised, and if the same belong to an Indian such Indian shall be reimbursed the value of such improvements in money or in other improvements upon his allotment, as shall be determined by the Department; but no lands shall be appraised at less than $1.25 per acre. The said lands, when surveyed and appraised, shall be sold at the proper land office of the United States by the register thereof, at public sale, to the highest bidder at a price not less than the appraised value thereof, such sale to be advertised in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct. Each purchaser of any of said lands at such sale shall be entitled to purchase one hundred and sixty acres of untimbered lands and an additional tract of forty acres of timbered lands, and no more. He shall pay one-third of the purchase-price of untimbered lands at the time of purchase, one-third in one year, and one-third in two years, with interest on the deferred payments at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and shall pay the full purchase-price of timbered lands at the time of purchase. And where there are improvements upon the lands purchased which shall have been separately appraised the purchaser shall pay the appraised value of such improvements at the time of purchase, in addition to the amounts hereinbefore required to be paid.

Each purchaser shall, at the time of making his purchase, make and subscribe an oath or affirmation that he is purchasing said lands for his own use and occupation, and not for or on account of or at the solicitation of any other, and that he has made no contract whereby the title thereto shall, directly or indirectly, inure to the benefit of another. And if any conveyance is made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same, or any lien thereon created before the issuing of the patent herein provided, such conveyance, contract, or lien shall be absolutely null and void. And before a patent shall issue for untimbered lands the purchaser shall make satisfactory proof that he has resided upon the lands purchased at least one year and has reduced at least twenty-five acres to cultivation. No patent shall issue until all payment shall have been made; and on the failure of any purchaser to make any payment when the same becomes due, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause said land to be again offered at public or private sale, after notice to the delinquent; and if said land shall sell for more than the balance due thereon, the surplus, after deducting expenses, shall be paid over to the first purchaser: Provided, That persons who settle upon or acquire title under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States to fractional subdivisions of lands adjacent to the lines of said reservation, as now and heretofore existing, and at the time of the sale herein provided for are residing on such fractions, and have been unable to secure the full benefit of such laws by reason that the lands settled upon were made fractional by the boundary line of said reservation crossing such subdivision, shall have a right, at any time after advertisement, so much of said lands as shall, with the fractional lands already settled upon, make in the aggregate one hundred and sixty acres; and no additional residence shall be required of such settler, but he shall take and subscribe the oath required of other purchasers at the time of purchase: Provided further, That after three years from the date when such lands shall be declared open for settlement and subject to sale, the lands which shall remain unsold may be purchased, without settlement, at the appraised value thereof. All controversies between settlers and purchasers in respect to settlement and the right of purchase shall be heard and determined, upon their priorities and equities, by the like officers and in the same manner as like contests are heard and determined under existing pre-emption laws: Provided also, That the State of Oregon shall be entitled to select from the public lands of the United States in said State lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections contained in said Umatilla reservation as now set apart and established.

Sec. 3. That the funds arising from the sale of said reservation lands, after paying the expenses of survey, appraisal, and sale, and reimbursing any Indian or Indians for the value of any improvements belonging to such Indian or Indians, and the equitable share of any Indian to the funds arising from the sale of said reservation lands as herein provided, and reimbursing the United States for improvements made by the Government and under the provisions herein, shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, and the same shall draw such rate of interest as is now or may be hereafter provided by law. Twenty per cent. of the principal of said funds may be used, under the direction of the President, in assisting said Indians to establish themselves upon their several allotments, in such manner as he shall direct, and $30,000 of the residue thereof shall be devoted to the establishment and support of an industrial farm and school for the training and education of the children of said Indians in the arts and methods of civilized life, and the increase from the funds thereafter to be devoted to the support of said industrial farm and school, and to such other beneficial purposes as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may be for the best interest of said Indians: Provided, That the said Indians shall pledge themselves to compel their children, male and female, between the ages of 7 and 15 years, to attend said school.

Sec. 4. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which said sum shall be reimbursed to the Treasury out of the sales of said lands; and $10,000 of said sum so appropriated shall be expended toward establishing said industrial farm and school herein provided for.

Sec. 5. That before this act shall be executed in any part, the consent of said Indians shall be obtained to the disposition of their lands as provided herein, which consent shall be expressed in writing and signed by a majority of the male adults upon said reservation, and shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to make needful rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and shall have power to determine all disputes and questions arising between Indians respecting their allotments, and shall fix the compensation to be allowed to the commissioners provided for in section 2.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule ten minutes are allowed for debate—five minutes for and five against the bill.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to know if it will not be proper, under the rules of the House, to move that this bill be laid over until to-morrow in order that it may be printed in the RECORD for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not yet before the House.

Mr. GEORGE. This bill, I will state, has been already printed in full in the RECORD.

I do not desire to detain the House at length in regard to this matter. I know that it is a long bill and that it is difficult for each individual member of the House to thoroughly understand from hearing it read in this manner, but I wish to state that it has been passed twice by the Senate and has been favorably reported unanimously by the committees of two Houses, the present House and the House of Representatives of the Forty-seventh Congress. It has the earnest approval of the Indians themselves, who are very desirous for the passage of the bill. It is for their welfare and for the welfare of the people of that State generally. All are desirous that such a bill shall be passed as will provide for the welfare of the Indians, who are a part and parcel of their community.

In brief the bill proposes to allot to the Indians such lands as they may need for their use, and then the remainder of the reservation be sold in small tracts and at not less than its appraised value to the highest bidder in cash with time payments, the money to be appropriated to the present and future welfare and benefit of the Indians.

Mr. PERKINS. And purchasers are limited to one hundred and sixty acres of the land as the amount they may acquire.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, they are limited to one hundred and sixty acres with a small amount of timbered land in addition. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COBB. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon a question. As I understand this bill—I have never read it, and have heard it now for the first time—I understand that after the expiration of three years it is provided that the lands shall be sold and the proceeds paid over to the Indians. Is that the purport of the bill?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, with reference to such lands as they do not need for allotment. It is provided that the residue shall be sold and the proceeds be appropriated to their benefit.

Mr. COBB. How do you provide that these lands shall be sold—by auction, at so much per acre, or at private sale after appraisement?

Mr. GEORGE. They are first to be appraised and the price fixed upon them, afterward to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder at not less than the appraised value, and only to the actual settlers upon the land and in quantities not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres to each, with forty acres of timbered land.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does it not provide that these lands shall be sold for cash?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. As this is to be a fund for the benefit of the Indians, would these lands not bring better prices if sold for part cash and a part on time?

Mr. GEORGE. That is the provision of the bill; in order that poor men can avail themselves of the opportunity of purchasing the lands and have time in which to pay for them.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understood the gentleman from Oregon to state, and also from hearing the bill read—for no man can understand so long a bill in all of its details from hearing it once read—that it provided for a cash sale.

Mr. GEORGE. Cash sale, but time payment of the greater portion.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Oregon and myself have a very different conception of what cash sales and time sales mean.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Does this bill limit the amount to which each person may become entitled under its provisions?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; one hundred and sixty acres, and forty acres of timber land in addition.

Mr. WELLER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon if in so far as he is concerned he will not consent that this shall go over until to-morrow, in order that we may have the opportunity of reading the bill and the report in the interim.

Mr. COBB. I ask for the reading of the report in connection with the bill.

Mr. STEVENS addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana was recognized to demand the reading of the report. This seems to be a Senate bill and there is no report accompanying it.

Mr. GEORGE. I will furnish a Senate report which I have here.

Mr. COBB. It is difficult to understand so long a bill, and I do not think it ought to be passed without time for its consideration.

Mr. GEORGE. Although this bill has been printed in the RECORD once, I will suggest that its consideration go over until to-morrow and that it be printed in the RECORD, and also the reports of the Senate and House committees, so that members may have a full opportunity of seeing what it is that is proposed.

The SPEAKER. Four minutes only of the hour under the special rule now remain. The gentleman from Oregon asks that the hour be now terminated and that this bill go over until to-morrow and be printed together with the report in the RECORD. Which report? Of the House or of the Senate?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senate report as it is a Senate bill and the House report, for that matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COBB. I shall have to object; the bill is so long.

Mr. CASSIDY. The bill goes into the RECORD anyhow, having been read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana object?

Mr. COBB. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed to read the report.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the report (made by Mr. DAWES, from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs), as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 66) entitled "A bill providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes," have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

This bill was reported from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs during last Congress, after very careful consideration, and passed the Senate, and was reported upon favorably by the House Committee on Indian Affairs. The report of the Senate Committee of last Congress very fully sets forth all the facts and reasons relating to said subject, and is therefore adopted for convenience as the report of your committee; which report is as follows:

"The Umatilla reservation was created by treaty with the Walla Walla, Cayuse, and Umatilla tribes and bands of Indians, occupying lands partly in Washington Territory and partly in Oregon, which treaty was promulgated April 11, 1859. The reservation contains 288,900 acres of land, of which 150,000 is tillable; the residue is pasture and timber land.

"The Indians upon this reservation have for the most part, since their location on the same, been peaceable and friendly toward the whites; have made some progress toward civilization; cultivated in 1881, as shown by the agent's report, 4,000 acres, broke during the year 2,000 acres new land, produced 10,000 bushels of wheat, 2,000 bushels of corn, 6,000 bushels of oats and barley, 6,000 bushels of vegetables, cut 900 tons of hay, 75,000 feet of lumber, 1,000 cords of wood, and built 10,000 rods of fence. They have 10,000 head of horses, 50 head of mules, 400 head of cattle, 5 head of swine, and 3,000 head of sheep. They earn by labor in civilized pursuits 65 per cent. of their subsistence and support, procure 12 per cent. by hunting and fishing, and receive in rations from the Government 23 per cent.

"The number of Indians on this reservation, as shown by the report of the agent for 1881, is 751—males 330, females 421. Of the whole number 504 are wholly clad in citizen's dress, and 123 partly. Two hundred and fifty-two families are reported as engaged in agriculture, and 162 male Indians undertake manual labor in civilized pursuits.

"These Indians for some years have in various ways manifested their desire to take lands in severalty, and secure titles to homes for themselves and children. In April, 1879, several of the chiefs and headmen visited Washington to confer with the Indian Office in respect to making a permanent settlement on their reservation, or, in lieu of such settlement, to remove to some other locality. The matter was to be left to the Indians upon their return to their reservation, which was determined by them the following November in favor of remaining upon their present reservation and taking lands in severalty."

When the Clerk had read so much of the report as is printed above, The SPEAKER said: The hour under the special rule has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent that the House and Senate reports be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection.

COURT-HOUSE AND JAIL IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, inclosing a letter from the United States marshal for Alaska, and asking an appropriation for court-house and jail in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INSANE PERSONS IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, referring to a letter from the marshal of Alaska, in which inquiry is made as to his authority to remove persons adjudged insane to asylums; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INFANTRY BRANCH OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting communications from officers of the Army in regard to the passage of Senate bill (S. 2442) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the consideration of the business of the Committee for the District of Columbia be dispensed with to-day.

The SPEAKER. The first business to-day is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, &c.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to interfere with that.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for the purpose of moving concurrence in the Senate amendments, the bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of land grant to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "that."
Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "be."
Page 1, line 7, strike out "sale and settlement" and insert "disposal."
Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "existing" and insert the words "the general."
Page 1, at the end of line 7, insert "as though said grant had never been made: Provided, That the price of the lands so forfeited and restored shall be the same as heretofore fixed for the even sections within said grant."
Strike out section 2.
At the end of the bill add the following:
"SEC. 2. That the act of March 3, 1875, entitled 'An act for the relief of settlers within railroad limits,' is hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYSON. I move that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPORTATION AND IMMIGRATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for the purpose of disposing of the Senate amendments the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Page 1, lines 7 and 8, strike out "to perform service or labor."
Page 1, lines 14 and 15, strike out "and doing business within the United States."
Page 1, line 16, after the word "service," insert "or having reference to the performance of labor or service by any person."
Page 1, line 16, strike out the words "of any kind."
Page 1, line 18, strike out the words "such persons" and insert "the person or persons whose labor or service is contracted for."
Page 1, line 22, after "by" insert "knowingly."
Page 2, line 8, after the word "recovered," insert "by the United States or."
Page 2, line 8, after "person," insert "who shall first bring his action therefor."
Page 2, lines 9 and 10, strike out "who may choose to bring such suit."
Page 2, strike out all after "United States" in line 11, down to and including "molety," in line 13, and insert "the proceeds to be paid."
Page 2, after the end of line 15, insert "and it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such suit at the expense of the United States."
Page 2, line 27, after the word "citizen," insert "or subject."
Page 3, line 11, after the word "actors," insert "artists."
Page 3, line 11, after "singers," insert "nor to persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, is it proposed to concur in these amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what motion the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] proposes to make.

Mr. KEIFER. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] whether he proposes that the House shall concur in these Senate amendments?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is my motion, Mr. Speaker—to concur in the amendments of the Senate. They are mostly verbal amendments.

Mr. KEIFER. I think they are pretty important.

Mr. MILLS. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] whether this bill proposes to prohibit the introduction of agricultural laborers?

Mr. HOPKINS. It prohibits the importation under contract of all classes with the exceptions named in the bill.

Mr. MILLS. I am opposed to the bill.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. HOPKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CORRECTION OF MILITARY RECORDS.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to report at this time, from the Committee on Military Affairs, a bill in lieu of various bills that have been referred to that committee. It is a bill (H. R. 8257) to correct the record of certain soldiers of the late war.

The SPEAKER. Does it name the soldiers?

Mr. STEELE. It does not name the soldiers, but it is in lieu of various bills that do name soldiers.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the bill will be referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill and report may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill and report are as follows:

A bill to correct the record of certain soldiers of the late war.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion in all cases where it is shown by satisfactory evidence that the soldier did not leave his command in the face of the enemy, and was not in arrest or under charges; that he rejoined the service within ninety days from date of absence, or was suffering from wounds or sickness which prevented his returning, served faithfully, received an honorable discharge, and did not rejoin to obtain bounty; Provided, That in cases where the soldier was prevented from joining his command on account of wounds or sickness, and receiving an honorable discharge that he might have received had he not been so prevented, he shall have his record amended so as to remove the charge of desertion.

[PUBLIC—No. 95.]

An act to relieve certain soldiers from the charge of desertion.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the charge of desertion now standing on the rolls and records in the Office of the Adjutant-General of the United States against any soldier who served in the late war in the volunteer service shall be removed in all cases where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, from such rolls and records, or from other satisfactory testimony, that any such soldier served faithfully until the expiration of his term of enlistment, or until the 1st day of May, A. D. 1865, having previously served six months or more, or was prevented from completing his term of service by reason of wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty, but who, by reason of absence from his command at the time the same was mustered out, failed to be mustered out and to receive an honorable discharge: Provided, That no soldier shall be relieved under this section who, not being sick or wounded, left his command without proper authority while the same was in the presence of the enemy.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to remove the charge of desertion from the records of any soldier in the late war upon proper application therefor and satisfactory proof in the following cases:

First. That such soldier, after such charge of desertion was made, and within a reasonable time thereafter, voluntarily returned to his command and served faithfully to the end of his term of service.

Second. That such soldier absented himself without proper authority from hospital, or from furlough given from hospital, while suffering from wounds, injuries, or disease received or contracted in the service in the line of duty, and, on recovery, voluntarily returned to his command and served faithfully until discharged, or died from such wounds, injury, or disease while so absent and before the date of the muster-out of his command.

Third. That such soldier absented himself without proper authority from furlough given by proper authority, and while so absent died from wounds, injury, or disease received or contracted in the service in the line of duty before the muster-out of his command.

SEC. 3. That in all cases where the charge of desertion shall be removed under the provisions of this act from the record of any soldier who has not received a certificate of discharge, it shall be the duty of the Adjutant-General of the United States to issue to such soldier, or, in case of his death, to his heirs or legal representatives, a certificate of discharge.

SEC. 4. That when the charge of desertion shall be removed under the provisions of this act from the record of any soldier, such soldier, or, in case of his death, the heirs or legal representatives of such soldier, shall receive the pay and bounty due to such soldier: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to give to any such soldier, or, in case of his death, to the heirs or legal representatives of any such soldier, any pay, bounty, or allowance for any period of time during which such soldier was absent from his command without proper authority, nor shall it be so construed as to give any pay, bounty, or allowance to any soldier, his heirs or legal representatives, who served in the Army a period of less than six months.

SEC. 5. That all applications for relief under this act shall be made to and filed with the Secretary of War within the period of five years from and after its passage, and all applications not so made and filed within said term of five years shall be forever barred and shall not be received or considered.

SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Approved July 5, 1884.

REPORTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the Senate joint resolution providing for the printing of the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order at this time. The special rule under which the House is now acting provides that so long as that rule remains in operation it shall not be in order for the Chair to entertain a request to take up for consideration any bill embraced by that rule except Senate amendments to House bills.

POST-OFFICE SITE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

On motion of Mr. STOCKSLAGER, by unanimous consent, the bill

(S. 2617) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 406 of the city of Washington, for the enlargement of the Post-Office Department building and to provide accommodations for the city post-office, was taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and this being Monday, the regular order is the call of the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions. Under this call resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of Departments, and joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures, are also in order for reference only.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES TO FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. CRAIG introduced a bill (H. R. 8258) to protect the rights of citizens of the United States in State courts, and providing for the removal of civil and criminal causes from State to Federal courts in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SELMA, ALA.

Mr. CRAIG introduced a bill (H. R. 8259) to constitute Selma, in the State of Alabama, a port of entry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TOBACCO DEALERS.

Mr. CRAIG introduced a bill (H. R. 8260) exempting from special tax dealers in manufactured and leaf tobacco whose annual sales do not exceed $1,000; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS OF NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ROSECRANS introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 343) relative to certain employés of the Navy Department; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OKLAHOMA LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON submitted a joint resolution of the Legislature of Illinois relative to the opening of the Oklahoma lands to homestead settlement; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

JOHN E. MCGAUGHEY.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. 8261) granting a pension to John E. McGaughey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN FYE.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. 8262) granting a pension to Benjamin Fye; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NANCY J. NIX.

Mr. ENGLISH introduced a bill (H. R. 8263) for the relief of Nancy J. Nix, late widow of William F. Perry, late a private in Company I, Fortieth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

OPENING INDIAN COUNTRY TO SETTLEMENT.

Mr. PEKKINS introduced a bill (H. R. 8264) to enable the President to negotiate for the purchase of portions of certain Indian reservations and to open the Oklahoma Indian country to homestead settlement; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the reference of this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that a bill relating to this subject was just referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PAYSON. I submit that a bill providing for the disposition of these lands after they shall be public lands ought in any event to go to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. This bill, however, seems to provide for purchase of the land from the Indian tribes.

Mr. PERKINS. It authorizes the President to enter into negotiations with the Indians for opening that country to settlement. I think it should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is the proper reference under the rules.

Mr. PAYSON. I am not strenuous on the point.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RESURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. PETERS presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, in favor of an appropriation for resurveys of certain public lands in Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 194) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey land in Providence, R. I., for highway purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 433) for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa.

BRIDGE OVER MISSISSIPPI AT ALTON, ILL.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. 8265) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Alton, Ill., and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL U. S. GRANT.

Mr. STEVENS presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, in favor of the passage by the House of the Senate bill "to authorize an additional appointment on the retired-list of the Army;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. T. BRINEGAR.

Mr. YORK (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8266) for the relief of H. T. Brinegar; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN WAR PENSION BILL.

Mr. EVERHART presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, urging the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAYMENT TO VIRGINIA OF PUBLIC LANDS FUNDS.

Mr. BARBOUR (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8267) to pay to the State of Virginia moneys received from the sale of public lands by the United States Government under the act of September 4, 1841; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WADDY T. JAMES AND OTHERS.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE introduced a bill (H. R. 8268) to pay Waddy T. James and others for horses killed in the service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SYLVIA ROBINSON.

Mr. LIBBEY introduced a bill (H. R. 8269) for the relief of Sylvia Robinson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF DESERT-LAND ACT.

Mr. SINGISER presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho, against the repeal of the desert-land act; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

TRANSFER OF TERRITORY FROM IDAHO TO WASHINGTON.

Mr. SINGISER also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho, in favor of attaching the northern counties of that Territory to Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories has now been concluded; but if there be no objection the Chair will recognize, for the introduction of bills and resolutions, gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

There was no objection.

PORTAGE LAKE IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

Mr. DUNHAM presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, relative to the Portage Lake Improvement Company; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

GENERAL U. S. GRANT.

Mr. MILLIKEN presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maine, in favor of restoring General U. S. Grant to his rank of General of the Army on the retired-list; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JOSEPH M. DENNIS.

Mr. MILLIKEN also introduced a bill (H. R. 8270) granting a pension to Joseph M. Dennis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DOBB, BROWN & CO.

Mr. BROADHEAD introduced a bill (H. R. 8271) for the relief of Dobb, Brown & Co., of Saint Louis, Mo.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES BETWEEN NEW JERSEY AND NEW YORK.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, presented a resolution of the Legislature of New York, in regard to bridges between New Jersey and New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE OVER CUMBERLAND AND CANEY FORK RIVERS.

Mr. SEYMOUR, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 8102, a bill (H. R. 8272) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a railroad bridge by the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company over the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GLASCOCK, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the balance of the day, on account of sickness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense for to-day with the rule of the House requiring that the next business for to-day be devoted to the consideration of reports coming from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be to dispense with the regular order, which is the consideration of the District of Columbia business.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the effect of my motion.

Mr. BARBOUR. I hope the House will not take from the District of Columbia Committee this day for the consideration of its business. Under the rules of the House two days in each month have been set apart for the consideration of that business. The District Committee has only used one in the month of December; one in the month of January; and the second Monday of February was taken from the committee for the consideration of its business. Under the circumstances we have really had but two days at this session for the consideration of the District of Columbia business. I hope, therefore, it will be the pleasure of the House to give us this day, as this is the last day which we can have under the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. It is with reluctance that I make this motion, and yet I think it is right to say that the public business in my judgment requires this motion should prevail.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask the gentleman whether he will not allow reports from committees to be brought in this morning? I have some to submit from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McMILLIN. Take to-morrow morning.

Mr. RANDALL. I must meet all the difficulties as they are presented.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion now is to dispense with the business of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that the next business?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour is the next business.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I move to dispense with the morning hour for to-day.

Mr. WILLIS. With the consent of the gentleman from Virginia, I will make a suggestion, which I think will solve the difficulty; and that is, to ask that to-night from 8 to 10 o'clock be set apart for the consideration of the District of Columbia business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds he is mistaken. Upon the examination of the order made by the House, the business of the District of Columbia comes next.

Mr. RANDALL. I so supposed.

The SPEAKER. What suggestion does the gentleman from Kentucky make?

Mr. WILLIS. That by unanimous consent from 8 to 10 o'clock this evening be set apart for the consideration of the District of Columbia business. I do that at the request of the gentleman from Virginia himself.

Mr. RANDALL. If no one else objects I will not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky, in order to enable the House to proceed with its business to-day, asks a recess be taken this evening—

Mr. RANDALL. From 6.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; from 6 until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. And that the evening session be devoted to the business presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PRICE. Say from 5 to 7.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend by saying that it be devoted to the Mexican pension bill.

The SPEAKER. It is not amendable. The gentleman asks unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote on my motion to dispense with the District of Columbia business for to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask that the request for unanimous consent be again stated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], at the request of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, asks that there be an evening session from 6 to 8 this evening to be devoted to the consideration of the business coming from that committee.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have no objection to that, but I want it understood that the Committee on the District of Columbia is to proceed to-day.

The SPEAKER. The business of the District of Columbia for to-day has been already dispensed with by unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask to make a brief statement.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to have the privilege for a reply if I deem it necessary.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly. I am instructed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to press the consideration of that bill this morning to its conclusion. I regret very much some arrangement could not be made.

Mr. HEPBURN. Regular order.

Mr. WILLIS. Wait a moment.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is what I am not going to do. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILLIS. But wait a moment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WILLIS. I asked unanimous consent.

Mr. HEPBURN. I objected to unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIS. You were too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman understood at least that he had unanimous consent to make a brief statement. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was disposed to interpose objection, but simply insisted upon an understanding that he might also make a brief reply. That arrangement was acquiesced in by the House and, as the Chair understands, no objection was made.

Mr. HEPBURN. I renew the objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Kentucky had proceeded under the consent of the House and is entitled to continue.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Kentucky ought to be permitted to proceed under the arrangement.

Mr. WILLIS. I think it my duty to ask the sense of the House upon the question—

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] stated that he would not object provided he was allowed the same privilege.

No other gentleman interposing an objection, the gentleman from Kentucky was proceeding to make a statement.

Mr. HEPBURN. I objected as soon as I knew what was the purport of the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman so states the Chair will, of course, recognize the objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I had no knowledge of any private arrangement between the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but as soon as I knew what the request was I interposed an objection.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman states that he rose to make objection in time, the Chair will of course recognize his right to do so.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman does not so state.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I ought to have an opportunity to reply to what the gentleman has already said. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I withdraw all that I have said. [Renewed laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suspend all public business until order is restored upon the floor.

The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that gentlemen are seated.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. WILLIS. I now as a parliamentary question ask—

Mr. RANDALL. Now, then, I must be allowed a parliamentary reply.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIS. If that motion be voted down will it not then be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole to consider any other bill?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. RANDALL. Will it be parliamentary to say that the House must now choose between the safe road as to the general appropriation bills or the dangerous path in that particular?

Mr. McMILLIN. It would not.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 93, noes 84.

Mr. WILLIS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 54 members voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HARDEMAN. Give us the yeas and nays.

Mr. BEACH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 57 members rising in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 127, not voting 63; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. WELLBORN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, we all know what verdict history will render in this case. History, in my judgment, will not stop to ask which was the more at fault, a Republican Administration on the one hand, or on the other a Democratic House of Representatives, which had in its hand and under its control the machinery of legislation and the purse-strings of the Treasury. I believe history will say that after the war, with a navy of all sorts left upon our hands, and in a transition time of naval architecture, we did the best we could to repair and make useful what we had; and that we did it, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has well said, at less cost than that incurred by other nations during the same time.

But, sir, history will not hold us guiltless if now, when that transition time has passed, when twenty years have gone by since the war ended, when the era of wooden ships has closed, and when the new age of iron and steel and turret and tower and mighty ordnance has come—history will not hold us guiltless if now we fail to put our country alongside with England, with Italy, with Brazil, with Chili, and other nations in the matter of our war ships and our harbor defenses. I exaggerate no danger. I apprehend no war. I deprecate its invocation. I rely, as the American people rely, and as this Congress should rely, upon the healthful blood and muscle of peace. But I know as every other man knows that preparation for war, the possession and appearance of power, and the ability to strike back are the best guarantees of peace.

I admit that modern invention runs so fast that the equipment of to-day is very likely to be behind the times to-morrow. But that is a truth which applies to all nations equally with ours; and I want to see our country at least as close on the heels of advance as any other.

Nor do I believe in a great expenditure of money; but I do believe we ought to expend enough to take a step forward and to make a new departure—no, I will not say a new departure; let me rather say that this Forty-eighth Congress should put a silver lining upon the cloud of its utter inefficiency hitherto and at least carry forward the work which the Forty-seventh Congress well began for the rehabilitation and increase of our Navy, and the credit for which should be recognized and proclaimed. Public sentiment, in my judgment, demands and will justify a liberal policy in this regard.

I can speak only for myself, but I think I speak substantially for this side of the House when I say we are ready to promote such a policy, even though the party of which we are loyal members is no longer to be in administration of the Government and will not reap the glory of restoring our Navy to its former prestige and glory. We might as partisans be glad to see the new administration hampered and belittled in this matter; but it goes without saying that the interest of the country is of far more moment than that of any party, and that there is no Representative on this floor who will consent that his country shall stoop among the nations of the earth too proud to swallow an insult, yet too powerless to resent it or to have made it impossible.

Those are preliminaries in which we all agree. Now, what is this section of the bill before us? What does it propose? I sum it up in one sentence: If you pass this bill, amending it if you please, correcting its details, but putting its main feature into law, the result is as sure as the rising of the sun, to wit, four new war ships of the best modern type and design, and the foundation laid for the further increase of our Navy in accordance with the demands of modern naval architecture. If there be any man here who does not want to see this increase of the Navy, let him vote against this section. If there be any man here who desires an increase of the Navy but does not want it if it shall take place under the administration of a party to which he does not belong, then let him vote against this section. But if any man does desire the increase of the Navy, and that is his single aim, let him vote for the principle embodied in this bill; and if the details do not in all respects commend themselves to his judgment, do what he can to modify them.

What are the provisions of this section? It is easy to ridicule or to criticize or to cavil at any proposed measure; it is easy to exaggerate faults of detail. But look at the main provisions. First, a board is established, a board of seven persons, the Secretary of the Navy at the head of it. With him are associated a representative of the Navy at the Department of Construction, a representative of the equally important branch of steam-engineering, a representative of the line of the Navy, and then three civilians skilled in naval architecture.

I would prefer, Mr. Chairman, that we should put upon that board the present head of the Bureau of Construction, Commodore Wilson; the present head of the Bureau of Steam-Engineering, Commodore Loring; the present head of the Bureau of Ordnance, Commodore Sicard, each of these officers thoroughly competent and familiar with the science of his department. I doubt also—I say it frankly—if you can find in this country three civilians skilled in naval architecture who would or could serve as members of the board, for such are very likely to be bidders for the contract for building the proposed new ships. But to the Secretary of the Navy and to the three representatives of the experience and skill of the departments I have referred to, it is perhaps well to add what is called "new blood" from civil life, as I am informed is the rule in the British admiralty, in France, and other countries.

If you put in three sensible business men and pay them a better per diem than is now provided in the bill, I believe you will make a good board. What does that board do? It is to meet and invite plans from all the world—certainly a democratic arrangement. Of course that provision can be ridiculed; if you please, you may speak of the "cranks" who will send in their dreams; but the board will probably have sense enough to throw into the waste-basket whatever is unworthy of consideration.

After receiving suggestions and plans the board is to offer a reward for the best designs for four types of new war ships. Anybody in the world may compete for that award. When those designs are presented the board is to determine which are the best for each of the four types of war vessels and award a reasonable price to the successful competitors. What happens then? I had the honor to suggest, and it is embodied in the bill, that this board, having completed its work, goes out of existence on making its report in December next. It will have finished its work and exist no longer to become a fungus upon the healthy growth of the body-politic. It will go out of existence, and the work of constructing these ships will begin at once by force of law.

Criticism has been made upon this part of the bill on the ground that the board ought to be required to report to Congress, and that then, and not till then, shall the ships be built, Congress determining the plans and details of construction. This is a fair question between us, whether it is better that the board, having made up its mind as to the best types of vessels, shall make a report to Congress, and Congress shall take up the matter anew, or whether, the best types having been selected by the board, the Secretary of War shall go on to construct the ships. There is no politics in that question; it is a pure business question, and I put it to every business man, what does common sense suggest? Under this bill we at once get plans and designs the best that can be had, and the ships will then at once be constructed. But if we take the other course and require the board to report to the next Congress, and Congress then to arrange details of construction, we shall simply go back again to the beginning, and find ourselves just where we are to-day. Then will come the many minds of the three hundred and twenty-five members of this House and the difficulties of bringing them to an agreement. One gentleman will have one plan and another another; one will listen to one inventor and another to another, and the probability is that a succeeding Congress will escape the whole difficulty by resorting to the creation of still a new board.

Reverting to the details of the bill, the Secretary of the Navy is required to construct these ships. One vessel of each class is to be built, which insures four vessels of the highest and best possible modern types. They are to be built of American material, they are to be built in the United States, and they are to be built by contract, which I believe is the right system. So far as that system has any political bearing, it destroys the opportunity for making our navy-yards a part of the political machinery of the country. It encourages ship-building among our own people; and it selects men to perform the labor, not through political influences but through the ordinary channels of business employment, for their skill and fitness for the work.

Let me again suggest, Mr. Chairman, that as to the civilian members of the board, if we are to get the best business abilities they should be paid a larger per diem than $10. And let me earnestly press one other question which the committee fairly throw open to the House, and that is, whether the appropriation for this work should be indefinite or limited. For myself I shall be ready to amend the bill so as to provide for a limited appropriation, because I believe it is better for Congress, as a matter of general principle, to retain the control of the public expenditures rather than to leave them unlimited and indefinite. That is opening the door altogether too wide. I can not consent to it.

These are the provisions of the bill, open to suggestion or amendment; but amend as much as you please, perfect the details as you will, the general fact remains, that if you pass it you insure at least the beginning of the construction of an adequate navy.

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER].

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Chairman, I have sought for an opportunity to take part in this discussion and to state my reasons for supporting the provision in this bill which proposes an increase of the Navy, principally because during the last session I differed with the committee as to the propriety of the action which it then proposed to the House. I am glad now to be able to support the bill as it has been presented to us by the Committee on Appropriations. But before entering upon the subject of the bill as it stands I wish to say a word upon a topic which was introduced into the debate last Thursday afternoon.

At that time the question before the committee being as to whether the wooden ship New York should be finished, I ventured upon an observation which was challenged by my distinguished colleague [Mr. HEWITT, of New York] that all the other countries were now building wooden vessels. In compliance with my promise to furnish the authority upon which I made this observation, I addressed the appropriate bureau of the Navy Department, and have received a reply in which is stated precisely what other governments are doing with reference to the construction of wooden vessels.

In England there are at present no vessels now building entirely of wood, but a number of what are called composite vessels are in course of construction in the navy-yards of that country. A composite vessel is a vessel the frame of which is either of steel or iron, but the planking, the bulwarks, and the decks of which are of wood. England has built of that class four in 1884, of about 1,420 tons each, and there are seven small gun-vessels of this description now in course of construction.

In France one large wooden cruiser was launched in the month of December, 1884, a vessel of 3,355 tons. Two small composite gun-vessels were built during the same year. There are also a number of small gunboats built of wood, and several composite vessels which were laid down in 1882 but not yet completed. Five small wooden gunboats of 155 tons are in course of construction, and two wooden dispatch transports of 1,580 tons each. So that it appears France is now building quite a fleet of either wooden vessels or vessels partly of wood and partly of metal.

Germany, Italy, Austria, and Russia have not built any wooden vessels recently. In Spain three wooden vessels of 3,090 tons each are now on the stocks. In Japan two new wooden vessels were built in 1882 and 1883. China, Turkey, Portugal, Chili, and the Argentine Republic have not built any wooden vessels recently. In Brazil two wooden vessels were built in 1883 and 1884, one of 1,960 tons and another of 726 tons. So it will appear that while I am required to make some qualification in the general observation which I made, yet wooden vessels have not been so absolutely rejected by foreign countries as to be considered an obsolete type.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will my colleague allow me to ask him whether he finds a single wooden vessel of 5,000 tons burden on the stocks anywhere?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I do not know that I do.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That was the proposition.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. That is a very large vessel.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That is the size of the New York, which is proposed in this bill to be finished.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. That is a very large ship.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to lay before the committee some facts which have come to my knowledge by reason of an inquiry which I was led to make, comparing the vessels now in course of construction in our navy-yards with a very remarkable vessel which has lately been built upon an order given by the Chilean Government, and which is now in the naval service of Chili. I refer to the Esmeralda. And it is a fact worthy of note by this committee that the principal features of the Boston and the Atlanta, the two new vessels most criticised, have been—I will not say copied, but have been reproduced to a remarkable extent in this very successful ship built in England for the Republic of Chili. The Esmeralda is of the precise length of the Boston—two hundred and seventy feet; she is of the precise width of the Boston—forty-two feet; and she is (this is the only difference in her dimensions) one foot deeper than the American ship. All the peculiarities of construction—the light hull, built of steel, divided into a great number of water-tight compartments, and the strengthened deck covering the engine of the vessel—all those features and others are in the Esmeralda as they are in the Boston, and without any essential points of difference whatever.

Now what difference exists between this vessel, the last product of the mechanical naval ingenuity of England, and the two vessels of which I have spoken? The Esmeralda was built upon a contract that she should have a speed of seventeen knots an hour; and she actually has made over the measured mile in smooth water a speed of eighteen and a quarter knots an hour. The report of the Esmeralda's voyage from England to Chili was received within a few weeks at the Navy Department, and I have been able to read it. The officer in command of that vessel reports that on several occasions during his voyage he obtained a speed of eighteen and one-half knots an hour. That speed in the Esmeralda is obtained upon a consumption of one hundred and ninety tons of coal in twenty-four hours—a consumption of coal so great that it is clear the capacity of the vessel, which is only for six hundred tons of coal, will not permit the speed to be maintained for any great length of time.

As to the speed of the Boston and the Atlanta, it is to be observed that they are as yet unfinished vessels, but the contract speed is fifteen knots an hour, two knots an hour less than the contract speed of the Esmeralda; and the officers of our naval service have a confident belief that when the ships shall be tried they will be found to have a rate of speed under favorable circumstances considerably greater than the contract requires. But I am ready to suppose that the Esmeralda has a rate of speed of three knots an hour greater than the Boston or Atlanta will have.

Now what other point of superiority has the English vessel? The English vessel has a heavier armament. The broadside fire of the Esmeralda has a weight of 1,140 pounds. The broadside fire of the Boston has a weight of 800 pounds.

The superiority of the Esmeralda, however, comes out of the circumstance that her two pivot-guns, both of which can be placed in broadside, are 10-inch guns, while the two pivot-guns of the Boston are 8-inch guns. The broadside guns proper of the Boston are heavier than those of the Esmeralda. The three broadside guns of the Boston each throw a shot of one hundred pounds' weight, while the three broadside guns of the Esmeralda each throw a shot of eighty pounds' weight. If the vessels were steaming end-on, as the phrase is, and the Boston were able to use her bow-fire, she would throw from her bow three hundred and fifty pounds from two guns, while the Esmeralda would throw four hundred and fifty pounds from one gun. It will depend very much on the circumstances in which the vessel is situated whether it is better to have this weight of metal from a single gun or to have it distributed between two guns.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will my colleague be good enough to tell the House how much greater the range of the 10-inch guns of the Esmeralda are than the 8-inch guns of the Boston?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. It is said that the pivot-guns of the Boston are of a pattern later than those furnished to the Esmeralda, and that the initial velocity of the 8-inch gun of the Boston is greater than the initial velocity of the 10-inch gun of the Esmeralda. But as I will have occasion to show, in a fighting sense, the question of my distinguished colleague has no relation to this subject whatever. The stern-fire of the two vessels is just the same as the bow-fire.

Now, I am supposing these two vessels at sea and coming together.

Mr. HISCOCK. May I ask my colleague the question, would they come together if one had a longer range?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I will come to all that. Now, this weight of metal would be a matter of some consequence as against ironclads or against a fort; but of what consequence is it or could it be against a vessel so lightly built that the lightest gun on either of the vessels would search out every part of the opposing ship? There is no part of the Boston above the water line which the lightest gun upon the Esmeralda will not break through as if it were a sheet of paper, nor is there any part of the Esmeralda which the lightest gun upon the Boston will not break through in the same way. The vessels are built upon the principle of letting the shots through and not keeping them out. And it is a curious circumstance that Sir William Armstrong, who waged one side of this long conflict between the gun and the target, when he furnishes a vessel to a foreign country makes no effort whatever to keep the shots out, but builds his vessel of steel only five-eighths of an inch thick.

I am supposing that the two ships, both having the same number of guns and both strong enough to search out every part of the opposing vessel, are coming together, and one ship is manned and officered by Americans from the North and the other manned and officered by Americans from the South, is there any member of the House of Representatives who will have any doubt what the issue of that battle would be? We have won naval victories against greater odds and a more formidable foe. These pivot-guns of the Esmeralda are of enormous dimensions; they are to be manipulated by machinery, loaded by machinery, and whenever they are fired the gun is dipped into a hood and there a hydraulic engine on the lower deck reloads the gun.

Now these two ships are in action. It is not a question which has the biggest gun, but it is a question of the brains and nerve and manhood of the men who work and look along the barrels of the guns. And that is what I meant when I said the other day that finally the defense of States is not to be obtained by defensive armor but must rest within the fiery hearts of those who man the ships and fight the guns.

I have put the question to officers of our Navy and have been received with smiles, I have put the question as to whether any American naval officer would decline a conflict with the Esmeralda if he had the Boston under his command. And I venture to say here that such a combat could not be declined by the captain of the Boston without subjecting him to a court-martial and the probable loss of his commission.

Let me venture here the prediction that when the Esmeralda meets the Boston at sea, if she ever does, she will have no need of her speed of eighteen knots an hour; she will catch the Boston at a much lower rate of speed than that. Speed! Do not let us place too much reliance upon the speed of a fighting ship; it is not a fighting quality at all.

It is a valuable thing to have, for it will enable you to run away when you want to run away, and undoubtedly it will enable you to overtake an adversary; but you win a considerable victory when you have made your adversary fly from you, and you can well take the chances of not running away from another ship if you have a good fighting ship under your feet.

Now my friends on the other side of the House are very much troubled about the long-range guns. Why, either of these guns, the pivot-guns, would throw a shot three or four miles, and if two ships of war are three or four miles apart from each other, how much danger would there be in that sort of a combat? On the sea—and my distinguished colleague from New York is not unacquainted with the sea, and knows what an unstable element it is—on the sea, the ordinary basis of calculation, the result of experiment and close observation, is, that but one cannon-ball out of twenty strikes; and I will submit it to my friend from Maine, who has been distinguished in the naval service of his country, whether there would be any particular reason to call the crew to quarters because of an encounter with an adversary who remained three or four miles distant?

On the other hand, I think it would be an entirely safe thing for the crew of the Boston, with the Esmeralda three or four miles away and out of range of her guns, to go about their ordinary duties in the working of their vessel.

So much, sir, it has given me much pleasure to have had an opportunity to say with reference to this astonishing vessel, which I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], if I understood him, a day or two ago, apprehended as likely in case of war to spread terror upon our coast from the capes of Florida to the Maine boundary.

Mr. KEIFER. I said on the Pacific coast.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Well, with reference to that part of the coast, when the time comes we must have something like the Boston there.

Mr. KEIFER. I was speaking of the present time.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Now as to the bill before us. There is a feature in the bill to which I do not so much object, but I desire to call the attention of the committee to it, which will prohibit the construction of any ironclad at present. I mean by the term ironclad a heavily armored vessel; because the bill provides that the ships authorized by it shall be built of American material. But no steel plates sufficiently thick to enter into the construction of an ironclad can at present be produced in this country.

Mr. TALBOTT. Let me interrupt the gentleman from New York a moment. I desire to say to him that he is entirely mistaken about that. It has been thoroughly investigated by a committee of this House, and we can manufacture steel in any quantity and quality necessary for the construction of war vessels of any size which may be demanded.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But not at present.

Mr. TALBOTT. Yes, sir; we can do it now.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I have no doubt if the plant is obtained that proper plates can be made in this country. That I do not dispute. But I state this as a fact within my personal knowledge that there is now needed about $1,200,000 worth of steel plates to finish the monitors, and that no contractor can be found in the United States willing to provide the plant which would be necessary for constructing that quantity of steel plates.

There is another description of plates most useful in the construction of the best ships, known as compound steel and iron plates, with steel surfaces and iron backings and which late European artillery experiments tend to prove are the best form in which metal can be placed for the purpose of resisting shot. So I say, as I have indicated before in the course of this debate, I am not particularly anxious to build ironclad ships. I believe the ship of the future will be a ship so divided into water-tight compartments as to make the sinking of her very difficult, and which will have high speed and great offensive power. She will be built upon the principle on which the Esmeralda and the Boston are built, which will allow the shots to pass through and not attempt to stop them at all. And so I will be patient with the bill as it stands, for I care little about the construction of iron-clad ships; but I wish the committee to understand that if the bill passes in its present form no ironclads can be built in this country in the present state of our machinery and the art.

The distinguished member of the committee from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] has criticised that provision in the bill which makes what in substance is an unlimited appropriation. We all recognize the force of the criticism which he has made; but there is one reason, which I venture to suggest to him, why perhaps we may be willing to make an exception in this case. You can not obtain the best terms from the contractors unless the Government has all the money in hand. I have had myself, as chairman of a commission in the State of New York, constructing a great public building, occasion to know how much more a public work costs when the contractor has to run his risk of future appropriations over what it would cost if the contractor knew that the money was all at the disposal of the Government. In the building of which I speak, in my judgment, and I say it advisedly and after an experience of five years, at least 30 per cent. has been expended more than would have been necessary if the State had provided the funds so as to carry on the work without interruption.

Therefore I think we should make an exception in this case. Let us find how well the Department can do without any restriction as to money. Let us find how cheaply we can build these vessels when the contractors know there is no necessity whatever of the Department going to Congress for any further appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I have trespassed upon the patience of the committee as long as I think it desirable, and I will conclude with a single observation. I congratulate both sides of this House on the fact that all parties are now united in the policy of the rehabilitation of the American Navy, which I hope will be the beginning of the re-establishment of our greatness upon the sea. And I am glad during my short service in this House to have had an opportunity to see both the great political parties united in this work of patriotic endeavor and of patriotic necessity.

THE CHAIRMAN. Eight minutes of the time of the gentleman from New York remains.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, there are still two hours for general debate after this hour closes, including a full hour in advocacy of the bill.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will be recognized if he desires.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I yield a few minutes to my colleague from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. My colleague is good enough to yield to me two or three minutes, which I think is all I require for one single purpose suggested by his remarks. He has stated that the Esmeralda has pivot-guns of 10-inch caliber, and that the Boston has 8-inch pivot-guns; and it follows as a matter of course that the range of the 10-inch guns on the Esmeralda will be greater than the range of the 8-inch guns of the Boston. That range may be taken approximately at about 25 per cent. greater on the Esmeralda than on the Boston. As the range of a 10-inch gun may be safely set down at about five miles, this will give a superiority of range to the Esmeralda of one mile at least over the Boston. In other words, the Esmeralda coming within the range of the Boston will have a space of a mile within which shot and shell from her 10-inch guns will hit the Boston and where the shot and shell from the Boston's 8-inch guns can not reach the Esmeralda.

Then it is also admitted the speed of the Esmeralda is three knots an hour greater than the speed of the Boston. Hence it follows that the Esmeralda can plant herself at a point where she can shell the Boston and by her greater speed keep herself in that position until the Boston has gone to the bottom.

Now, then, I do not know how brave the American heart is; I have never had occasion to find out; my friend knows more about it than I do. I do not know how cowardly the South American heart is; I have never tried it. But I take it human nature is pretty much the same in North and in South America. But brave as the one may be and deficient in bravery as the other may be, I say the ship with the smaller guns will go to the bottom by the superior range of her adversary's guns; and neither the bravery nor the cowardice of the sailors or of the officers can avert the catastrophe.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that all these propositions which look to getting any but the best ships, and the further proposition that ships are to be built to be penetrated, proceed entirely from ignorance of the true position of the case—I say it with all due deference to my colleague, ships do not always fire solid shot; they fire shell, and more frequently shell than shot; and when a shell is driven through the sides of the Boston, fired from the Esmeralda with its superior range, and the shell is exploded inside the Boston, she will go to the bottom like a shot. That is the difficulty with the propositions laid down by my eloquent but erring colleague.

Now I ask my colleague also one crucial question. He undertook to defend his statement that modern nations were still building wooden ships. The matter in issue was whether a wooden frigate of 5,000 tons should be finished or not; and I took the ground that no nation in the world building to-day a cruising ship for fighting purposes builds a wooden ship. Their wooden ships are small gunboats or small transports, and they have nothing to do with the question of armored ships or of unarmored cruisers.

As to unarmored cruisers there are two fundamental conditions: First, that they be faster than any other ships with which they come in contact, so they may overtake and destroy or else may run away and save themselves; and second, that their weight of metal which they carry shall be superior to the adversary. It is in that respect that the Esmeralda is to-day the best of her type, and that the Chicago and the Boston are failures in view of the existence of such ships as the Esmeralda and the Riachuelo.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I come down to this bill. I did not intend to take any part in this discussion, for I did not expect to be allowed any time. I am heartily in favor of this bill, because I want to get a navy. It is time that we should build a navy. I do not think it is necessary, however, to open the Treasury in the manner in which this bill proposes. I trust the committee will bring in a recommendation limiting the expenditure to some specified amount. I do not care whether it is ten millions or fifteen millions or twenty millions or thirty millions. I am ready to-day, as an American Representative, to do what was done at its last session by the Parliament of Great Britain. That Parliament voted six million pounds sterling, $30,000,000, for the improvement of the British navy, and I am ready here to-day to vote $30,000,000 for the restoration of the American Navy. It is a sum that we are bound to expend upon our Navy within the next five years, and I am willing to give the pledge to-day that the American Congress has the patriotism and the intelligence to appropriate whatever sum may be found necessary to accomplish this great result so dear to the national heart.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the Chair to rap me down at the expiration of fifteen minutes if I do not sit down before.

It is with considerable diffidence, after listening to both the distinguished gentlemen from New York [Mr. DORSEMER and Mr. HEWITT] and to my colleague upon the committee [Mr. LONG], as well as to various other gentlemen who are skilled in naval architecture [laughter], that I venture to address this committee for a few moments. I do not know much about naval architecture, and in what little I shall say about this bill shall come as near as I can to discussing it from a business standpoint. It is admitted that we are without a navy, and that we ought to have one. We can all stand upon that ground at last. It is true, it has been only within the last few days that we have all been able to get upon that platform.

I recollect that even within the last six weeks it was contended upon the other side of the House, notably by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL], that we did not know what to build, and that there was not much hurry about it any way; but he has been as suddenly converted on the subject of the Navy as Paul was when he was traveling to Damascus and was stricken down at midday by that great light.

Mr. RANNEY. But not by the same means. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Not by the same means, the gentleman from Massachusetts suggests. Now, while I want a navy, there is a proper and orderly way of proceeding to take measures to get it. In the first place, time out of mind we have expended from four to five million dollars a year in salaries to educate men and make them skilled in these matters, and I undertake to say, notwithstanding the abuse that has been poured out on the officers of the Navy, that to-day, outside of perhaps a few skilled ship-builders whose services you can not secure under the provisions of this bill, those officers have more knowledge touching the proper method of constructing a navy than any other people upon this continent.

The last Congress wisely provided to take a long step forward toward the construction of a navy. They constituted a board of five skilled naval officers and brought in as "fresh blood" two civilians. I do not know the politics of those five naval officers, nor do I care. I believe that those officers represent the best skill in the Navy. Under the provisions of that bill this board of seven members organized, advertised, not once but twice, for plans and suggestions from wise men and ignorant men, from level-headed men and from cranks, and they got them. Then they considered the plans, and by and by a recommendation was made to Congress, and we authorized the building of four vessels, one dispatch-ship and three cruisers, which are now approaching completion. The officers of the Navy Department had then in the Department or have procured since exact plans of all the war ships that have been built in modern times. Do gentlemen know what that means?

Since 1869 Great Britain has spent upon her navy $800,000,000; France has spent on hers $630,000,000; Russia has spent on hers $345,000,000. Not one of the war ships of a new type has been constructed anywhere within the last twenty years but what complete plans and drawings of the ship, the armor, the guns, and the machinery are to be found in our Navy Department. The advisory board made a report to Congress recommending the construction of certain other vessels—cruisers and armored vessels. We have received from them, boiled down, abstracted, the substance of the combined wisdom and experience of the world in this matter of the construction of war ships. Now then, if you want to build a navy, make your appropriation, not indefinite, but so much for an armored vessel, so much for a cruiser, so much for a torpedo-boat, so much for machinery and armor. You have already got all the information that the best skill and knowledge on this subject on this round earth has been able to produce, and you have it ready at five minutes' call, yet we find gentlemen coming in here and proposing by this bill to do what? To constitute a board to consist of three naval officers, three civilians, and the Secretary of the Navy. I asked one of the most noted ship-builders in this country, from the gentleman's [Mr. RANDALL'S] own city of Philadelphia, what kind of a board that would give us. He replied that there was not a naval architect or constructor upon this continent whose opinions and views were worth anything but what he would pay him double or treble the wages here provided. So that you will get for your board three civilians who do not know anything about this question, plus the Secretary of the Navy—upon whom I will not pass judgment until I learn who he is to be.

What next do they do? Advertise for plans. What plans? Do you propose to pay them for partial or complete drawings of what is already in the Navy Department? Or do you propose to take the plans of every enthusiast, every one-idea man in the country? And there are plenty of them. I guess that is about the size of it. And when you get the plans, what then? You pay in round numbers $60,000—that is to say, $15,000 for the first and second premium for each class. What next? From those plans, remember—not from what you find in the Navy Department; not from what we know from the experience of the whole world—but from these plans you select the four classes. What shall they be? Great armored ships like the Lepanto and the Dreadnaught? Is that what you are going to have?

I call on the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say, Is this scheme of yours to produce a great armored vessel? I get no answer. Is it to produce a cruiser, wood or steel? I get no answer. What will it produce? It will produce ships, kind not known, at a cost to the Treasury of—the Lord only knows what! Now, I want a navy. I am just as ardent in that direction as my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG]. I want a navy; but I do not see any means of getting it through this process.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] amused me during his remarks. Eloquent and able as he is, while he proposes to support this measure he turns round and criticises it, and apologizes for it. Well, I can not accept his apology, nor that of the eminent gentleman from New York. He is not pleased with it either. Both of them think it may be amended. Yes, it is possible, I grant you, by amendment to mature proper legislation here which will give us a navy, and will commence at once. But who supposes there can be any amendment in Committee of the Whole, any fair discussion of this bill at this time of the session? When it is recollected that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in charge of this bill, that it is a child of his mind, that it sprang full-armed from his brain as Minerva sprang from the brain of Jupiter, it can at once be understood that it is not to be amended but is to go through substantially as reported from the committee or it is to die. And my impression is that until the gentleman himself is enabled to follow the recommendations of those skilled in naval architecture, is enabled to give definite and fixed appropriations, is enabled to say what classes of ships shall be built, and how much they shall cost, and who shall superintend their construction—until that time it is better that all measures of this kind should die in their birth.

In conclusion I want gentlemen to look at this measure. It in part organizes a new Navy Department. It sets aside the present advisory board and throws away its work. It dispenses with experience and skill and bids for ignorance and inefficiency. It unlocks the doors of the Treasury and places a sum of money without limit in the hands of the Executive, to spend at his discretion, he not even being required to report the details to Congress of expenditure.

Now, we are soon to have a change of administration. No man on either side of the House desires more entirely and sincerely than myself that the incoming administration should be successful, for the best interests of the country. While I am not a member of the political party which elected Mr. Cleveland, yet when inaugurated he becomes my President. If I had anything against him I could not more persistently and effectively urge it than to place in his hands by law the Treasury of the United States, subject only to the limitations contained in this bill, for the construction of a navy upon his discretion, as he may be advised by a board—the board yet to be created, the plans yet to be evolved, the President yet to be inaugurated.

If this bill should be enacted into law it will be well for us politically on our side, because in my opinion it can not be successfully executed. If enacted into law it must breed disorders and corruption in administration. Not that I say the new President is to be corrupt, or that gentlemen here intend corruption should exist. But this loose method of obtaining plans and determining the classes of vessels, this loose method of making unlimited indefinite appropriations for construction, if followed, would wreck any administration and debauch any service.

I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON. I will yield for ten minutes to my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I am ready to respond to the demand of the people for the rebuilding of the American Navy. I am as anxious as any one to see our flag float above an American navy as formidable on the sea as when it floats over our Army upon the land. But I can not understand why the Democratic party in this House should become so quickly panic-stricken, and leap from the conservative policy, which we have followed for so many years, into the opposite extreme.

Therefore I shall, when the proper point is reached in the bill, offer an amendment to limit the amount appropriated for the rebuilding of the Navy to $8,000,000, which will be as large a sum as can properly be expended during the next fiscal year for this purpose.

Mr. Chairman, this proposition, submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] on behalf of the majority of the Committee on Appropriations, takes the control of the construction of the Navy out of the hands of the next President and the Secretary of the Navy, where it was lodged by the fathers, and places it under the control of a board, three of which will be unknown to the Navy. All of them are unknown to this Congress. That board will have power to control the construction of the Navy, to prescribe the models and plans to be adopted for building the new war ships. If this proposition is ingrafted on this bill it will be regarded as a vote of want of confidence in the future President to whom the country has intrusted the destiny of the country for the next four years. For that and other reasons I shall oppose the proposition.

The other day when there was a proposition pending before this House to place under the control of the Postmaster-General $600,000, to be used at his discretion in compensating American steamers for carrying our mails into foreign countries, it was assailed on the ground that it was a subsidy for the purpose of enabling John Roach or somebody else to rebuild the merchant marine. It was by such arguments I was influenced in the Committee on Appropriations and in this House to vote against that proposition. It was on such arguments, sir, that the proposition was voted down in this House and such a power was denied to the future Postmaster-General.

Now, sir, what have we before us? A proposition which puts it into the power of a board, as I have said, the personnel of which is entirely unknown to us, at discretion to open the vaults of the Treasury and pay out to John Roach its one hundred and fifty millions of surplus to rebuild a navy.

Sir, if it is unwise and evil to subsidize John Roach or anybody else to rebuild our merchant marine, is it not also unwise and evil to subsidize him or anybody else to rebuild the Navy?

I have no doubt, nor can any one else doubt, that if this proposition prevails John Roach will obtain the bulk of the appropriations covered by this bill. Can any one who knows the condition of ship-building in this country doubt that fact?

When bids are invited for building the ships proposed in this bill there will be but three great ship-building firms in the country able to compete for the contract, and John Roach, having superior facilities in his ship-yards, will be enabled to obtain the contracts. Sir, I would inquire why it is proposed to take this work from our navy-yards, which have cost us from fifty to sixty millions of dollars and which, without a very large expenditure, can be put in a sufficient state of efficiency to build these ships, and give this largest of all subsidies ever granted to privateship-yards? It is in reality a scheme to demolish our navy-yards and rebuild private ship-yards at public expense.

I do not want to take any unnecessary time upon this question. I know that time is precious at this stage of the session. I would have said nothing had I not been a member of this committee and differed with my colleagues on this question. The arguments in which some of those now supporting this measure so eloquently and potently urged against the mail subsidy applies with a hundred-fold more force against granting this bonanza subsidy to John Roach or other ship-builders. Those who raised the specter of the old Pacific Mail scandal the other day to defeat the increased foreign-mail pay should remember, what I have been taught to believe, that a dark specter also hangs over the recent past history of the Navy. If it be unsafe for such a reason to trust the Postmaster-General with discretion over $600,000 for foreign-mail pay, it is far more dangerous to trust an indefinite and unlimited appropriation to such a board as is provided in this bill.

But, sir, I do not wish to subject the incoming administration to the danger of such scandals growing up under its naval administration as those which have been occurred in recent years.

This proposition, sir, as I have said, deprives the President and Secretary of the Navy of their legitimate powers, and transfers them to a board of persons now unknown to us. It reduces, so far as the construction of the Navy is concerned, the President and Secretary of the Navy to the office of simply becoming the paymasters and determining whether they will approve or not the plans and recommendations submitted by the board.

In other words, sir, the whole power of rebuilding our Navy is to be lodged in the hands of a board unknown to us and unknown to our present system. I for one am not willing to vote such a want of confidence in the next administration or to tie the hands of the Executive and place him in this respect under the control of a board yet to be appointed. I will say no more until the proposition is under consideration by sections.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, if I understood aright the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], he said that all those gentlemen opposed to the construction of a navy, or opposed to the construction of a navy by the Democratic party, would oppose this provision of this bill. If he meant that none others than those belonging to those two classes would oppose it I say to him he is entirely mistaken. I believe, sir, I have the right to say I am in favor of the building of a navy. I had the honor to preside as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when it initiated the policy of building a new navy and when it initiated those reforms in the Navy Department which have saved to the Government, or will save to the Government, enough to give us a good, first-class navy. Friendly as I am to the building up of a navy, I am opposed to these provisions which we are now discussing, and I shall oppose them with all of the ability of which I am possessed.

Why, I can not forget, Mr. Chairman, that it was but a little more than twenty-five years ago that we had the live-oak contracts that scandalized the United States, when a contract was made previous to election that certain contracts should be given to furnish the money to carry an election, and that contract was carried out by an administration. I can not forget the frauds in the management of the navy-yards; and when I see my distinguished friends from New York here advocating the completion of this old frigate in the navy-yard I felt it would be my duty to call attention to the correspondence that occurred twenty-five or twenty-seven years ago on the part of members of Congress from the city of New York with the powers that controlled the navy-yard at that time; and I will commend it to them.

I read from the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, made in the first session of the Thirty-sixth Congress:

NEW YORK, June 14, 1857.

MR. COHANE: Mr. Cullen tells me that you are to take men on on Tuesday. Now I ask you to take him on and the others I have asked you to take on. I will have my proportion of men under you. If you do not give them I will lodge charges against you. You have turned away all the men but one from my district already. Of this I have complained to the Secretary, and now, unless you rectify this injustice I will make application that you be turned out. The hearer will bring me an answer.

Yours, &c.,

That was written by a then Democratic Representative in Congress from the State of New York.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Who was it?

Mr. HISCOCK. And he is a Democrat now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is his name?

Mr. HISCOCK. I read now from the report:

In another case Lewis W. Berry, the master painter, discharged a man for habitual drunkenness, who had been appointed upon the recommendation of Hon. ———— Mr. ———— requested that the man be taken on again. Berry thus describes what took place at that interview:

"I told Mr. ———— that I could not employ any such man as he was; that he had disgraced himself and was a disgrace to my department. Mr. ———— said he could not help that, but that the man must go to work again. I told him I could not employ him again. Said he, 'You may set it down as a fact that I will have you removed if I can if you do not put that man on again.'"

Within two or three months Berry was removed. When asked if he had been removed for this cause he said:

"I can not say of my own knowledge; I only know what was said. I suppose he was as good as his word, as he said he would get me turned out. When I came on to Washington afterward I thanked him for being as good as his word."

Here is another letter:

WASHINGTON CITY, March 23, 1858.

CAPTAIN TURNER: You will much oblige me by retaining Mr. Fitzgerald as foreman. This is the understanding between Mr. Searing and myself, and I may add, the Secretary of the Navy. You will also oblige me by appointing Mr. Tenney, in the twelfth ward, when in your power to do so. As a general thing Hugh McLaughlin, master laborer, knows who my friends are and he will confer with you at all times.

Yours, respectfully,

He represented, I think, Brooklyn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Can you not name him?

Mr. COBB. Why does the gentleman not name him?

Mr. HISCOCK. You can look at the report and get their names. I do not want to publish their names to the world.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 7, 1858.

DEAR SIR: I understand that, as a part of the arrangements before your appointment, you were to retain Mr. Fitzgerald as your foreman. You promised to do so; and that is Mr. Searing's understanding. I am now informed that you intend to dismiss him and appoint some one in his place from New York. This is not right, and you ought not to think of it. If you do, I trust that the original understanding will be carried out. I have just conversed with Mr. Searing, and this is his view of the matter, and it was the Secretary's view when you were appointed. In your turn you will, of course, do the best to equalize matters among the various members.

Yours, respectfully,

I have just shown this letter to Mr. Searing.
WILLIAM TURNER, Esq., Master Painter.

WASHINGTON CITY, April 13, 1858.

SIR: Your favor has been received. I will be much obliged for a list of the men under you, when I will write to indicate those I am especially interested in. I want only a fair proportion of the men.

In reference to Mr. Fitzgerald, it was expressly understood between Mr. Searing and myself that Fitzgerald should remain, and promised this yourself. I do not know what Mr. ———— has to do with this matter, but I shall be pleased to see him gratified so far as it is proper, but I can not, and will not, submit to Mr. Fitzgerald's dismissal; and now I give you notice that if you do remove him I will do what I can to correct it, and if you suffer you must not blame me. I desire to sustain you and to make your position pleasant. This I desire on your account as well as in respect to Mr. Searing; but, sir, I will not stand by and see my friends struck down by you or any other master.

Yours, respectfully,

WILLIAM TURNER, Esq.

NEW YORK, July 27, 1858.

MY DEAR SIR: I have applied to Mr. Fraganza, master joiner of the navy-yard, to give employment to a few men, good workmen and worthy persons, in my district. Although he has one hundred and thirty men or thereabouts in his shop he has not done so.

I have only sent one letter of recommendation to him, but no attention has been paid to it beyond the answer that when he put an additional number of men to work he would then see what he could do.

I appeal to you to vindicate my district from this unjust and partial discrimination.

Mr. FRAGANZA admits he has not one man in his shop from my district. If I have not misunderstood your views, it is your wish that the master should select from the different districts adjacent to the yard in equal proportions, upon the recommendation of members, the workmen employed in the shops, &c.

Truly, yours,

Hon. ISAAC TOUCEY,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

Signed by another distinguished Democrat; and this is indorsed by the Secretary of the Navy:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 2, 1858.

SIR: The Department has addressed the commandant of the navy-yard at New York on the subject of your letter of the 27th ultimo.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ISAAC TOUCEY.

Hon. ———
New York.

And again the Secretary of the Navy says:

The Department desires that a fair and liberal course be pursued toward Mr. ———'s district, and wishes you to inquire into and report upon this matter.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

ISAAC TOUCEY.

Commodore L. KEARNEY,
Commandant Navy-Yard, New York.

The report says:

A master workman testified that the present workmen were pressed upon him with the most pertinacity. Romeo Fraganza, one of the master workmen, writes the Department, under date of August 3, 1858: "In eight Congressional districts who claim the patronage of the yard, in nine cases out of ten the men who are most strenuously recommended are very indifferent hands, many of whom can not obtain employment from private employers." Men from the laborers' gang, who knew nothing about painting, were ranked as first-class painters (Fitzgerald), others as blacksmiths, &c.; and so in the different departments. Laborers were employed to act as clerks and to work as carpenters.

I have not time to read all this correspondence. This book is filled with it. And when we saw this bill come in here to complete this old wooden ship—this 5,000-ton frigate—no ship of the kind to-day being constructed anywhere in the world, even though I am subject to the criticism of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] for my vote, I can not support this policy of building a new navy.

I have no time to discuss the proposition as to the building of the four ships. I desire to call the attention of this committee, however, to one fact: This board is to report to Congress next December. A Democratic House will then be here with forty majority. Why, I ask you, not allow this report to be made to the House then? The work will not be delayed—not an hour. Bring in the plans and models for your ships. Bring in provisions of law like those contained in the appropriation bills at the two sessions of the Forty-seventh Congress. Subject them to the criticisms of the House, subject them to the criticisms of the world, subject them to the criticisms of ship-builders everywhere, and I say I believe there will not be a man on this side of the House but will unite in the policy of building a new navy, amending those plans if need be—but there will be no vote on this side of the House, in my opinion, in the direction of the obstruction of this great work.

But here you propose to strike down the limit. For the first time almost, in the history of Congress for thirty years, you come in here with an indefinite appropriation. How much these ships are to cost no one knows. On what model they are to be built no one knows. Who the men are to be who are to make the models no one knows. But we are to open the door of the Treasury to the incoming administration.

The gentleman from Illinois has said that he does not desire to vote a vote of censure upon the next administration for this bill. I say to the gentleman from Illinois I do not care to subject the next administration or any administration to the temptation that it will be subjected to if this bill shall pass.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seventeen minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. I yield seven minutes of the time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED, of Maine. I confess my surprise that after all this incubation on the part of the Democratic party, extending over a period of twenty-five years, there should be produced such an egg and such a bird as is contained in the second section of this bill. For years they have stood out against appropriations for the Navy, and at last they present themselves with an abundance, which at once shocks and horrifies my friend, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. And well it may, for both in manner and in matter the proposition is of a most astonishing character.

It proposes as to its manner to indict and convict the next administration of incompetency before it is formed. It proposes to put the Government into commission as far as a navy is concerned. And in defense of the details of its matter my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts has succeeded in evoking not praise from himself, but blame. He says that of the three civilian members it will be impossible to obtain one at the price, and of the naval members that they ought to be the heads of bureaus, which is not in the bill. Consequently there is left with the smile of his approval only the Secretary of the Navy that is to be. Then this board is to call for plans, and then they are to decide upon four different kinds of ships; and then, to use the eloquent language of my friend from Massachusetts, they are to cease to be a "fungus upon the body-politic."

Why, Mr. Chairman, look at the genius of the Democratic party! Here it finds itself, thanks to its own neglect in times past, with the business on its hands of building a navy, and the very first thing it does is to declare that the regularly constituted authorities of this country that are to be, and that are to be appointed under its auspices, are unfit to do the work! For my part, I desire to repudiate this business of non-responsibility. It is the curse of this country. It comes to us under the pleasant guise of non-partisanship, and we have one striking example in this country of the result of that soft method of doing business. If there is any State to-day that is cursed with perpetual charges of corruption it is the great State where almost all the Government is carried on by means of non-partisan boards. The result is that such boards are exempt from all criticism. The Republican newspapers do not attack them because there are Republicans on the boards; the Democratic newspapers refrain from attack because they would hit their friends; and under such a system corruption has run riot. I say further, establish this board, give it this non-responsible character, and add to that an unlimited appropriation—the doors of the Treasury swung open for the hands of this board to reach in—and what will be the result? Why, just look at one interesting little item in the bill. The board are to give prizes—a first prize $10,000—what for? For a vessel we are going to build. A second prize $5,000—what for? For a vessel we are not going to build! [Laughter].

Well, sir, that is consistent with the history and the practice of the Democratic party; it is always giving a chromo for incompetency. [Renewed laughter.] Why, look at it, Mr. Chairman. What is the object and purpose of this bill? Is it business? No; it is politics. It is for the purpose of having an unlimited sum to spend; and that purpose is shown outside of this section of the bill. Here is a wooden frigate that has been long resting in the Brooklyn navy-yard; the winds of nineteen summers and winters have blown through her timbers unhindered, and all this time our economical Democratic friends have never thought of taking that frame and erecting it into a vessel; but the moment their own frigid frames have been revived by the advance gleams of the coming sun they begin to look around to find methods of spending money which they have rejected during all these long years.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and Mr. BAGLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 1886) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, during my comparatively short term of service in the American Congress I have urged, in season and out of season, the rebuilding of the American Navy. I am proud of the fact that I was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs which reported that section of the law which authorized the construction of the Chicago, the Boston, the Atlanta, and the Dolphin. I am proud to have been a member of a Congress that had the nerve to take hold of this question of rebuilding the American Navy according to modern ideas and of modern materials, and crystallizing it into law.

I opposed the appropriation of $400,000 for the completion of the old New York, which has stood in the Brooklyn navy-yard for nineteen years past. I did so because of the fact that the building and repairing of wooden vessels in years gone by have given anything but satisfactory results. Wooden vessels—I have but to name them—in many instances have cost for repairs twice or thrice the amount of their original cost. Take, for instance, the Tennessee, the Powhatan, and the Lancaster—and I call especial attention to the last named. Its original cost was $670,087. It has been repaired and rebuilt. It was built, it is true, in 1850, but it has recently been rebuilt at a cost of $1,657,110. Take the Kearsarge, if you please, which cost in 1861 $286,918, and which has cost for repairs $1,123,415.75. And, sir, we shall have that experience repeated over and over again so long as we continue to build wooden vessels.

Look now at the case of an iron vessel—the Michigan—built in 1844, the first iron vessel ever built in the world. She is to-day as good as she was the day she was built, and has cost less for repairs than any other vessel which has been afloat five years. These are the reasons, sir, that induced the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Forty-seventh Congress to embark in the enterprise of building steel cruisers instead of wooden vessels. But now we find that the Democratic party make a grand outcry about our Navy. Their hearts are swelling with pride and burning with love for the American Navy. They come prancing upon the scene bearing with them the glorious American Navy in the form of the raft so eloquently described by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], composed of two logs fastened together [laughter], which is to bear aloft the flag of our country and bid defiance to the world; or, instead of the raft, we are to have this old frame of a wooden ship, the New York, which has been abandoned for nineteen years, fixed up to bear in triumph the flag of the Republic and to defend our national honor.

And these are the reformers who are to take charge of this Government. How do they propose to do it? They propose to introduce into the United States Navy for the building of ships a most heterogeneous mass—without beginning and without end—a board to be composed of men the Lord knows who, and the ships to be built of material the Lord knows what! And we are not even advised as to what the vessels are to cost; whether they are to be wood or iron or steel—whether they are to be frigates, cruisers, gunboats, or rams. This bill does not provide for the building of anything but the hulls of the vessels. It appropriates not one cent for guns, not one cent for armor, not one cent for boilers, not one cent for machinery, not one cent for the rigging. In respect to all these matters there is no plan and no price—nothing but a provision for a place for a lot of Democratic politicians, alleged naval architects, who are to be paid the enormous and extraordinary price of $3,130 per annum for furnishing plans for a navy of the United States!

Why, sir, there was a naval advisory board with that illustrious naval officer John Rogers at its head. It was composed of some of the most brilliant naval officers and naval constructors of this country. They sat for weeks and months; and with all the progress of the years that had elapsed since the close of the war before them, and with all the enterprise, intelligence, and scientific knowledge of the present hour before them, they recommended the building of certain kinds of ships, certain types of vessels, and certain guns to arm them with.

If this committee wanted to go forward and build an American navy why did they not tell us what kind of ships they were going to build, whether they were to be iron, steel, or wood, whether we were to have old muzzle-loading guns or breech-loading guns, whether the vessels were to be ship-rigged, bark-rigged, brig-rigged, or schooner-rigged, whether they were to be armored or unarmored?

America has always taken the lead in everything requiring ingenuity, enterprise, and skill. It was America that produced the Monitor which revolutionized the naval architecture of the world. The world went wild with the idea that ships of war might be so constructed as to prevent the killing of men. Experience, however, demonstrated the fact—to use a popular phrase—that omelets can not be made without breaking eggs; that battles can not be fought without killing men; and as the manufacturers of guns brought forward guns which would pierce any ship that could be built, our people swung back to the other extreme and said, "We will build vessels of the greatest possible flotation, constructed with air-tight and water-tight compartments; vessels which although they may be pierced as an armored ship may be, will in view of their greater flotation be less liable to sink than armored ships, more effective, and more easily handled. Other countries have followed in our wake; and as a consequence we see the Esmeralda. To-day we have been treated to the soul-harrowing spectacle of a battle between the Esmeralda, now lying in the harbor of Valparaiso, and the unfinished Boston up here at Chester, Pa. And I must say that my heart stood still, my blood was frozen in my veins, as I contemplated the horror of that engagement with the ships four miles apart.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I now commence the last hour of the debate.

Mr. KEIFER. Before the gentleman proceeds I rise to make an inquiry with reference to the time. According to my information and according to my recollection, there seems to be some mistake as to the time that I occupied. If there is any time left to me, I suppose it would be fair to occupy it now.

Mr. RANDALL. According to my recollection of the time taken by the gentleman, I do not think there is any time left for the other side under the agreement of two hours to each side.

Mr. KEIFER. That is the agreement; we are not differing as to that. But gentlemen around me state that I occupied only forty-five minutes, and that corresponds with the memorandum made at the Speaker's table by the gentleman who was acting as Clerk at the time I was cut off.

Mr. RANDALL. I never like to place my word against that of another gentleman, but it seems to be necessary on this occasion. I watched the clock, and I think the gentleman spoke from a half minute to a minute and a half over the hour. But I am liable to be mistaken. Yet, I am corroborated in that statement by others here who watched the time as I did. The gentleman commenced, if I remember correctly, at eleven minutes of the hour and closed at eleven minutes or possibly ten minutes of the hour succeeding.

Mr. KEIFER. Let me say the gentleman's recollection is no doubt very good; but the clerk's memorandum shows I commenced at eleven minutes after the hour, instead of before; and the recollection of gentlemen about me corresponds with that. I do not put my own recollection against anybody's on the subject.

Mr. ELLIS. I expected to answer the gentleman from Ohio, therefore I marked the clock. He commenced his speech at twelve minutes of 4 o'clock.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. Yes; I will vouch for that.

Mr. RANDALL. And the usual clerk does not state the time differently from what I give it. On the contrary, the clerk usually at the desk would, I think, if he had an opportunity, confirm my statement.

Mr. KEIFER. He is the very one I quote. It was the unusual clerk, I believe, who got it wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk who ordinarily keeps the time was called out upon business before the gentleman from Ohio was cut off; and on the information of the other clerk, the Chair announced that the time of the gentleman from Ohio had expired.

Mr. KEIFER. No doubt.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the gentleman who occupies the chair remember I sent a messenger to him to know what time the gentleman from Ohio had begun?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the present occupant was then in the chair?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state this: he has no recollection himself in reference to the matter, but as the gentleman from Ohio was cut off at a particular time and no complaint was then made that his time had not expired, the Chair would not be willing, unless agreed to now, to open up that question. He could not do so.

Mr. RANDALL. How could the gentleman be cut off unless it was by the expiration of his hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must assume that it was done at the expiration of the hour.

Mr. KEIFER. But the chairman would be perfectly willing to rectify any mistake made through inadvertence.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. No one claims there was any purpose to cut me off before the expiration of my time. If gentlemen insist on their objections I will withdraw my request. It is obvious, for many reasons, we should have fifteen minutes left.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania object?

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the misunderstanding in reference to the time, unanimous consent is requested.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, I make the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in view of the misunderstanding, submits a request that the gentleman have unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the House for the time. I would rather have heard from the gentlemen on the other side, who are the responsible constructors of the scheme, if I may be allowed to call it by that name, for increasing the United States Navy before I said anything more. So far I have heard something from the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], who has chosen to indorse the plan in its general scope while repudiating all its details. He joins in what he has to say with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSEIMER] who spoke this morning in what that gentleman said on Thursday last, and also what he reiterates this morning, that we are to have a navy strong always because the American heart is always brave and strong. This is a very good doctrine and I would like to join in it, but our American seamen, our gallant officers of the Navy, well-selected men, will never be willing to go to sea in war with wooden vessels, relying alone on the bravery of their spirits. It has turned out that there have been brave spirits on the other side, and we have found it necessary to have good material of war, cannon, rifles, shot, shell, in short everything that went to make up good material of war, to put under the control and in the hands of our men of brave spirits. Will you take the brave men of America and put them in obsolete vessels upon the sea and say to them we rely for the glory of America upon your dauntless souls and spirits? That is well enough, but some of us at least know we must not only have spirits strong, souls strong and brave, but we must have men who are willing to go and shed their blood in opposing brave men of other countries with which we may go to war.

But to the criticism of the bill. It is proposed to build four ships, wooden or what not, and no more. It proposes to suspend the finishing of five of the monitors that are now in process of construction—to wait two and a half years before we are to have an experimental ship under the present plan. Yet it is to be proclaimed to this country everywhere that the Democratic party is coming into power and that the first thing it proposes to do is to build a navy.

But the fact is the first thing proposed is to stop building a navy and resort to a plan to build something or other called vessels and put them upon the stocks, and which we have no assurance will ever have a gun aboard of them.

The plans, as I have already stated, and specifications which are to be reported on and advice that is to be furnished in response to circulars of inquiry, are all with reference to the naked vessel and do not comprehend any report in reference to the guns or projectiles which are to be used. The essential features of all that go to make up a navy in its strength and power are entirely left out, and I think that is about the best feature in the proposition—that is, that the principal, essential matters which go to make up a navy are to be omitted from their consideration. They are not to look into the most important things; they are not to report in reference to armor, armament, and equipment, and some other things. It is possible they can make a report to do no harm, for there will be plenty of time to review this report of these civilians, for they have wisely put into the bill a provision that the board's report shall be submitted to the Forty-ninth Congress. And I want to say that in this great rush for getting power the important thing always of concern to the American people is how much money is to be expended. No provision is made for a report on this subject.

Neither the President of the United States nor the Secretary of the Navy are required to report to Congress how much money is expended or proposed to be spent in this matter of trying to build some vessels of war. They are not required to report, although for the first time in peace, and so far as I know even in war, in this country the door of the Treasury is set wide ajar for the President to send by order a pay officer to get money without limit. The President of the United States, I repeat, is called upon to make no report to the Congress of the United States as to how much money he spends or proposes to spend.

Now, it may be said, and will be said, that these imperfections in this proposition to increase the Navy may be cured by amendment, but we are brought here face to face with this proposition and must take it in all its ill proportions; and we say to you that we are against it, absolutely against it, and will be against it when it is amended if it looks to stopping the construction of vessels now already in process of construction. We will be against it because it does not propose to give us a navy. These four vessels that may possibly be built under this bill of some class or other are not to be even types of vessels which we can reproduce in future.

We now have in process of construction more well-designed ships than it is proposed to build by this bill. We should at least finish them.

Mr. RANDALL. It was not my intention to discuss this subject at all, for reasons which are known to all and which are manifest. But there are some things which have been said in the course of this debate which I consider myself as bound, even at a great personal inconvenience, to respond to.

The effort seems to have been made to make an impression that the Democratic party is hostile to the construction of a navy. Its history is just the reverse. Further, the effort has been made to impress this House with the conviction that the Committee on Appropriations at its last session was hostile to the building up of the American Navy.

How unjust that is appears when you come to examine into what that committee did at its last session in reference to a navy. It found four vessels in course of construction authorized by the previous Congress. It gave every dollar of appropriation that was required to complete those vessels, and the Democratic House has added to it a sufficient sum to complete the armament required for them; and to-day again that committee has been called upon to consider and continue in connection with these very cruisers, and as far as I know the members of the Committee on Appropriations will decide to give $165,000 deficiency, so that these vessels may with all expedition be completed.

It is true, sir, the committee took the position that they were unwilling to recommend to the House the expending of four and a quarter millions of dollars more upon the monitors, when it was conceded that the objects for which the monitors were originally authorized by law were not the objects for which they would now be of service. And only did we stop as to the rehabilitation of the Navy in regard to cruisers, upon the ground that we desired first to know the result of those that were in course of construction. That was wisdom, for these very vessels have been altered in many particulars, and the Department itself has not only asked for more money to construct them but has asked the Congress of the United States by appropriation to affirm changes in the original plans, which have been found to be necessary. It has also requested that the appropriations asked for one of these ships may if they are in excess be applied to the building of any of the others, thus making the appropriations for the three cruisers and the dispatch-boat an appropriation in common to be expended on any or all as the case may in the future demand.

And further, the effort has been made to show that I occupy a position now upon this subject inconsistent with the position which I have occupied in the past. That is but of slight moment in connection with the great interests and purposes that I think I have in view in advocating this project, which is to build up an American navy worthy of the American people. I beg you, then, gentlemen, who wish to ascribe to me hostility in the past to the Navy, in what I have done I beg that you will not, because I march up to-day to the demands and utterances of both of the great parties in the country, that you will not retrograde or seek to take a position which you allege that I occupied in the past, but which I deny. I never occupied that position. In other words, why should gentlemen on the other side of the House who have for a long time been asserting their wish and purpose to build up an American navy, simply because we have taken steps in this bill to go forward to comply with the demand of the people—I say why should they take the opposite position now to what they claim to have uniformly demanded? If the bill is wrong in any of its details it rests with the House to correct them.

For one I do not object to a limitation, if it be large enough to make certain the execution of the purposes of this bill; and I say further, yes, it is an exception to my record in this particular. But I am not afraid to make that exception in my course of conduct as to appropriation bills when a great national result is to be achieved thereby and the honor of the nation is to be elevated. I think indeed he would be a poor representative of the people who would not do the same under like circumstances.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS], who has kindly undertaken to assume charge of this matter in the House.

Mr. ELLIS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CURTIN. It seems to be the disposition of this House now on both sides of the aisle to build a navy. And at this late period, when the wooden ship is of the past as much as the bones of the pre-historic animals found in the frozen regions of the North, every time a navy is mentioned here the monitors are brought forward in this highly intellectual and cultured presence, and are subjected to the eloquence and oratory of this House. And they are of the past. There is scarcely an iron-clad ship of any nation abroad that could not run down in one day all your monitors that could be placed in the harbor of New York. We started the monitor and the world improved on it. We go back to the monitor now, and that is a disturber to the councils of this House constantly intruded upon its deliberations. Let the monitor wallow around like a great turtle in your harbors, and let us build a navy commensurate with the greatness of this country and of a power up to the possibility of modern invention and skill.

I do most positively differ with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] who would be in favor of buying American ships abroad because he asserts we can not make the steel in this country. Offer any enterprise that invites capital, and the American mind will evolve a construction in steel and iron equal to that of any people in the world.

Mr. Chairman, you can not build a navy unless you prove to the world you can build it here of American material. If we do not build it of American material we are not worthy of a navy; and I will never, so far as I am concerned, vote for a bill to make a ship unless it is admitted we can build it here.

I do not, Mr. Chairman, like this political discussion. I did not like the speech of my friend opposite to me [Mr. THOMAS]; and I am afraid indeed to stand before and attempt to say anything of the eloquent sarcasm of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]; for I am not equal to his shafts and do not desire such controversy. The time for political speeches on this floor as the 4th of March is approaching has passed. We will reserve that for next summer in the hot weather. We shall now confine ourselves if possible to the question before this body, and that is whether we shall attempt to build a navy.

Now, my friends, you have not a navy, and I will tell you the reason. Under similar circumstances Parliament would have voted a want of confidence. There is a want of confidence in your Secretaries of the Navy, and it is insinuated, you know whether truly or not, that the Navy Department for many years past has not been managed fairly and with the integrity which should be exacted from a high official of that Department. That is all.

You vote money for a navy, and you have not a navy, but your Navy is gone. You investigated your Navy. The rules of this House, rigid rules of which I know little, and that little I desire to forget [laughter], obstructed the development of what was alleged as to the administration of the Navy.

There is a want of confidence in the present Secretary of the Navy. I do not accuse him of any fraud.

Mr. BOUTELLE. On the part of whom is there a want of confidence?

Mr. CURTIN. I do not know and do not accuse him; but there is a want of confidence—on whose part I do not know, but do say to my friend from Maine that when the Tallapoosa went down and he was not upon it the country breathed pleasure and satisfaction. [Laughter.]

I hold in my hand an order of the Secretary of the Navy of recent date, and having tried to get information from a Navy officer and found he was reticent, I could not understand it and complained to another Navy officer that he did not seem disposed to give me information. And then to my house last night they sent me an order of the 7th of February under which no officer of the Navy, either on the active or retired list, can make any communication to Congress or to a member of Congress without their passing through the Navy Department—that is, that no member of this House could consult an officer of the Navy as to his duty unless it was filtered through the medium of the Navy Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That has always been the regulation.

Mr. CURTIN. No, sir; this order goes beyond that. Do you imagine that is proper?

Do you imagine for one moment that if that heroic man, Admiral Worden, would come upon this floor I could not consult him about the Navy? Have I to go to the Secretary of the Navy and ask him for leave to consult with a naval officer about naval matters? Where did the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] get the information which he has developed to the House to-day? Why, Mr. Chairman, I would not go to a shoemaker to learn how to make a watch, nor would I go to a locomotive builder to find out about the construction of a ship. If I desired to build a navy I would go to the men who have been educated in the building and management of ships, men who have been educated and trained by the Government in the naval service and have thus acquired skill, learning, and knowledge about such matters.

I say, sir, that a Secretary of the Navy who interdicts me, as a free representative of the free people of the State of Pennsylvania, from seeking instruction from the men who can give it to me in regard to a public matter like this, must have something concealed behind the subject under consideration than that order which is not entirely consistent with propriety or with the dignity of the place he occupies. I allege, sir, that steel can be made in this country, and I insist moreover that it can be made of a standard so high that English steel can not approach it.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. So do I.

Mr. KELLEY. And I affirm that statement from personal observation.

Mr. CURTIN. Thank you, my friend. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have two friends in Pennsylvania who understood that it was proposed to build ships for the Navy, and who, at their own cost and expense, made a plate thirteen feet long, four feet wide, and seven and a half inches thick, of three qualities of steel with a perfect weld, and defy the skill of the Navy Department to separate it, and that will resist any piece of ordnance in America to penetrate it. I put into the bill $25,000 to test the quality of steel, and say to you, Mr. Chairman, you can build a navy although you have no merchant marine to protect [laughter]; but that we may get in the future if we have not got it now. The man in all the history of Great Britain who did most to fix her national policy was Oliver Cromwell.

Mr. CURTIN. Oh, let me speak on that for just a few minutes more. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I yield a few minutes to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CURTIN (resuming). Kings had preceded him and heads were cut off, but he stamped upon Great Britain the policy of extending her dominions in order to obtain markets for her surplus products. That was the common sense of a great man. His bones were scattered to the winds; no enactment or ordinance of Parliament bears his name; and yet his policy has made Great Britain the great and powerful nation that she remains until this day. They could give his bones to the winds, but he left his impress upon the policy of the nation, and that little island, which you can cover on a map of ordinary size with your thumb, is the source from which every country in the world borrows money, the bank to which every city and every corporation in the world is indebted. Now, then, if you intend to get foreign commerce you must pay for it as the English have done. They encircle the globe, not as Webster said in his magnificent rhetoric, with the drum-beat of their military posts, but they encircle it far more effectually in reaching out to all parts of the earth to secure markets for their surplus productions.

Mr. BAYNE. Will my colleague permit me a question?

Mr. CURTIN. Yes.

Mr. BAYNE. Does my friend understand that this bill contemplates the construction of iron or steel ships?

Mr. CURTIN. Steel ships.

Mr. BAYNE. My understanding is that it points more toward the construction of wooden ships.

Mr. CURTIN. Oh, the wooden ship is gone, and is a creation of the past.

Mr. BAYNE. But this bill, I think, contemplates wooden ships. It certainly does not provide that these ships shall be constructed of iron or steel.

Mr. CURTIN. There is one wooden ship in the bill. In the name of the honor of the country and to build a navy, if that is necessary as a concession, let us have one wooden ship, so that we may construct ships that will be respectable in peace and formidable in war. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. But this bill does not provide that the other four ships shall be built of iron or of steel.

Mr. CURTIN. Is that so?

Mr. BAYNE. Why, certainly that is so.

Several MEMBERS. That is so.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr.

CURTIN] that there is nothing in this bill which provides that there shall be any iron or steel used in the construction of these ships.

Mr. CURTIN. Then I have read the bill in vain, and my speech goes for nothing. I do not care so much about the wooden or iron ships as about the loss of my speech. [Laughter.] But if that is the case I will not vote for the bill. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Move to amend it.

Mr. CURTIN. At the proper time I will; of course I will. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] has given us an account of a ship built in England for Chili, and has compared it with the cruisers ordered by the last Congress. I think those ships ought to have been built long since; and will tell you the reason of the delay. It is because they have been unable to get the armor from abroad. Now, I allege that if you determine to build ten or twenty ships for your Navy and invite our Pennsylvania steel manufacturers to supply the material, the capital and the plant will be provided, and Pennsylvania will produce you steel for the construction of these ships which the English manufacturers cannot equal—

A MEMBER. And cheaper.

Mr. CURTIN. And cheaper. We will produce it for $175 a ton. And if you want a navy you must make it popular by building it at home. Will any one say that after our long experience we are not equal to building a navy in the United States? What has occurred since we were a nation that we have not had an active interest in? Franklin out on a common in Philadelphia brought the lightning from the clouds; and to-day, by the use of lightning, as harnessed by Morse and used in modern civilization and progress, affords quick transition of knowledge to all the world and is an active agent in human affairs. Go into yonder hall, and you see Fulton, who made the steamboat and revolutionized the commerce of the world—

Mr. KELLEY. Having borrowed the machinery from John Fitch. Mr. CURTIN. Yes; John Fitch propelled a boat by steam on the Delaware, but died before his merits as an inventor were acknowledged. His statue should be in that hall instead of Fulton's.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CURTIN. Are you quite sure of that?

The CHAIRMAN. Quite sure. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIN. I have much more to say if I have time; but I yield to the rigid rules of this House.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, in bold contrast with the broad and statesmanlike views of the gentleman from Massachusetts comes the sharp partisan talk of other gentlemen from that side of the House. Gentlemen on the other side criticize the Democratic party as responsible for this measure. Now, I admit it may be a matter of speculation what navy the Democratic party will build; but it is a painful reality what navy the Republican party has failed to build in the last twenty-two years. In the matter of ships they have produced—what? The Tallapoosa! In the matter of ordnance, nothing that I know of save that the champagne broadsides of that celebrated vessel were said to be very effective upon Republican statesmen.

Gentlemen on the other side have railed against the navy-yards. Now what has been the policy of the Republican party in their attempts to build up, or rather destroy, the American Navy? They have used both the navy-yards and the contract system. The gentleman from Illinois read a list of vessels, giving their original cost and the tremendous outlay of money expended upon them in the way of repairs. That is the key to the situation. The Tennessee and the other vessels which had millions of dollars expended upon them under the name of repairs were literally rebuilt in the navy-yards in order to give patronage to enable the Republican party to hold its own in doubtful districts. Will the caustic and witty gentleman from Maine inform this House what the patronage of the Kittery navy-yard in his State was, and what effect it had upon the September elections in the gentleman's own district?

The navy-yards were kept well filled with partisans, patching and coppering and rebuilding the wooden vessels, while the contractors reveled in constructing marine monstrosities in the shape of alleged ironclads and costly engines and machinery.

Not alone that, but they say this bill is an attempt to administer the Government by commission. Well, I would rather have a government administered by commission than a government administered by contractors; and at the proper time I shall second or offer an amendment to this bill providing that the navy-yards of the Government be rehabilitated and that the work of upbuilding an American navy from American materials shall be done in American navy-yards.

Mr. THOMAS rose.

Mr. McADOO. My time is too short to allow me to yield to the gentleman.

Sir, the great blot upon the whole Republican administration was the contract system. The people of this country believe, and they have some basis of fact for that belief, that the navy-yards were used for patronage, and that the contractors helped to swell the campaign funds that carried doubtful States in Presidential elections. I think it will be found not only wise but economic to turn loose into our navy-yards the talent and skilled intelligence which we have educated and allow it to help upbuild the Navy in our own yards. In whatever way it is built the people demand a navy commensurate with the interests, the security, and the honor of this great country.

Mr. ELLIS. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, in the ten minutes given me by my friend from Louisiana I can not be expected to discuss this question at any length; but I wish to say in the outset that I believe my friend from Maine, my friend from Ohio, and my friend from Illinois entertain the same opinion that I entertain—that there should be an American navy.

I do not stand here to criticize for one moment the actions of past administrations. That matter has nothing to do with this great question. Ought we to have a navy? I will not say one word that might come to my mind with regard to anything that may have occurred in the last twenty years in reference to the maladministration of the Navy Department. Let that pass by "like the idle wind, that we regard not."

There are two things necessary: first, a navy; second, harbor defenses. Following my own judgment, I should have put harbor defenses first and the Navy second. We can not in one year, or two years, or three years construct a navy equal to the navy of Great Britain; and everybody knows it. Let us, however, have the germ of a navy.

But, said my friend from Ohio, "You are giving all the power of the Government to the Democratic party." I disliked to hear that. It was further said, "You are opening the doors of the Treasury to the Democratic party." Sir, with the gentleman from Ohio I dislike this limitless expenditure of money. I would be glad to see in this bill, I say this House ought to see in this bill, a limit. No matter who has the expenditure of that money, whether it be Grover Cleveland or Chester A. Arthur, there should be a limit. If I had the knowledge necessary to put a limit on this bill, I would draw the amendment myself.

But we are here, Democrats and Republicans, seeking one great object; and we ought to be brethren in seeking that object; that is, to start the building of a proper navy. As a Democrat, I do not wish the representatives of the Democratic party to have the power in their hands to squander one, two, ten, or twenty million dollars. Let us know what the limit should be, and I stand ready to vote for it.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit me—

Mr. EATON. I have but little time; but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY. I was going to ask whether this bill should not determine the character of the vessels, their quality especially, in view of the fact that the highest naval authority has just pronounced unseaworthy the last ten ships built by the British Government?

Mr. EATON. Well, I will answer that question in this way: If the British board of admiralty has learned that the science of Great Britain has not been able yet to construct a proper vessel, then permit me to say that neither my friend from Pennsylvania, myself, nor any other authority in this country will be able to put on a bill of this kind a description of what the vessels should be. [Laughter.] My friend ought to know that. He ought to know it.

Mr. KELLEY. I have simply quoted Sir Edmund Reed, the highest naval authority.

Mr. EATON. I am quoting my friend as very high naval authority. [Laughter.] I wish to have a board of admiralty, if I may so style these officers and scientific men who have this matter in charge, to select the proper models upon which to build our vessels. But limit the expenditure of the money. It is a farce to talk about it when we know that there is not an ironclad on the water that will not go down beneath the force of modern projectiles. Everybody knows it. And my friend from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER], whom I do not see in his seat, who was so strenuous to build ironclads six months ago, has learned at last there are no ironclads on the water that can stand before modern projectiles.

I rejoice the United States has not expended in the past fifteen, twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty millions of dollars. It would have been thrown away, absolutely thrown away. We have had the advantage of the expenditures of other people, and now we may go to work believing the results will warrant our desires.

I come from a little State bounded by the ocean; I am a New England man, and if anybody is interested in a navy it is New England that is interested. If anybody is interested in a navy it is my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] and my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG]. For let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, before twelve months have rolled round the fishery question will present such a question that you may desire and need a navy.

Therefore I say let us discard all talk about Democrats and Republicans. Let us stand here American citizens and begin to build up a navy that will be an honor to the American name. We have the sailors—New England furnishes the sailors, and the world can not produce a class of men like the sailors from Connecticut and Maine and Massachusetts. Give us the bottoms and we will furnish the sailors.

Now do not let us quarrel about this matter. Let an amendment be offered to this bill. I desire to limit the expenditure; I do not believe the incoming administration to have it in its power to squander the money of the people. I have no such desire. I will give no such vote while I have a seat on this floor; but I want to see a navy started.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am trespassing, I know, upon my friend from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLIS. No; you are not.

Mr. EATON. But let us forget to-day, if possible, party. Let us remember we are one people and what is good for the Democratic party is good for the Republican party, and what is good for the Republican party is good for us all.

If this bill needs amendments, and I believe it does, let those amendments, Mr. Chairman, be produced by one side or the other. I shall stand ready to vote with my friend from Maine to do what he believes is best to prevent the squandering of the money of the people. I have no desire the Democratic party I fought for should have any other power than what ought to be exercised by just and honorable men.

We may do something, but little. I do not believe the time has come—I am not a prophet—but yet I predict the time has not come when any naval board, whether composed of Englishmen, or Frenchmen, or Germans, or Americans, can put into the water a vessel that will stand the projectile power of to-day. My own opinion is we may look for fast-going cruisers that can make from eighteen to twenty miles an hour with 100-ton guns on their decks, that can sink an ironclad or run away from it as they please, and then let our harbors and coasts be properly defended, and America will be as she always has been, resistless against the powers of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIS addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. General debate on this section is now terminated under the order of the House. The question before the committee is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]. The Chair will now hear from that gentleman a statement of the grounds on which he bases his point.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, my point of order against this section is made under section 3 of Rule XXI, which provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The pending section of this bill provides for the organization of a board to be appointed by the President of the United States, to be composed of several members, some civilians and some officers of the Navy. It is an attempt to create new offices on a general appropriation bill, and to pay premiums or rewards for plans which are to be submitted by parties outside of the Government service. This is new legislation. It does not provide for any public work authorized by law. More than that, I submit it is subject to objection under the other part of the rule, which provides:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Now, this section is admittedly germane to the bill, the purpose of the bill being to provide for the naval service of the United States. But this is an attempt to furnish plans and to provide for the building of ships, and it does not reduce expenditures. It is not a retrenchment of salaries paid to officers. On the contrary it involves increased expenditure by providing additional salaries, by providing for the payment of rewards to persons who may furnish plans to this board. Indeed, it provides for an unlimited expenditure of money, as no restriction is placed upon the cost of the vessels which are to be constructed.

I do not think it necessary to elaborate this point. It must be clear that the provision of the bill is contrary to the third section of Rule XXI. I may have occasion to answer any objection which might be urged to this point of order; but at this time I shall offer nothing further upon it.

Mr. STONE. I should like to state upon the point of order another objection to the section in addition to the one made by my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]. I wish to suggest to the consideration of the Chair whether or not it be competent for the Committee on Appropriations to report the section now under consideration, inasmuch as clause 12 of Rule XI provides that "subjects relating to the naval establishment other than the appropriations for its support" shall be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I submit that so much of this bill as refers to naval affairs and does not concern appropriations comes properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, under Rule XI; and unless it can be shown that this subject of the establishment of a naval board has by some order, resolution, or bill been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, that Committee in attempting to deal with the subject has exceeded its jurisdiction, precisely as it was suggested a day or two ago that another committee of this House, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, had attempted to deal with a subject beyond its jurisdiction.

So I submit, under a fair construction of this rule, it is not competent for the Committee on Appropriations to deal with a subject that does not relate to appropriations, but which by the rule is exclusively committed to the Committee on Naval Affairs. And the Chair will take notice this section is different from some other sections—that it is not only inclusive but exclusive. It so distinctly declares, as I have already stated, and I will not repeat what I have said, as I think the Chair understands my point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. No; I am willing to leave it to the Chair. My desire is to save the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The ground stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] is new to the Chair, and his decision will turn upon the other ground. Therefore, without entering upon any discussion on it, the Chair thinks section 2 of the bill is obnoxious to the third clause of Rule XXI. It is an appropriation for expenditure not authorized by law, and that part of the section which provides for the organization and structure of this board is new legislation. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to lay aside this bill, as I believe I will find some way to test the sense of the House where one objection will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania there is yet one section to be disposed of.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope when the gentleman submits a plan it will be a plan that takes the responsibility as well as confers the power.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not quite understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I mean this: that if we are to build a navy the party in power having the power should also have the responsibility.

Mr. RANDALL. I propose in some way, and I think I see my path clear, to make this proposition so that it will be acceptable to enough members of this House to secure its consideration on this bill. I therefore beg to lay the bill aside for the present.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it proposed to have the bill recommitted?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 3 is not disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not a material point. I ask the bill be laid aside and to have the committee now proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I object to its being laid aside.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let them have all the time they want.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. To lay the naval appropriation bill aside and take up the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I am perfectly willing the river and harbor bill should be proceeded with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to laying this bill aside.

Mr. STONE and other members objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of the third section.

Mr. TALBOTT. I have an amendment to offer to come in before that. I send it up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To complete the construction of the steel cruiser, of not less than five nor more than six thousand tons displacement, and the armament thereof, authorized by act of Congress August 5, 1882, $1,780,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the whole section has been ruled out?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland. It is a modification of the law of 1883.

Mr. TALBOTT. No, sir; there is no modification of that law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the law be exhibited.

Mr. TALBOTT. I have sent for it.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order the gentleman makes?

Mr. HOLMAN. That this appropriation is not authorized by any existing law. That the act to which the gentleman refers, the act of 1882, is modified by the subsequent act of 1883. That all the vessels authorized to be constructed are now in process of construction, while this amendment proposes something in addition not authorized by law.

Mr. TALBOTT. I do not want to say a word upon the point of order, because this act of August 5, 1882, to which the gentleman called the attention of the Chair, clearly authorizes the construction, and leaves no room for doubt. It is absolutely existing law, and I shall submit the question to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us see the law.

Mr. TALBOTT. I have sent for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be remembered that there were two acts, one of 1882 and the other of 1883, the latter modifying the former.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to see the acts.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will say further that this vessel provided for in this amendment was expressly authorized at the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress in the naval appropriation bill passed at that time. This vessel is provided for by law and its construction authorized. I send the statute to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the section to which the gentleman refers as authorizing this construction.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any portion of said sum not required for the purposes aforesaid may be applied toward the construction of two steam cruising vessels of war, which are hereby authorized, at a total cost when fully completed, not to exceed the amount estimated by the late naval advisory board for such vessels, the same to be constructed of steel of domestic manufacture, having as near as may be a tensile strength of not less than 60,000 pounds to the square inch, and a ductility in eight inches of not less than 25 per cent.; said vessels to be provided with full sail-power and full steam-power. One of said vessels shall be of not less than 5,000 nor more than 6,000 tons displacement, and shall have the highest attainable speed.

Mr. TALBOTT. The advisory board advised the construction of two vessels of that class, and estimated the cost at $3,500,000. The act of Congress authorized only the construction of one—that is to say, a vessel of not less than 5,000 tons or more than 6,000 tons displacement. This amendment, therefore, is prepared exactly in accordance with the existing law and the amount is the amount fixed by the advisory board. It is, therefore, the law now, and this is a provision to carry it into effect. No law of Congress has changed it. No law has varied the law authorizing the construction of that vessel, and I now ask the adoption of this amendment which authorizes this construction.

I have heard, Mr. Chairman, a good deal of talk on the floor of this House about a navy, and I have heard a great deal of talk about wooden vessels. The Committee on Naval Affairs in the Forty-seventh Congress investigated the whole subject, and investigated it thoroughly. We had before us all the scientific and naval men in the country who were within reach. We had their views, opinions, and conclusions, and I desire to say that from Admiral Porter down to the lieutenants in the Navy they all concurred in the opinion that the invention of gun-power was far in excess of the development of ships of war.

In other words, that now gun-power, with recent improvements in that direction, is so great that you can not construct a vessel that will float capable of resisting it. The conclusion of the board and the Committee on Naval Affairs on this investigation was that what we require is first-class steel cruisers of the highest attainable speed. Every man who knows anything about naval architecture knows that you can not have speed without displacement, because you have got to have size, and if you have the size so as to give you the necessary engine-room and machinery power you are compelled to have weight and displacement. This you must have in order to get the ability to put upon the vessel the power you require. You must have room capacity for storage of coal, and you must have capacity for your machinery; and the result of the labors of the committee, and after months of labor and earnest attention to the duties devolving upon them, was that if this vessel authorized by that law was constructed, with her power and guns aboard of her, she would easily run away from any war vessel in the world. She would also have gun-power to fight in a close conflict.

Now, gentlemen talk about speed as a great element. Not a single one has told this House one thing, and that is that there is a great deal of difference between the average speed and speed measured by the mile. You can put the vessel to its full capacity and strain the machinery for a short distance, or a measured mile, and make a speed of eighteen, nineteen, or twenty knots an hour, but that is no evidence of speed. The speed of a vessel is what she will make on an average of running a whole day, a week, or three weeks; in other words, what she will make continuously and in all kinds of weather and under all circumstances. That, I say, is a very different question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I rise to a question of order. Is this debate in order?

Mr. TALBOTT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman should confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. TALBOTT. I am endeavoring to do so. I say again, that the Committee on Naval Affairs did consider this whole subject in the Forty-seventh Congress. I say that Congress passed a law authorizing the construction of this vessel; and further, sir, that the Committee on Appropriations can not find a single word altering or limiting that act or the terms of that authorization of August 5, 1882. I submit, therefore, that no point of order can lie against the amendment providing for the construction of this vessel authorized by the act of Congress in question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hold in my hand an act of the 3d March, 1883, which seems to be a revision of the act to which the attention of the Chair has been called. I will send it up to the Chair. My understanding has always been that this act of 1883 had the effect of repealing the provisions of the act which has already been read; but I trust some gentleman connected with the Appropriations Committee of last Congress will state how that is.

Mr. THOMAS. We can give a perfect explanation of it. There was no repeal of the former act.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana indicate what portion of the act he desires to have read?

Mr. HOLMAN. That which applies to the construction of the steel cruisers. But before that act is read some gentleman connected with the Committee on Appropriations of the Forty-seventh Congress, which reported both bills, will be able to explain whether this last act repeals the former act or not, in so far as the provisions of the one are inconsistent with those of the other. My opinion has always been that this last act covers the whole ground.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire the act to be read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do. It is under this latter act that the vessels now in process of construction are being constructed.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of the steel cruiser of not less than 4,300 tons displacement nor less than 2,500 tons displacement each, and one dispatch-barge, as recommended by the naval advisory board in its report of December 20, 1882, $1,300,000; and for the construction of all which vessels, except their armament, the Secretary of the Navy shall invite proposals from all American ship-builders whose ship-yards are fully equipped for building or repairing iron and steel steamships, and constructors of marine engines, machinery, and boilers; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to construct said vessels and procure their armament at a total cost for each not exceeding the amounts estimated by the naval advisory board in said report, and in the event that such vessels or any of them shall be built by contract, such building shall be under contracts with the lowest and best responsible bidder or bidders, made after at least sixty days' advertisement, published in five of the leading newspapers of the United States, inviting proposals for constructing said vessels, subject to all such rules, regulations, superintendence, and provisions as to bonds and security for the due completion of the work as the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe.

Mr. HOLMAN. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of last Congress has given me information from which I am ready to believe this act is not a complete substitute for the act of 1882, and that to the extent of one vessel it does not cover that act. Upon that statement of facts I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT].

Mr. RANDALL. It is due for me to say that so far as I know the Secretary of the Treasury has not made any estimate or recommendation on this subject this session.

Mr. McMILLIN. Have any proposals been invited as provided in the act?

Mr. RANDALL. Nothing of the sort; I only want to say it seems to me this matter should have some investigation. This may have been a very good ship four years ago or two years ago, but in the light of the experience of the intervening years it may be that it would not be such a vessel as we should now build.

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the act authorizing the construction of this vessel covers all of that. The naval advisory board has the power under the act which authorizes the construction to make all the alterations that may be called for in consequence of new inventions. And I will say more than that: the armament for that vessel is only limited as to the minimum. The act makes the minimum 6-inch steel rifled guns and 8-inch guns. But as regards the maximum there is no limit; and the naval bureau having the charge of the armament can make the guns as large as they please under the act itself.

Mr. THOMAS. The construction of this vessel was fully considered by the Naval Committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I move to amend by striking out the last word.

This legislation has been fully considered and matured. The plans and specifications and model for this vessel are on file in the Navy Department to-day. The naval advisory board are qualified to take up that plan and build the vessel, with all the modern improvements up to this hour, and to begin as soon as this appropriation is available.

Now, if my friends on the other side of the House are in favor of building a navy, here is an opportunity to build a first-class American man-of-war that will be a source of pride to every American heart and a satisfaction to every American sailor. It can go as fast any naval vessel in the world. It will have an average speed of 16 knots an hour for six days. It is provided that it shall be armed with breech-loading guns of not less than 6-inch and 8-inch caliber. And the maximum, as stated by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT], is not fixed. As large guns as are needed can be put on the vessel, and it will be first-class in every respect. If the Representatives on both sides of this House want to build a navy, here is an opportunity afforded, and one that is based on common sense and the recommendation of some of the wisest naval architects and naval officers this country has ever produced.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am as earnestly desirous to begin the construction of a proper navy as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]. But this proposition simply leads us to produce another first-class failure. When this vessel was authorized, three years ago, a ship of five or six thousand tons, iron-clad, would have been a success, provided she achieved a speed of 16 knots an hour; but in the interval ships have been built that have achieved a speed of 18.6 knots an hour; and at this moment the British Government are considering a proposal from John Elder & Co. to build an armored ship with twenty-one inches of armor, of 10,500 tons, that will make a guaranteed speed of 21 knots an hour—no cure, no pay.

Now, are we not to take advantage of the lapse of time and of the experience which has come since this provision was enacted into law? What we want is a real navy and not a sham navy; and the addition of this ship will simply give us another failure. The money will be thrown away. The limitation of the existing law is for a ship of from five to six thousand tons. I do not know, and no man can tell, in the condition in which this country now finds itself, with its open ports undefended, whether we do not want a first-class iron ship of from ten to twelve thousand tons.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] permit me a question?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that there are not over six vessels afloat on the ocean to-day that can make over 16 knots an hour?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It is a fact; and I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] that those slow vessels are being abandoned and cast away.

Mr. TALBOTT. And I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] that not a single unarmored vessel in the world has been discarded unless for old age. It is the armored vessels that he is talking about.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. This proposes to build an armored vessel.

Mr. TALBOTT. No, sir; an unarmored steel cruiser.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. A 6,000-ton armored steel cruiser.

Mr. TALBOTT and Mr. THOMAS. No, sir; an unarmored cruiser.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Very well. Then I have this to say: If that vessel is to be unarmored she will be confronted by an armored vessel capable of making over twenty-one knots an hour.

Mr. THOMAS. When?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now John Elder & Co. have a proposition pending, which will no doubt be accepted by the British Government, by which they guarantee to construct a 10,500-ton armored steel cruiser with 21-inch plate, and carrying a hundred-and-twenty-one-ton gun; and when you have built this vessel which you propose here and it meets that vessel in the open ocean yours will go down. Therefore, I say, this ship ought not to be built. If we build an unarmored cruiser, let us build one that will be at least able to run away from these armored cruisers.

Mr. TALBOTT. Only last Friday the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] rated this House because it was proposed to repair a wooden vessel, and called attention to the fact that every nation had discarded armored vessels. To-day he tells us that every nation is going to build armored vessels.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Every nation is building them to-day.

Mr. TALBOTT. No nation is building them. They may talk about building them, but they do not do it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Great Britain is building them, France is building them, Germany is building them. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of building this vessel because it is a type of what will be the modern war vessel. We have gone from the old fast-sailing clipper-ship to the great iron floating battery, and the compromise between the two extremes is the unarmored, swift-sailing steel cruiser, easily maneuvered, armed with powerful ordnance, capable of running away when necessary, and also capable of catching an enemy and destroying her. I am in favor of every practicable measure for building up our Navy. I do not believe simply in discussing measures about the Navy; but when a practical proposition is made upon this floor to build a vessel like the one now proposed, leaving it to the advisory board to take advantage of every modern improvement and produce an American Esmeralda, my vote is for it, because I believe the American people want it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, if there be a proposition before the committee, I have failed to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has read the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT], and the question now is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. The confusion was so great that the amendment could not be heard, and I ask that it be again reported.

Insert, after line 517, the following:

"To complete the construction of the steel cruiser, of not less than 5,000 nor more than 6,000 tons displacement, and the armament thereof, authorized by act of Congress August 5, 1882, $1,780,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TALBOTT, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 91, noes 64.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by adding to the amendment just adopted the words:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall approve of the construction of said vessel.

Mr. TALBOTT. I am willing to accept that amendment.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. RANDALL, there were—ayes 140, noes none.
So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to amend by adding after the amendment just adopted the language which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the completion and armament of the iron-clad monitors Puritan, Terror, Monadnock, Amphitrite, and Miantonomoh, $2,204,327.31, provided such completion shall be recommended by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. RANDALL. The object contemplated by that amendment will take $4,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. My amendment names the exact amount which the Secretary of the Navy says will be required to complete these vessels.

Mr. RANDALL. Nevertheless, I say the object stated in the amendment will require an expenditure of more than $4,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment I wish to say that these five vessels are completed as to their hulls and machinery. One of them, the Miantonomoh, is provided with armor, and is now at the Brooklyn navy-yard having its turrets constructed. The Monadnock is at the Mare Island navy-yard, California. The Puritan, the Terror, and the Amphitrite are on the Delaware River, with their hulls and machinery completed. Five different boards of naval officers have examined these vessels and have reported in favor of their completion. If completed according to the plans proposed within the last few years, with defective armor, defective turrets, and high-power guns, they will be the most effective coast and harbor defenses that can be made within the United States. Their hulls are built of the best American iron. They have passed muster under five several examinations made by the most critical boards, each one of which has recommended their completion.

Our seacoast cities are defenseless to-day. We have no means of resisting the encroachments of any of the war vessels of the Old World. Any one of the vessels named in the amendment—especially the Puritan, which is to have a speed of 16 knots an hour—armed with the high-power guns which we are constructing here at the navy-yard to-day, can resist the largest war vessel that can enter the harbor of New York or Philadelphia or Baltimore, or any of the cities along the Atlantic or Pacific coast.

California stands to-day from the head of the Gulf of California along the whole coast without any defensive vessel at all. This much-talked-of Esmeralda belonging to the Chilean Government might come and lay the city of San Francisco under contribution and extort from its inhabitants enough in one hour to finish from the beginning a dozen such vessels as these.

Here these vessels are almost completed; yet we daily day after day and year and year, while our country is in this helpless condition. I hope that the spirit mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] will animate this Congress, and will prompt members to come forward and vote for the completion of these vessels of war, so that we may be able to defend ourselves and to resent the insults which are constantly being put upon the flag of our country and upon our citizens in foreign lands.

It has been said that these vessels can not cross the ocean. It is a mistake. The Monadnock went around Cape Horn. She was under convoy of two wooden ships which three times had to seek the shelter of a port, while all the time she went bravely on, arriving in the harbor of San Francisco a week before her convoys. She went across the Atlantic Ocean to Russia and proved herself in every way seaworthy. These monitors when completed can go anywhere where there are eighteen feet of water. They can ride the strongest sea and fight the most terrific battles. I hope that Congress will now, when we have a chance, vote money to complete them. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this question is perfectly well understood by the House. It has been discussed over and over again. The committee do not recommend this proposition. I content myself with asking a vote upon it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I suggest a verbal amendment, which I think my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] will accept, to strike out the word "recommended" and insert "approved;" so as to read, "approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. THOMAS. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. THOMAS as modified, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 64, noes 95.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BAGLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, which announced disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1609) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. MAHONEY, Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin, and Mr. VEST as managers of said conference on its part.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to amend, after the last line of the amendment, by inserting the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to return the Arctic steamer Alert to Her Majesty's Government with the thanks of the Government of the United States for the generous and graceful act of courtesy in so promptly tendering the gift of that vessel and for the valuable service thereby rendered to the cause of science and humanity.

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, directed to transfer to the Treasury Department for use as a revenue-cutter in the waters of Alaska the Steamer Bear, of the late Greely relief expedition, and is hereby authorized to place the steamer Thetis for use in the Navy as surveying vessel or otherwise.

On page 25 strike out figure "3" and insert "5;" so it will read "section 5."

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say to the gentleman from Maine that the first paragraph, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to, as I think it is proper. The second is provided for in another bill. The other, of course, I leave to the gentlemen of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state that these two sections I have offered as amendments are the substance of a joint resolution which I was instructed unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report to the House for passage.

The first section embodies the recommendation of the President of the United States in a special message recently sent to this House, that the Arctic steamer Alert, which was so opportunely tendered to us, be returned to the British Government, with the thanks of this Government. I understand the Committee on Appropriations make no objection to that.

The second section provides for disposing of the other two vessels of the Arctic relief fleet, the Bear and the Thetis, which we purchased for that purpose, the act of Congress providing that on completion of this service these purchased vessels should be sold.

Mr. RANDALL. They have not been, though.

Mr. BOUTELLE. A bill is now pending in this House providing for the construction of a revenue-cutter adapted for the extraordinary uses of the Alaskan coast.

Mr. GEORGE. And it was favorably reported from the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes; favorably reported by the committee, and is now on the Calendar of the House. Subsequently a bill was introduced in the Senate and a similar one in the House for the transfer of one of these Arctic steamers for that purpose instead of building a new vessel. That bill was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and was reported favorably by the committee. The Secretary of the Treasury and Secretary of the Navy were consulted in regard to the matter, and I have their responses on my desk in favor of carrying out this disposition. Therefore it is proposed in this second section to transfer the steamer Bear, as being best adapted for the purpose for which the revenue-cutter is desired on the Alaskan coast, to the Secretary of the Treasury for that purpose. That, the gentleman from Pennsylvania states, has been considered by his committee and is incorporated in another bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; it is in the other bill; but if the House desires to put it on this bill it will only involve striking it out of the other bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would suggest also that my proposition involves disposing not only of the Bear but of the Thetis.

Mr. LONG. As the amendment relates to kindred subjects, perhaps it is best to incorporate them on this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. They should be included in one proposition. This amendment provides that the Bear shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Thetis placed in the Navy as a surveying vessel or otherwise. I will not make any argument, but ask that this amendment may be unanimously appended to the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The reading of the bill was then concluded.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. McMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WELLBORN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments.

Mr. RANDALL demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Do gentlemen desire a separate vote on any amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask a separate vote on Mr. TALBOTT's amendment.

By unanimous consent, the remaining amendments of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union were agreed to in gross.

The CHAIRMAN. The question next recurs on the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To complete the construction of the steel cruiser, of not less than 3,000 nor more than 6,000 tons displacement, and the armament thereof, authorized by act of Congress August 5, 1882, $1,700,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 70.

Mr. RANDALL demanded the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 100, not voting, 113; as follows:

YEAS—111.

So the amendment was adopted.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. OCHILTREE, on this vote.

Mr. CONVERSE with Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, for the rest of the day.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. FUNSTON, for this day.

Mr. FERRELL with Mr. CUTCHEON, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. SUMNER, of California, with Mr. STRUBLE, for this day.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, with Mr. PHELPS, for to-day.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. EVANS.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. FINERTY.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. VALENTINE, on this vote.

Mr. CABELL with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota.

Mr. HILL with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, on the naval bill.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. BREITUNG.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. BRAINERD.

Mr. GRAVES with Mr. NELSON.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. TALBOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask now by consent that the vote may be taken on the final passage of the bill to-day, and that the time for the recess be extended. The Senate Committee on Appropriations, I may be permitted to say, are without a bill, as I understand, and it is important, therefore, that this bill should be in the hands of the Senate committee as early as possible.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to the vote being taken to-night.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that the calling of the roll may be dispensed with on this vote.

Mr. BELFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McMILLIN in the chair). The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the House.

The gentleman asks that the recess be postponed until after the vote is taken upon the passage of this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. But that no other business is to be transacted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I again ask unanimous consent to dispense with the calling of the roll.

Mr. COSGROVE and others objected.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It can be done by consent. It is only wasting a half hour additional time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection having been made, the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DINGLEY. I renew the request of my colleague for unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the roll.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope that will be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request has been made and objection interposed. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Objection was made by some gentleman who may probably be willing to withdraw the objection.

Mr. COSGROVE. I made the objection for one, and insist upon it.

The question was taken upon the passage of the bill; and there were—yeas 157, nays 6, not voting 161; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. PRYOR with Mr. HITT.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. COLLINS.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. JOHNSON.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTION—FREDERICK VS. WILSON.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of Frederick vs. Wilson, from the fifth district of Iowa; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to ask whether any other business is in order but the business for the District of Columbia at the evening session to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that no other business would be in order under the order of the House providing for to-night's session.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Not even to grant unanimous consent for to-morrow morning.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. ENGLISH to print some remarks on House bill 2142; also, to Mr. WOOD to print remarks on the educational bill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEELE, for the remainder of this day.

To Mr. WAIT, for the rest of the day, on account of important business.

To Mr. JONES, of Texas, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. GARRISON, for this evening's session, on account of sickness.

And then, in pursuance of the previous order of the House, the Speaker pro tempore (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) declared the House to be in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by the Clerk, Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr., who directed the reading of the following letter from the Speaker:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, February 23, 1935.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives:

Hon. BERTON McMILLIN is hereby appointed Speaker pro tempore to preside at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McMILLIN). The session of the House to-night is for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARR. As the only member of that committee present, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House with the view of taking up business of the committee on the Calendar.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think all the bills the committee desire to take up this evening are on the Speaker's table.

Mr. GUENTHER. Inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia is not present, but I presume will be here presently, I move that the House take a recess for five minutes.

The motion was agreed so.

The House accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) took a recess for five minutes.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair has already stated, the House is in session to-night for the purpose of considering reports by the Committee on the District of Columbia. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], the chairman of that committee, is recognized.

MELISSA G. POLAR.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2344) for the relief of Melissa G. Polar, with amendments by the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Page 1, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "the duplicate certificates as provided for in section 1" and insert the word "and."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BARBOUR. This is a bill which passed the House, and has also passed the Senate with two amendments which are merely verbal corrections.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF HEALTH OFFICER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. Res. 238) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia, with an amendment by the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read:

"An act authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia."

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

TAX SALES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 8236) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter sales of real estate, after advertisement as required by law, by the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia, for taxes or assessments that have been or may be levied by the commissioners of said District, or by other lawful authority, shall entitle the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, if the property be not redeemed within two years from the date of such sale, to a deed from the commissioners of the District, which deed shall vest in the grantee a good and valid title, and shall be presumptive evidence in all controversies in relation thereto that the property so conveyed was subject to the taxes for which the property was sold, that such taxes were not paid, and that the property was not redeemed before the execution of the deed; and such deed shall be conclusive evidence that the manner of levy, notice, sale, and all the other prerequisites of law were complied with necessary and proper to make such deed and title valid.

The bill was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with the following amendments:

In line 5, strike out the words "that have been or may be."

In line 9, after the words "such sale," insert the words "as provided by law."

In line 14, strike out the word "and" after the words "were not paid."

In lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "such deed shall be conclusive evidence."

Mr. McCOMAS. This bill, introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT], has been reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, and they believe that in its present form it will meet a want now very much felt here. It seems that in the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia there is no later provision for making title to property sold for taxes than the provision therein directing the governor of this District to make the deed.

The present bill authorizes the commissioners to do so. Further than that, it supplements the present procedure with respect to the mode of assessment and levy, and the manner of advertising and notice of sale, with the further provision—certainly mild enough in the shape in which it has been recommended by the committee—that the procedure incident to an ordinary sale for default of payment of the assessment or tax with respect to property which hereafter may be sold in this District for delinquency in payment of assessment or tax shall be presumptive evidence of the manner of levy, notice, and sale, and also as to the description of the property, the assessment of the particular property making the title good and valid with that presumption in its favor. Unless there be further reason for discussion, I shall reserve my time and will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT]. But in the first place I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WORTHINGTON], a member of the committee.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The amendments as read by the Clerk I do not think cover what the committee intended to put in there. It strikes out the words "such deed shall be conclusive evidence," but does not insert anything in its place.

Mr. MCOMAS. If the gentleman from Illinois will look at the first page he will find at line 11 the words "shall be presumptive evidence." At the last meeting of the committee to perfect the bill, the words in the fifteenth and sixteenth lines, "such deed shall be conclusive evidence," were stricken out. The words in the eleventh line, "shall be presumptive evidence," I think my friend will see cover all that has been withdrawn.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I desire the Clerk again to read the bill as proposed to be amended in those lines.

Mr. MCOMAS. I now yield for a minute to have the bill reported as requested by my colleague on the committee, Mr. WORTHINGTON.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read the latter part of the bill, commencing at line 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the manner of levy, notice, and sale, and all the other prerequisites of law were complied with necessary and proper to make such deed and title valid.

The CLERK. The words stricken out in the fifteenth and sixteenth lines are "such deed shall be conclusive evidence."

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think that is correct, in connection with the amendment made previously.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCOMAS] state the object of striking out those words, "shall be conclusive evidence?"

Mr. MCOMAS. The committee believed that the manner of levy, notice, and sale and all the other prerequisites of law should be held to be presumptive, but not conclusive, evidence.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Why not conclusive?

Mr. MCOMAS. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] that while it seemed to me that the levy and sale might well be made conclusive evidence, yet such was not the wisdom of a large majority of the committee, and I think that you could not make a deed reciting notice conclusive by mere act of Congress, or by any legislative act.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. You can just as well make it conclusive as presumptive.

Mr. MCOMAS. No; I think not. The manner of notice might be presumptive, but the fact of notice is jurisdictional and could not be made conclusive.

Mr. HUNT. Suppose no notice was given?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I shall oppose the amendment.

Mr. MCOMAS. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT].

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to supply a want that has been felt for a long time in the collection of taxes in the District of Columbia. By the last report of the District commissioners it appears that there were arrears of taxes in this District due and unpaid on the 1st day of November last to the amount of $824,532.97. While taxes on real estate ought to be, and generally are, collected in a larger per cent. than taxes upon personal property in this District, on the contrary, as shown by last year's attempt at collection, 95.3 per cent. of the taxes upon personal property are collected and paid, and only 90 per cent. of the taxes upon real estate. The only means provided by law for the collection of taxes on real estate is by the sale of the real estate for the taxes. At the last attempt at such sale there was not a bidder for any property in the District, the reason being that to bid in the property was simply an idle form, as nobody was authorized to execute a deed upon a sale for delinquent taxes.

What is sought to be accomplished by this bill is to supply that defect by vesting authority somewhere (and it is thought that the best place to deposit that authority is with the District commissioners) to execute a deed of property sold for taxes.

There is not a State in the Union whose laws do not provide for the execution of a deed upon a tax sale, and the anomalous condition in which the District is found in this respect is due largely to the change in the mode of governing the District and in the laws relating to its government. From what I have learned during this term in Congress, I have no doubt that there ought to be a general revision of the laws of the District of Columbia; and I trust that before the expiration of another Congress they will be revised. Although this District is under the special supervision of Congress, there is not a State in the Union to-day in which the laws are in such utter chaos as in the District of Columbia, which is governed in part by the old laws of Virginia, in part by the old laws of Maryland, and in part—God only knows how.

So that it is impossible for a citizen of the District to know just what his rights are.

An attempt was made, I think, in the Forty-fifth or Forty-sixth Congress to have these laws codified, so as to give the people residing in this District some trustworthy source of information as to the laws by which they are governed, but that attempt failed. A proposition was made this year to appropriate $5,000 to have the work of codification done again, but the Committee on Appropriations thought it had once been done, and a sufficient basis, perhaps, furnished for any Congress that might see fit to take up the matter and provide a code of laws for the government of the District. In this condition of things, in this emergency, it is absolutely necessary, if the property owners of the District of Columbia are to be compelled to pay any taxes, that some means should be provided by which those taxes could be collected.

There is not a city in the Union so lightly taxed as the city of Washington. One and a half per cent. is the outside limit. All the street improvements, all the expenses of governing the city are paid by general taxation, while in most of the cities throughout the country the rate of taxation is from 2 per cent. upward, and the improvements of streets are made by assessments upon abutting property. So that nobody in the District can rightly complain of taxation. That being true, we ought to provide that this moderate taxation shall be paid, and supply some means by which its collection can be enforced.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOLLETT. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Does this bill go as far as it should go? Does it remedy the embarrassment that you have just mentioned as showing itself at the last attempted sale for taxes. In the event of no purchaser appearing at these tax sales, is there any authority provided in this bill or in the law by which the property may be bid off to the District of Columbia or to the District commissioners? Will not this bill leave the law in this respect in the same anomalous condition which exists at the present time? The bill provides, as I understand, that where there is a purchaser at the tax sale and the property is not redeemed within two years it may be conveyed by a tax deed to the purchaser. But in the event that there is no bidder, then, as I understand, the defect in the existing law is not cured by this bill. Ought not the bill to be amended so that if there should be no bidder at the tax sale the property may be struck off to the commissioners of the District?

A MEMBER. Or may be forfeited to the District.

Mr. FOLLETT. I am advised there is now a provision upon that subject in the law; so that the apparent defect in this bill does not exist. What is needed on this subject, and all that is needed, as I understand, is a power somewhere to make title. At present, while the power of sale exists, there is no one authorized to execute deeds upon the sale. I believe I desire to say nothing further on this question.

Mr. MCOMAS. After briefly responding to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] and the objection of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN], I shall, unless there be desire for further discussion, move the previous question.

The Committee on the District of Columbia has had the honor to report one bill in the direction so well suggested by my friend from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT], providing for a codification of the criminal laws of the District; and that bill, having passed this House, is now pending in the Senate.

With respect to the suggestion of my friend on the right, that this bill does not show all the procedure with respect to a tax sale, I would call attention to the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia and to the organic law of 1878, wherein all the procedure with respect to the sale of property for taxes is already provided. But, as has been already said, by reason of the change made by the organic law of 1878, there is now no authority in this District competent to execute a title to property sold for taxes. Besides, there is no provision of law declaring what shall be presumptive and what conclusive evidence with respect to the proceedings culminating in a deed for property purchased at a tax sale. I concede that when a deed is made to a purchaser for property sold for taxes such deed should be presumptive evidence that the property so conveyed was subject to taxation for the year, that the taxes were not paid, that the property was regularly assessed for taxes and the taxes regularly levied, that it was duly advertised, and that it was not redeemed within the time fixed by law.

Personally I might concede that the bill should go a little further, and provide that the deed should be held to be conclusive evidence that the manner of assessment, levy, and advertisement was regular, and that all the prerequisites of law had been fully complied with by all the officers whose duty it was to take action affecting the property up to the stage of the sale. But the committee, knowing the great variety of claims with respect to assessment and taxation, has perhaps very wisely stopped short and said that for the present it will provide only that there shall be in this District a tax deed and somebody authorized to make it; that this deed, which now can not be made, shall be at least presumptive evidence of all these things as to some of which I am prepared to concede such deed might well be made conclusive evidence.

But this bill had better pass in the present shape than not pass at all. The exigency of this District requires that this House in its legislation should be practical. This bill in its present form has received careful consideration, and is fully approved by the committee having charge of the subject.

Mr. GIBSON. With the gentleman's permission I would like to make an inquiry. This bill provides, I see, in line 8:

If the property be not redeemed within two years from the date of such sale, &c.

Now, I wish to inquire what provision is made with respect to the cases of owners of property who are under legal disabilities—minors or married women.

Mr. McCOMAS. My recollection is that the existing statutes—I only speak generally—make the usual reservation with respect to the rights of persons under legal disabilities. That is my impression in regard to the revised statutes of the District and the organic law of the District.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman to say that there is a provision in the Revised Statutes for the commissioners purchasing property where there are no bidders.

Mr. McCOMAS. I am confident that in the act of 1878 or in the Revised Statutes there is provision authorizing the commissioners to bid in property sold for delinquent taxes.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. In a case of that kind, by whom would the deed be made? Could the commissioners make a deed to themselves?

Mr. McCOMAS. I apprehend that by the very force of law the title would be in the District.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I doubt it.

Mr. McCOMAS. At any rate the inquiry of my friend from Pennsylvania would be more pertinent upon some general modification of the tax law, and does not speak with reference to this modest provision with respect to the making of a deed, which is the whole scope of this measure. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, unless there be further inquiry—and there seems to be none—I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCOMAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 7557) to provide for the sale of certain real property in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to sell and convey to the highest bidder at public auction the following-named property, with the improvements thereon, belonging to and being within the District of Columbia: Lots 3, 4, and 11, and parts of lots 5, 9, and 10, in square 572; subplot 30, in square 269; part of lot 6, square 925; lots 16 and 17, square 1098; one acre near the junction of the Chain Bridge, Tumlawn, and Loughborough roads, on north line of Pickrell's land; one-half acre on Grant road, between Tennallytown and Brightwood, adjoining land of John Noonan, south side; one acre on Queen's Chapel road, adjoining lands of George W. Utermehle; a lot forty feet square, formerly the Georgetown powder-house property, one hundred perches west of the Saint Alban's church; the old fish-market lot in Georgetown, northwest corner of Potomac and Grace streets. The proceeds of the sale of the foregoing property shall be exclusively invested in sites for public schools or in the erection or purchase of school buildings, and shall be used for no other purpose whatever: Provided, That if, in the opinion of said commissioners, the highest bid made at public sale for any or all of said pieces of property, or parts thereof, is not a full and fair price for the same, the said commissioners shall have the right to reject such bid or bids and to annul said sale or sales, and to sell and convey any or all of said pieces of property, or parts thereof, at private sale, at a price exceeding the bid or bids made at public auction.

SEC. 2. That the commissioners may in like manner sell and convey all that portion of lot 11, in square 481, purchased by them from J. Ford Thompson, lying north of the center line of the north wall of the new police station-house extended, being 28 feet 9 inches front, more or less, and shall apply the proceeds, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to the completion and furnishing said station-house, including grading of ground and the erection of a stable thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the sale of certain lots and parts of lots in Washington and elsewhere in the District of Columbia, which in the shifting of population or for other reasons are no longer needed. The lots and parts of lots mentioned in the first section were with one single exception acquired for school purposes, but they are no longer required for the purpose of their original acquisition. The other piece of property is a surplus market site which belongs to the District, but is not needed now for the purpose of a market, there being ample provision therefor. If sold it becomes at once tax-paying property, and the proceeds of the sale will be used for the construction of school-houses. The property in the second section of the bill was acquired originally for a station-house in the sixth precinct. In order to get a desirable piece of property the commissioners bought more ground than was necessary. They desire to sell the surplus ground and use the proceeds of the sale for the original purpose of the appropriation.

The proceeds of the sale of the lots in the first section will be used for the erection of school buildings.

By instruction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I offer the following amendments to section 2 of this bill:

Strike out the word "the," in line 7, and for the word "completion" substitute the word "complete;" omit the words "and furnishing," in line 8, and strike out all after the word station-house, in lines 8 and 9; so it will read:

SEC. 2. That the commissioners may in like manner sell and convey all that portion of lot 11, in square 481, purchased by them from J. Ford Thompson, lying north of the center line of the north wall of the new police station-house extended, being twenty-eight feet nine inches front, more or less, and shall apply the proceeds, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to complete said station-house.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest an amendment in line 31 of section 1. It is there provided that if, in the opinion of said commissioners, the highest bid made at public sale for any or all of said pieces of property, or parts thereof, is not a full and fair price for the same, the said commissioners shall have the right to reject such bid or bids and to annul said sale or sales, and to sell and convey any or all of said pieces of property, or parts thereof, at private sale, at a price exceeding the bid or bids made at public auction.

I move to insert, in line 31 after the word "a," "full and fair;" so it will read: "At a full and fair price exceeding the bid or bids made at public auction."

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment, but I am not authorized to accept it.

Mr. COBB. I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from West Virginia whether the committee have detailed information in reference to these lots and parts of lots which it is proposed by this bill to sell. I know the commissioners, when I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations, desired to sell one-half of Corcoran Square, the most eligible site in the city, for a high school, and it was all I could do, as gentlemen who were in Congress at that time will remember, to prevent the sale of that property, upon which afterward was erected a fine high-school building. It is known to every one who has examined the premises that it is the most eligible site for a public-school building in the District of Columbia.

If the committee have given this subject a careful examination and are of the opinion that the present commissioners are not disposed to favor the requests of gentlemen who live in the neighborhood of these several lots and parts of lots and who desire to bid on them, then I will say that the recommendation may be all right; but from my experience I am quite sure that we should take no action for the sale of this property until the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia have made full and complete examination and can say from their own personal knowledge this property will not be used in the future for the public purposes for which it was originally purchased.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I have here a statement as to each piece of property, and I will answer the gentleman as to any one of them upon which he desires information. So far as these school sites are concerned, if he will turn to page 13 of the Report of the School Trustees of the District of Columbia he will find they recommend the sale of these pieces of property which are not now in use or adapted to school purposes. So far as the other pieces are concerned, they are surplus property and are not required for any present or future needs in those localities.

Mr. COBB. I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that I know nothing myself about this property and have simply propounded a question to the gentleman from West Virginia having the bill in charge to ascertain whether the committee is advised fully as to the probability of this property being used in the future. If it can be, and there is any probability it will be needed, then in my judgment it will not be sold. If, however, it is so located that probably it will never be needed, then the sale might safely take place. I wish to know whether the committee were advised personally on that subject.

Mr. FOLLETT. The property referred to in the second section of the bill is property which was purchased by the commissioners of the District of Columbia for the purpose of erecting a new station-house, as provided for in the District of Columbia appropriation bill of that year. This property contained at the time a surplus in excess of the land needed for their purposes, but they were able to obtain it for as low a price as any piece of property in the precinct where they wanted to erect the station-house, and where there would have been no surplus. This piece they acquired at 50 cents a square foot. The owner of the property declined to sell to them unless they took the entire tract; or if he did sell a portion of the property, the price asked was nearly the amount necessary to purchase the whole lot. Therefore, as a matter of economy, they purchased all this lot of ground. Now they ask simply to sell this surplus for which they have no use, and which they believe can be sold nearly or quite equal to about $1,500, which amount would be necessary to build the extension of the station-house that was ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I ask the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ST. MARK'S P. E. CHURCH.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move to take up from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 5828) for the relief of the St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act a certain piece of land situated in the city of Washington, D. C., known as lots 9 and 11 in square 783 of the plan of that city, and occupied by the church known as Saint Mark's Protestant Episcopal church, and all the buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto and used in connection therewith, in the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national, municipal, or county; and all taxes, together with the interest and penalties, now due and unpaid upon said property shall be, and they are hereby, remitted.

Mr. COBB. I would like to inquire what amount of real estate is attached to this property or belongs to this church.

Mr. SPRIGGS. It is a small lot, only such as is necessary for the purposes of the church. The foundation prepared upon the lot covers the whole of it. This bill is in all respects similar to the one passed at the last House.

Mr. COBB. If there is no real estate occupied unnecessarily, I do not see any objection to the bill.

Mr. SPRIGGS. None at all. The foundation of the church covers the whole property. The only thing is that it lay some little while after it was acquired for church purposes before they commenced building, for the reason that the church was not able to proceed with the erection of the building.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me ask the gentleman from New York a question: This seems to single out, as I understand from the reading of the bill, this one particular church—specifies one church—exempting its property from taxation. How about the others?

Mr. SPRIGGS. All churches are exempted from taxation under the general law. The only thing in reference to this is that the commissioners have held, inasmuch as the property has not been occupied as a church, that during the building of the church they should not be exempt from taxes. The committee think differently.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This relieves the back taxes simply?

Mr. COBB. The future taxes as well.

Mr. SPRIGGS. The taxes in future would be exempt under the general law. This exempts the taxes due, back taxes. Under the law when property is used and occupied for church purposes it is exempt from taxes. The committee think that they have used and occupied the property for that purpose when they purchased it for the purpose of erecting a church building.

Unless some one desires to ask some other question I shall move the previous question.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a bill similar to that just passed. I refer to House bill 7935, for the relief of the Church of the Ascension.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act a certain piece of land in the city of Washington, D. C., known as lots 1, 2, and 3, in square 282, and owned and occupied by the Church of the Ascension, and all the buildings and grounds or property appurtenant thereto and used in connection therewith, in the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national, municipal, or county, and all taxes and assessments, together with the interest and penalties, now due and unpaid upon said property shall be, and they are hereby, remitted.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I see that this bill mentions about three lots, as I understand it, that are proposed to be exempt from taxes. What amount of ground do these three lots contain?

Mr. SPRIGGS. The Church of the Ascension occupies all three of the lots, and the only tax due upon it is from the time it was purchased to the completion of the building—a little less than a year, I think.

Mr. COBB. What I want to know is whether or not there is more ground here than is necessary for the purposes of a church.

Mr. SPRIGGS. No, sir.

Mr. COBB. I am opposed to giving to any church organization more ground exempt from taxation than is necessary for its building and for church purposes merely.

Mr. SPRIGGS. This property is all covered by the church.

Mr. COBB. If it covers all the ground, that is satisfactory.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. I would like to ask my colleague a question. During the time these taxes were accruing was the title in the corporation or the individual?

Mr. SPRIGGS. It was in the church. They purchased the property for church purposes.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. And the tax prior to that had been all paid?

Mr. SPRIGGS. Yes, sir. This tax refers only to the time between the acquisition of the property for church purposes and the completion of the building, as I have said; less than a year, I think.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LUTHERAN STATUE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4088) to incorporate the Lutheran Statue Association to erect and maintain a monument or statue in memory of Martin Luther in the District of Columbia, with an amendment by the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill as follows:

Provided, That this act may be modified, repealed, or amended whenever Congress may see fit to do so.

Mr. MCOMAS. The amendment is with respect to the exemption from taxation. The land itself, the angle on which the statue stands, was already exempt by law on account of being church property. The general law provides that all exemptions or any other provisions should be repealable, alterable, or amendable at the pleasure of Congress. This amendment the committee apprehend is only harmless surplusage; but they ask that it be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

WATER SUPPLY IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2551) to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the time fixed by the act entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1882, within which owners of or parties interested in lands condemned or taken under the provisions of said act may accept the appraised value made or to be hereafter made under said act, or owners or persons interested in such lands who have declined or may hereafter decline to accept the appraised value of such lands, and have elected or may elect to file a petition in the Court of Claims under the provisions of said act, be, and the same is hereby, extended for one year from the passage of this act, notwithstanding the limitation provided by said act.

Mr. WILSON, of West of Virginia. This is the same as a House bill which has been reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia favorably, and is now on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

This bill is rendered necessary under the act passed July 15, 1882, to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, which act provided for the condemnation of property for the extension of the aqueduct. The act required that the Secretary of War should make out a map of the pieces of property necessary for the extension proposed. This map was to be filed with the Attorney-General, who was forthwith to advertise in the papers for owners to come forward with their abstracts of title. Commissioners were to be appointed to appraise the property of these respective parties or their interest; and upon this appraisal being made, and satisfactory abstracts of title being presented, the Attorney-General was authorized to tender to them the amount of the appraisal. They might accept it or they might decline to accept it and go into the Court of Claims.

It was found when the Attorney-General took up this work that some pieces of property were so involved that the title required so much examination that he was unable to complete the work assigned him within the year.

The original act provided that these parties must accept the amount tendered them or file their petition within the year, or be forever barred of any remedy whatever; and that the property should then vest in the United States. It has so happened that a very large part of the property taken had vested in the United States before it was in the power of the Attorney-General to complete these investigations. He therefore applied to Congress last July to extend the period fully six months; and he has written a second communication, advising the passage of this bill as one of justice to those parties whose property has been taken and who have as yet had no opportunity to accept the appraisal, because the appraisal has not been made, and they have had no opportunity to decline it and go into the Court of Claims.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF LIQUORS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 7556) to regulate the sale and manufacture of spirituous and malt liquors in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That wholesale dealers in distilled, malt, or fermented liquors, wines, or cordials shall pay $100 annually: Provided, That this license shall not authorize any person to sell such liquors, wines, or cordials in less quantities than one pint, nor to be drunk upon the premises where sold.

SEC. 2. That every person engaged in the business of manufacturing brewed or malt liquors for sale shall pay $250 annually; and under their license as brewers shall be allowed to sell malt liquors in any quantity, at their brewery premises, without other license.

SEC. 3. That every person engaged in the business of distilling or manufacturing for sale spirituous or intoxicating liquors shall pay $200 annually.

SEC. 4. That rectifiers shall pay $50 annually, in addition to the license as wholesale dealer.

SEC. 5. That the proprietors of bar-rooms shall pay $150 annually. Every place where distilled, malt, or fermented liquors, wines, or cordials are sold to be drunk on the premises, or in quantities less than one pint, shall be regarded as a bar-room. And the possession of malt, distilled, fermented, or any intoxicating liquors, with the means and appliances for carrying on the business of disposing of the same to be drunk where sold, or a single sale of such liquors in quantities less than a pint, or to be drunk on the premises, shall constitute the premises a bar-room within the meaning of this act; and it shall be the duty of the proprietor of every such place to deposit with the collector of taxes the amount of his license-fee with his application for license, and also present to the commissioners the written permission of a majority of the persons owning real estate and of a majority of the residents keeping house on the side of the square where it is desired to locate such business, and on the side of the square fronting opposite the same; and such license shall not be issued until approved by the commissioners, nor to any bar-room located or to be located within four hundred feet of any school building owned by the District of Columbia, unless such bar-room be carried on by hotel-keepers for the accommodation of their guests; and no such liquors shall be sold except in compliance with the provisions of this act, nor to minors nor intoxicated persons, nor on Sunday; and every bar or other place where liquors are usually sold shall be kept closed on Sunday during the day or night, and all such places shall be kept closed each and every day between 12 o'clock midnight and 4 o'clock in the morning: Provided, however, That where during the year no complaint has been made against a license issued under this act by a majority of the property-holders and residents, such proprietor shall not be required to file every year with his application for license such written permission of persons owning real estate, and residents; but if such complaint has been made, the proprietor of such bar-room shall be required to obtain anew the written consent of such owners of real estate, and residents, as is herein required of him.

SEC. 6. That licenses granted in pursuance of this act may be transferred to persons to continue the same business in the same house, or to remove a place of business, under the same regulations as the original license. All transfers shall be certified by the assessor.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of every person who is required by the provisions of this act to have a license to keep the same at all times displayed in a conspicuous position in his place of business, and if he has no place of business, to exhibit the same on demand of the proper officer; and it is hereby made the duty of the police court, upon the application of the mayor of police, accompanied by an affidavit of any person stating that he has good ground to believe and does believe that any person required by this act to have a license is doing business without such license, designating the place, to issue a warrant to the mayor of police authorizing him, unless a proper license is produced, to close up such place of business, who shall thereupon execute such warrant and close such place, and report thereon directly to said police court, which, upon notice to the alleged delinquent, shall promptly hear and determine the guilt or innocence of the party accused, and, if guilty, impose the punishment prescribed herein; and the commissioners of the District shall have power to close all places where intoxicating liquors are sold whenever, in their opinion, the preservation of public order makes the exercise of such power necessary.

SEC. 8. That every person liable to a license tax under this act who shall fail to pay the same before engaging in the business for which the license may be required shall, for each offense, pay a fine equal to the license tax imposed, and, in addition thereto, not less than five nor more than fifty dollars.

SEC. 9. That any person having obtained a license and violating any of the provisions of this act shall be liable for each violation thereof to a fine not exceeding $—, and, in addition thereto, his license may be revoked by the commissioners at their discretion; and it is hereby made the special duty of the police department to promptly arrest and bring before the proper officers all persons who may violate any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. That the police court shall, upon information duly filed by the attorney of the District, his deputy or special assistant, or upon complaint duly made before the judge thereof for that purpose, issue a warrant against any person for the violation of any of the provisions of this act, which warrant may be addressed to the mayor of police and made returnable before the police court. Such judge issuing such warrant shall keep a docket stating the names of the persons issued against, the date, to whom directed, for what offense, and on whose information.

SEC. 11. That in any case of appeal from the decision of the police court to the criminal court of said District, in which the defendant shall, on appeal, be duly convicted of any violation of any of the provisions of this act, and shall fail immediately to pay such fine, penalty, or forfeiture imposed by law for such offense, such person shall be committed to the work-house till such fine or penalty and costs thereon be paid; but in no case, in the event of non-payment, shall such imprisonment be for a period of less than five days nor more than one hundred days for any one offense.

SEC. 12. That the provisions of this act shall take effect upon its passage except as to the amounts paid for licenses; and all laws and ordinances relating to the sale in the District of Columbia of distilled, malt, or fermented liquors, wines, or cordials, either by wholesale or retail, in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed; but no pending prosecutions for violation of existing laws and ordinances shall be affected by this act.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SPRIGGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7556) to regulate the manufacture and sale of spirituous and malt liquors in the District of Columbia, have had the same under consideration, and report thereon as follows:

The bill under consideration will materially increase the revenue of the District, that the police regulations connected therewith and the rules for enforcing the observance of the law are greatly simplified and the efficiency of the service increased, and insures more speedy and certain punishment for violation of law. The committee report the bill back to the House, and ask that the same be passed.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after section 9, as a new section, the following:

"That all laws or parts of laws imposing a tax, penalty, or license upon any commercial traveler or travelers, manufacturers, or their agents, who sell by sample in the District of Columbia be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. COOK. I wish to offer an amendment at a point in the bill before that.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRICE. Must the amendments be offered to each section as the sections are read in order, or may we offer amendments to any part of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those amendments which apply to the earlier sections of the bill should be considered first.

Mr. PRICE. Then I desire to offer an amendment to the first section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I desire to make a point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SPRIGGS. It is not germane to this bill, and it is therefore not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the disposition of this cut off amendments from the preceding sections?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not. The Chair will hear gentlemen on the point of order while the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] is preparing his amendment to the first section, and then the amendments will be considered in the order of sections to which they apply.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I only want to say with regard to this point of order that I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] is not germane, because this is a bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of spirituous and malt liquors in the District of Columbia, and the gentleman's amendment relates to an entirely different matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPRIGGS] that he withhold his statement concerning the point of order until the preceding sections are perfected.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we read and consider this bill by sections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed to the first section. To what section does the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] apply?

Mr. PRICE. I sent up an amendment, with a note at the bottom saying, in substance, that "I desire the foregoing language to be added to the second section."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 strike out "one" and insert "two."

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, that is not my amendment. My amendment is simply to add to section 2 the following language:

Provided, That such persons shall have complied with all the conditions and requirements of section 5 of this act.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] applies to the second section. The amendments to the preceding section will be first disposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, section 1, strike out "one" and insert "two;" making it read: "That wholesale dealers in distilled, malt, or fermented liquors, wines, or cordials shall pay $300 annually."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 20.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am entirely satisfied, from the indications I have observed, that there is going to be too much of a fight on this bill to pass it to-night, and I therefore withdraw it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Can that be done?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York desire to withdraw the bill?

Mr. SPRIGGS. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw this bill for the reason I have stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair put the gentleman's request to the House, but objection was made.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I did not understand that there was any objection made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the question again. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPRIGGS] asks unanimous consent to withdraw this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. COOK. I object.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Is that in order, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

The question was taken on the motion to lay on the table; and on a division there were—ayes 25, nays 19.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint tellers, and will ask the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. COBB, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. SPRIGGS, to take their places as tellers.

Mr. COBB. I withdraw the point.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I renew it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from New York, Mr. SKINNER, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. SPRIGGS, will take their places as tellers.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, there is no disposition to prevent the passage of this bill. Some of us think the license should be higher, but if we can not get it raised as high as we think it ought to be, we shall not therefore oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. VANCE. There is evidently not a quorum in the House.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, as to lay a bill on the table is virtually to kill it, I will withdraw the point of order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering District of Columbia business.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 25, noes 6.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC AT GEORGETOWN.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move to take up the bill H. R. 7376, which was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia as a substitute for Senate bill 1477.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7376) to amend an act approved February 23, 1881, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to raise the question of consideration on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] objects to the consideration of this bill; and under the rule the committee must rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. McMILLIN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having reached the bill (H. R. 7376) to amend an act approved February 23, 1881, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," objection had been made to the consideration of the bill, whereupon the committee rose for the purpose of reporting the objection to the House in accordance with the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House instruct the Committee of the Whole to consider this bill?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 20, noes 14.

Mr. WELLER. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. WELLER, and the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. BARBOUR.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will not the gentleman allow me to explain what the Committee on the District of Columbia desire with reference to this matter?

Mr. WELLER. If the gentleman will withdraw this bill and go on with something else, it will be all right; otherwise I propose to stop right here until to-morrow morning, if necessary.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman from Iowa withdraw his objection if we agree that any money expended under this bill shall be payable in standard silver dollars? [Laughter.]

Mr. WELLER. Bless your soul, no! It is too late to do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELFORD. If this thing is going on we had better adjourn at once. I make that motion.

Mr. BARBOUR. I hope the House will not adjourn.

The motion of Mr. BELFORD was not agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am willing to withdraw the proposition for the consideration of the bridge bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF LIQUORS.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I now move to take up again the license bill which was before the House a short time ago—the bill (H. R. 7556) to regulate the manufacture and sale of spirituous and malt liquors in the District of Columbia. I understand from gentlemen here that they do not really oppose the bill; they only desire to raise the fees and to take the sense of the House upon that question. It seems to me the House as now constituted will have no difficulty in acting upon the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill to which the gentleman refers has been laid on the table.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table.

The motion of Mr. PERKINS was agreed to.

The question recurring upon the motion to lay the bill on the table, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is now again before the House for consideration. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. PRICE], which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 2 insert:

"Provided, That such person shall have complied with all the conditions and requirements of section 5 of this act."

Mr. PRICE. If there is no objection to this amendment, I have no desire to make an argument in its favor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 of section 1, strike out the word "one" and insert "two."

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, I offered this amendment—

Mr. SPRIGGS. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to say a word on this question, and will then yield to him.

The present law requires from this class of persons a license fee of $50. We have raised it to $100. This has been done after full consideration in the committee and upon consultation with the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and with persons interested in this question. We thought this the best conclusion that could be reached with respect to this kind of a license.

As to other license fees, in one case where the fee has been $100 we have increased it to $250; and in every other case I think the license fee, as fixed by this bill, is double the old license fee. It was the opinion of the committee, the commissioners, and everybody interested, so far as we could learn, that this measure was the best that could be devised for the present—better than any measure fixing a larger sum. It is our belief that this measure will increase the revenues of the District and insure a more speedy and certain punishment for violations of law.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Is the gentleman able to state what is the present tax in this District each year on account of pauperism?

Mr. SPRIGGS. I can not tell.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Can the gentleman state what it is on account of the crime?

Mr. SPRIGGS. I can not.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Can the gentleman tell what is the number of wholesale dealers in liquor?

Mr. SPRIGGS. I am not prepared to answer that question. I am prepared to say there are enough liquor dealers, both retail and wholesale, and that there is sufficient pauperism and crime in the District of Columbia. I do not think, however, this bill will increase either.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, this amendment submitted by myself was offered not in hostility to the bill, but in support of it.

It seems to me clear that something of the nature of this bill is necessary to the good order and good government of the District of Columbia. I am assured of that fact, in addition to my own opinion, by the judgment of the commissioners of the District. It simply appears now that the license of $100 imposed upon wholesale dealers of intoxicating liquors is altogether too small a sum. It should be at least $200. I think in looking through the bill if the license sought to be exacted from dealers by this bill was doubled all the way through it would still be too small a sum.

There is a large number of the lower order of liquor establishments in this District which it seems to me should be taxed out of existence entirely. There is no business which can afford to contribute to the revenues of the Government and the expenses of the Government as well as the class dealt with in this bill. There is no purpose on the part of those who agree with me to interpose any objection to the bill. If we can not secure the amendment we offer we expect to vote for the bill.

Mr. BELFORD. I move to strike out the last word. There is no mistaking the fact, Mr. Speaker, that there is a growing sentiment throughout this country in favor of temperance, especially as represented by the distinguished statesman from Kansas, Mr. St. John. I am casting no reflection on St. John, of Kansas, or any other St. John who existed there or in Palestine. [Laughter.] But I think we all recognize one fact, and that is that people will eat bread, drink water, and drink whisky. There is not any doubt about that fact, and you have got to regulate the appetite. Now I will vote for any bill making it a felony for any man who sells one drop of adulterated liquor. [Laughter.] No man has any more right to adulterate the liquor I desire to drink than he has to adulterate the bread that I desire to eat, and this is the sum and substance of the whole temperance question that will be considered to-day and for generations hereafter.

Noah got drunk. Christ manufactured wine. Everybody knows people will drink liquor. Now, let us get to the substance of the whole question and declare openly, positively, and vigorously that any man who sells one drop of adulterated liquor in this country, liquor corrupted or poisoned, shall be regarded as a felon and besent to the penitentiary. [Laughter and applause.]

A MEMBER. For a night.

Mr. BELFORD. For all time. [Laughter.] Upon no other theory can you get through. It is a flimsy pretext to impose a license tax of $100 a year. A license for what? A license to poison and ruin thousands of men. A license to disorganize and disarrange millions of families out of the 55,000,000 of people existing in this country.

If we are going to legislate on the temperance principle let us legislate upon a theory that the practical judgment of this world will recognize and respect, and that is if a man sells liquor he shall sell pure liquor just as the man who sells flour shall sell unpoisoned flour. [Laughter and applause.] You smiling gentlemen go down to Welcker's and drink twelve courses of liquors, commencing with a sup of brandy, then a drink of whisky, next a glass of Sauterne, after that some Johannisberg, and after you have gone through all these twelve courses you come here with a bill of this character, in the name of righteousness and godliness and decency, and preach sobriety to us. [Laughter.] Why don't you stand up with me and say that any rum-seller who sells wine or whisky or Sauterne or Johannisberg, or any other wine or liquor—and I have been acquainted with them all [laughter]—that any one who sells adulterated wines or liquors shall be sent to the penitentiary, and not quibble over a little license provision of $100 per year and kill 100,000 men. [Laughter and applause.]

The question recurred on Mr. Cook's amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 16.

Mr. GUENTHER. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. GUENTHER and Mr. Cook.

Mr. GUENTHER. I move that the House adjourn, as there is no quorum present. We might as well adjourn now, for you will have to do so unless you get a quorum here.

The House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on Mr. Cook's amendment.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 17, noes 22. So the amendment was disagreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment of Mr. SKINNER, of New York, as follows:

Insert after section 9 as a new section the following:

Mr. PRICE. I desire to offer an amendment before that to section 5.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will first read the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words:

Provided, however, That where during the year no complaint has been made against a license issued under this act by a majority of the property-holders and residents, such proprietor shall not be required to file every year with his application for license such written permission of persons owning real estate, and residents; but if such complaint has been made, the proprietor of such bar-room shall be required to obtain anew the written consent of such owners of real estate, and residents, as is herein required of him.

Mr. PRICE. I am satisfied the purpose of the gentlemen who framed this bill is in the interest of good government. I think they made a mistake, and it needs only to call the attention of the committee to the amendment I have offered to secure its adoption. I, too, am in favor of this bill. I want it passed in as perfect a form as it can be made. I wish simply to say this: The existing law is that a person who wishes to establish a place for the retail of liquor must secure the indorsement of two-thirds of the residents, the property-holders on the block.

Now, I am willing that that law should remain as it is. But this is a departure—this proviso to which I refer, and which I wish to strike out in this bill. It is a departure in this, that it places the community on the defensive, and unless they shall enter formal protests against the allowance of the license, then the license becomes perpetual so far as the consent of the property-owners is concerned.

If, then, it is good policy to require this exercise of industry or effort on the part of persons who wish to sell liquors, I think it good policy to continue them in that practice, and consult on each occasion when a license is required the new residents, the new occupants of adjacent property who may locate directly upon the block interested during the course of the year within which the license runs, to ascertain their wishes in the matter, and whether a continuance shall be had. That is my idea, if not the idea of the committee, who may not agree with me in this respect.

Mr. GUENTHER. Let me state to my friend that this has been inserted by the request of the commissioners themselves, who say that this renewal imposes upon them a tremendous amount of work every year. In case a person has obtained the permission of the residents of the property, and the license has been granted, and no complaint has been lodged against him during the course of the year, what objection can there be to continuing the license until the complaint is made? It is all under the discretion and direction of the commissioners themselves, and they can grant the license or not as the case may be, or revoke it if complaint is made.

Mr. PRICE. In answer to the strictures of my colleague from Wisconsin I desire to say that perhaps I understand as much of the working of this machinery, after twenty-five or thirty active years in this fight, as the commissioners of the District of Columbia. And permit me to say, further, if there is no other objection that can be urged except the imposition of a little additional work upon the officers of this city, it does not counterbalance the importance of correcting as far as possible the evil influences arising from the traffic in which these persons are engaged, and which, if I had the power, I should stamp out of existence entirely.

Mr. GUENTHER. It imposes a great deal of unnecessary work upon the commissioners.

Mr. PRICE. I say they can well afford, those who desire to carry on the business, to ask the consent of the people once a year whether it shall be tolerated or not.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Speaker, I think the safeguard that is in the present law ought to remain to the effect that the people living in the neighborhood where spirits are sold ought to have a voice in the matter of granting the license. The liquor dealer is protected already as far as he can be protected by the license being granted to him, and it is as little as the Congress of the United States can do for people living in the vicinity to permit them to have a voice every year in settling the matter. I think it therefore proper that this proviso should be stricken out.

Mr. YORK. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. YORK. The hour of 10 o'clock has arrived, and, as I understand, that is the hour fixed for taking the recess until to-morrow morning.

Mr. RANDALL. There was no order fixed for taking a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the hour at which the recess was taken in the afternoon until the night session commenced is shown by the Journal, but the Journal does not show that any hour was fixed for the House to close its session to-night.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I think this proviso ought to go out of the bill. No objectionable party, according to this proviso, could be stopped from the sale of intoxicating liquors in any place unless some one should go around and interest himself or herself in securing a complaint against him, which of necessity must be signed by a majority of the property-holders in that block.

Mr. GUENTHER. The complaint of any person would be sufficient.

Mr. PETERS. No; not as I understand this bill. It provides—

That where during the year no complaint has been made against a license issued under this act by a majority of the property-holders and residents such proprietor shall not be required to file every year with his application for license such written permission of persons owning real estate and residents.

There is no comma or anything in that sentence as it appears herein this bill to show that less than a majority of the property-holders and residents can stop such traffic.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. There is a penalty fixed, if the gentleman will observe section 9, for a violation of the provisions of this act, and the license may be revoked at the discretion of the commissioners.

Mr. SPRIGGS. For the purpose of getting along with this matter and making it as little objectionable as possible, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. GUENTHER. I can not agree to that.

Mr. PERKINS. The amendment ought to be accepted.

Mr. GUENTHER. I object.

The question being taken on the adoption of the amendment, there were—ayes 18, noes 4.

Mr. GUENTHER. No quorum. Pending that, I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. GUENTHER and Mr. SPRIGGS were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 12, noes 18.

Mr. GUENTHER. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. Before calling the question of a quorum—

Mr. GIBSON. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will allow me to call his attention to section 7 of this act I am satisfied he will withdraw his objection. In that section it is provided that—

The commissioners of the District shall have power to close all places where intoxicating liquors are sold whenever, in their opinion, the preservation of public order makes the exercise of such power necessary.

I was going on to say that the commissioners can close any place on the complaint of anybody when the dealer is found guilty of selling contrary to the license or contrary to good order and morality in that neighborhood; and I will suggest to the gentleman, therefore, and to the friends of what is known as the temperance cause, that it is evident this bill has gone as far as it can be made go to restrict the sale or traffic in intoxicating liquors. They must either pass the bill as it is or it will be all defeated; and it will leave the sale of liquor in such condition as not to bring to the District 20 per cent. of the amount this bill brings and there will not be near the number of restrictions this bill imposes upon the traffic.

Therefore any member who desires to put restrictions upon the traffic or to increase the license derived therefrom must either make up his mind to accept this bill or let it go without the restrictions this bill imposes. I appeal to gentlemen to let the bill go as it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing before the House. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by striking out section 6, and upon that I desire to be heard for a moment; and it is in the interest of harmony only that I am induced to say anything further. The gentleman in charge of the bill and myself have come to what appeared to be a satisfactory conclusion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Whenever any member calls no quorum, and on a vote by tellers a quorum does not appear, should not the Chair take cognizance of that fact?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that the point of no quorum having voted was made; thereupon the Chair appointed tellers, as it was the duty of the Chair to do. The tellers reported the result. The point that no quorum had voted was not further insisted on and the Chair, therefore, could do nothing but announce the result of the vote.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I submit it was the duty of the Chair to take cognizance of the fact that a quorum did not vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not the custom when the point of no quorum is not insisted on for the Chair to take cognizance of the fact that a quorum has not voted. It is within the power of any member to insist upon the point if he sees fit to do so. The gentleman from Michigan himself could have done so if he had been so inclined.

Mr. PRICE. I think we have come to a conclusion that is satisfactory at least to most of us, and I hope it will be satisfactory to all gentlemen present. The first proposition we made was that of increasing the license. We acquiesced in that. The next proposition we made was to add a condition to section 2, which gentlemen accepted. A third proposition was to strike out the proviso at the close of section 5 of the bill. To this gentlemen acceded, and now that goes out by unanimous consent.

Now we want to strike out section 6. To this they object. But it is proposed by some of the friends of the bill to add these words: "with the consent" or "under the direction of the District commissioners." If that is satisfactory, I believe every objection on the part of friend and foe will be obviated and we will pass the bill.

Mr. SMALLS. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after section 5.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Section 5 has been passed from, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] moves to strike out section 6.

Mr. PRICE. I withdraw the motion to strike out, understanding that it will be amended on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] by the addition of certain words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SMALLS].

Mr. SMALLS. I move to amend by adding after section 5 what I send to the desk.

Mr. GUENTHER. I make the point of order that that has been passed.

Mr. SMALLS. Then I will have to move that it be added to section 6. I ask gentlemen to let the amendment be read, and I think they will all agree to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any restaurant keeper or proprietor, proprietors or keepers of eating-houses, ice-cream saloons, or places where soda-water is kept for sale, or the keeper or proprietor of any public place whatsoever refusing to sell or serve to any well-behaved person, without regard to race or color, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than fifty nor more than one hundred dollars for each and every such refusal: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall be enforced by information in the police court of the District of Columbia, filed on behalf thereof by its proper attorney or attorneys, subject to appeal by either party to the criminal court of the District of Columbia, in the same manner as is now or may be hereafter provided for the enforcement of the District fines and penalties under the ordinances and law.

Mr. GUENTHER. I make the point of order that that is the substance of a bill pending. I am not averse to this amendment personally, but it is liable to the point of order.

Mr. SMALLS. Whether or not the amendment be the substance of a bill pending, I submit that we are now engaged in considering a bill providing for licenses in the District, and I deem that this is the proper place for this amendment to come in. It is for that reason I have offered it, and I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] will withdraw the point of order. If it is not withdrawn gentlemen may as well withdraw the bill, as I will insist on a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] makes the point of order on the amendment that it is the substance of another bill pending before the House. That fact not being denied, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I would say to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SMALLS] that that law already exists in the District of Columbia as to every party obliged to obtain a public license.

Mr. SMALLS. That law I do not think exists in the District. If it does it is constantly violated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. SMALLS. Then we may as well stop, as it will be necessary to have a quorum.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend by adding to section 6 these words, "and have the sanction of the commissioners."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. It is understood the proviso to section 5 has, by order of the House, been eliminated?

Mr. GUENTHER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GUENTHER. Is it in order for me to withdraw the point of order I made to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SMALLS]? If so, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The section has been passed from.

Mr. SMALLS. Then I understand the Chair to say the point of order can not be withdrawn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The section had been passed. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] was recognized and another amendment had been acted upon by the House.

Mr. SMALLS. If that section was passed I suppose I have a right to put this into another section?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is an amendment pending to the next section. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After section 9 insert as a new section the following:

"That all laws, or parts of laws, imposing a tax, penalty, or license upon any commercial traveler, or travelers, or manufacturers or their agents, who sell by sample in the District of Columbia, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I desire to say to the gentleman who has raised the point of order on this amendment that if he desires this bill to pass he must withdraw that point of order. This is a bill to raise revenue in the District of Columbia. It provides that by paying $150 into somebody's treasury in the District of Columbia a man may keep a bar-room no matter what evil he may thereby do. Now, I say that a provision to wipe from the statute-book an infamous tax which has come down from old and barbarous times is germane to such a bill—a tax which applies to 150,000 or more people in the United States who are commercial travelers, who come from every section of this Union to the capital of the country, and who can not come here in a fair and honorable manner to sell their machinery, or their groceries, or their manufactured articles by sample, unless they pay a tax of $200 into the treasury of the District of Columbia.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] in the course of the debate this evening, in alluding to a bill in reference to real estate in Washington, said truly that there is not a city in this Union so lightly taxed as this magnificent city of Washington, and yet we refuse to allow our constituents to come here and sell their goods in a fair, honest, open manner. Many hundreds of them do evade the law by taking their sachels in through the back doors and selling on the sly, or going to certain persons who, in spite of the law, will give them a card and allow them to stay for one day by paying $5. And what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] said in reference to the laws here relating to taxes on lands is true of several of these laws of the District, that they are relics of old laws of the States of Maryland and Virginia; yet we, as representatives of the people, have not yet had the courage to wipe them out, and these commissioners of the District of Columbia hang on with a tenacity worthy of a better cause to this particular law which the courts had declared unconstitutional.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I will.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest to the gentleman that without a provision allowing these "drummers" to sell by license in this District every sale they would make would be in violation of law, and they would be liable to a legal penalty. It has been so decided in nearly all the States in cases where licenses are required, and it was recently so decided by the United States district court in Tennessee. That decision applied expressly to the revenue laws, the court holding that wherever a license was required to carry on a business, the sale in any other place, or the sale by express to be paid for "C. O. D.," was contrary to the license law, and the party must have a license in order to make such sales.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I can not now cite the page, but I can by a little investigation refer the gentleman to a decision of the highest court in this land, made, I believe, in relation to a case arising in his own State, to the effect that no State has a right to enforce a law of this character.

Mr. GIBSON. But that was not a case where a license was required.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the point of order is the matter now up for consideration, the Chair desires to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] upon that, and not upon the merits of the question.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I referred to all that I had to say in relation to this point of order. I said that this was a bill to regulate the granting of licenses for the sale of liquor, and for the purpose of raising revenue in the District of Columbia.

Now, the amendment which I have offered refers to the removal of a tax imposed for revenue—not raised from the same source, perhaps, but going into the same treasury, and to be expended like other taxes for general public purposes. The reason I have offered the amendment in this manner and at this time is that three years ago this month the same proposition was offered as an amendment to a bill which was then being considered. That bill went out of this Chamber, and, I believe, has never been heard of since; so that we have been unable to get any action. A year ago this same provision was added, with the consent of the gentleman now in charge of this bill, to a bill to regulate the police force of this city. That bill passed this House and went elsewhere, but we got no relief.

Now, I say that, as representatives of intelligent constituencies, we can not afford to build a Chinese wall around this capital, which we, by our votes, have rendered the most beautiful city in the country, if not in the world; we can not afford to build a Chinese wall around this capital city and say to our constituents who manufacture and sell different articles of commerce that they shall not come here and dispose of their goods. A gentleman in my own town writes to me that he dare not come here with samples of his machinery unless he pays into the District treasury a tax of $200 a year.

A MEMBER. That is the law generally.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. No, sir; it is not the law, except in two or three States. The States of Virginia, North Carolina, and Texas, and the District of Columbia are the places, as I understand, where such laws exist. Washington, D. C., and the States of Virginia, North Carolina, and Texas are represented to me by business men of my own city as the four places which they dare not enter for the purpose of carrying on their business until they have taken out in advance a license for a year at the rate of $200. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to omit any effort in my power to wipe out such a provision from the statute-book.

Mr. SPRIGGS. My friend and I do not differ very much on the merits of this question. As he has stated, he proposed at the last session an amendment of this kind to a bill then pending, which was accepted substantially as offered, but in the Senate it was struck out.

But the point I raise here—it seems to me there can not be any doubt about it—is that this is a bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of spirituous and malt liquors—

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. The amendment will not hurt the bill at all.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I do not know as to that. The argument upon the merits of this question is not all on one side. The merchants of this city have to pay a license in order to carry on their business, and I am not quite ready to say that we would act justly toward these resident merchants if we permit people to come here from abroad and interfere with their business without paying a license.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Why should these commercial travelers pay a license to conduct their business in this city any more than in the city of New York, or Albany, or Baltimore, or Richmond, when we are pouring out from the Treasury of the United States millions of dollars annually to beautify this city and enhance the value of the property of people residing here and to help pay their taxes?

Mr. SPRIGGS. But the fact is that the law exists here and these merchants do pay a license.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. There never has been the slightest effort on the part of the District of Columbia Committee within the last four years to correct these abuses.

Mr. LONG. If we should exempt these commercial travelers from the payment of this license fee would it not eventually result in relieving the merchants here from the payment of a license?

Mr. SPRIGGS. I think so.

Mr. LONG. And would not that be a step in the right direction?

Mr. SPRIGGS. I have made some effort to do that thing and have not succeeded. As long as this law exists with reference to merchants of this city it does not seem to me proper or fair that we should exempt others.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. A year ago, when this bill was under consideration, I remarked on this floor that, whether by the connivance or with the knowledge of those who ought to know, this law was evaded or violated. It is true—and I can furnish the proof—that people do come here to sell their goods and are put in possession of a little ticket, given to them by somebody around this city, which entitles them to the privilege of carrying on their business here for one day, and when that day has expired they must go.

Mr. SPRIGGS. May I ask the gentleman a single question?

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Not until I am through.

For that remark made by me last year some of the officials in this city sought to hold me responsible. The District commissioners, by a letter through the chief of police, asked me to give my authority for the statement. I refused to do so unless I should be compelled. But I do know such to be the fact, and there are many other gentlemen on this floor who know it. I can furnish you with a sample of the cards which are supplied by people who pretend to represent the commissioners, allowing that privilege to be enjoyed.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I am sorry to raise this question; but it is getting late. The gentleman's discussion is not germane to the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. SPRIGGS. The question I desired to ask my friend was whether he knows of any city in his State where the law is not violated?

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. No city in the State which I represent, which is the same represented by the gentleman—

Mr. SPRIGGS. Certainly.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Has such an infamous law.

Mr. SPRIGGS. That may be; I am not talking about that. But do you know of any law in your State which is not violated?

Mr. NUTTING. Is that any argument against the law?

Mr. SPRIGGS. It is not any argument why the law should not be enforced.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule on the question of order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to ask one question. Is it not a fact that the Supreme Court of the United States in solemn adjudication has declared such a law as this unconstitutional?

Mr. LONG. When passed by a State.

Mr. SPRIGGS. That does not affect this District.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point that the amendment offered by his colleague is not germane to the bill under consideration. This is a bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of spirituous or malt liquors in the District of Columbia. It pertains to that subject and nothing else. It provides in a large measure police regulations. It fixes not only what taxes shall be imposed, but the fees, penalties, sentences to imprisonment, &c., which are to result from violations of the law.

It does not attempt to touch anything but dealing in vinous and malt liquors. The Chair is of the opinion, however meritorious the gentleman's amendment may be, it is not germane to this bill. To hold that it was would be to hold on this bill, which is entitled "A bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of spirituous and malt liquors in the District of Columbia," you might repeal all the privileged taxes comprised in the District statutes.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Let me make an inquiry.

Mr. ELDREDGE (at half past 10 p. m.). I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I favored the highest license in every case. Others favored lower ones. Now I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. GUENTHER. Some gentlemen wanted lower licenses.

Mr. MCCOMAS. So I stated, that while I favored the highest ones others favored lower ones. I make the suggestion that the gentleman who makes the point of no quorum should be allowed, by waiving the point now, to have a vote on his proposition. I myself am in favor of it.

A MEMBER. It can not be done.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Then let us take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, when this bill which has been carefully considered may be passed upon by a quorum.

A MEMBER. It can not be done.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If you do that you can make the license higher in the District and make a general regulation of this traffic. Otherwise you go back and have none.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What was the understanding as to the proviso to section 5?

Mr. GUENTHER. That was decided against striking it out.

The Speaker announced the vote, and said the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] was voted down, and consequently that proviso remains in the bill.

Mr. PRICE. I rise for the purpose of correcting a misunderstanding which seems to exist and a misstatement of what I said, which, of course, has been made innocently. I know we were beaten as to the proposition to raise the license. I know the next proposition we made was to amend section 2, and they consented to it. I know on the next proposition, which was made to strike out the proviso, we were beaten. I know here then came in the compromise to which the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill agreed, and to which I do not know whether the gentleman from Wisconsin assented; that was that the proviso should not be stricken out and section 6 should remain in the bill with an amendment to be offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. That is the agreement as we understand it, but it seems the gentleman from Wisconsin failed to understand it as we did that section 6 should be stricken out and the proviso to section 5 be left in. That was what I said, but it seems everybody did not so understand it.

Mr. GUENTHER. That was not my understanding of it.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SMALLS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. My amendment having been ruled out on a point of order, and that point of order having been withdrawn, I would like to know whether it is not proper to move my amendment again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the previous question is voted down the gentleman can submit his amendment.

Mr. SMALLS. But the previous question has not been ordered. That is the reason why I wished to get my amendment in before the previous question was ordered. I was endeavoring to do that.

Mr. GUENTHER. I hope I may be permitted to withdraw my point of order and let the gentleman offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SMALLS. You must get a quorum here before you can go any further.

Mr. PRICE. What about the proviso to section 5?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair there has been no action taken on the proviso to section 5, and that it is left in the bill.

Mr. PRICE. If that is so, will section 6 remain in the bill or not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk also informs the Chair that there has been no vote on striking out section 6.

Mr. GUENTHER. I consented to strike out section 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair there has been no action striking section 6 out of the bill.

Mr. PRICE. I ask that section 6 be eliminated from the bill, and on that condition I will agree to let the proviso to section 5 stand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GIBSON. I want to make a statement that might avoid delay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SMALLS. You have allowed a motion to be made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent.

Mr. SMALLS. Then I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be added to section 5 of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the amendment will be considered as pending.

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to state that the gentleman from South Carolina wishes to make some little alteration in the amendment.

Mr. SMALLS. No; I offer it as it is, to come in at the end of section 5 of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, which has been read.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I now move the previous question upon the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurring upon the passage of the bill, there were on a division—ayes 29, noes 2.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. No quorum.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I wish to ask a parliamentary question. If the House adjourns now, the previous question having been ordered, will not this be the first business which will come up to-morrow as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is for the House to determine when it meets to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIS. We had just as well understand this matter now.

The previous question has not been ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Yes; on the bill and amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Not on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question was ordered on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and was exhausted when the vote was taken upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time. It has not been ordered upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PETERS. I move a call of the House.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The motion for a call of the House was not agreed to.

Mr. GUENTHER. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill and the pending amendment.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. There is a question pending. I raised the point of order that no quorum had voted upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

The question of a quorum having been raised, the gentleman from Kansas moved a call of the House, which was in order. That having been refused, the question recurs upon the original motion, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from New York, Mr. SKINNER, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. SPRIGGS, as tellers. The question is upon the passage of the bill, and the tellers will take their places.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to ask whether this is not upon the previous question upon the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But there was a demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was made when the House was dividing upon a question, and was not then in order.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I understand the gentleman from New York to make the question of a quorum upon the vote ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was on the passage of the bill. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I withdraw the point of a quorum.

Mr. SMALLS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to correct a word in my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALLS. I ask then to strike out the words "without regard to" in the amendment and insert "on account of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was passed.

Mr. GUENTHER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. SPRIGGS (at 10 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 24, 1885.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Memorial to Congress.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, respectfully represent:

Whereas legislation is now pending before your honorable body, the Congress of the United States, the object of which is to place the name of a revered and honored citizen of this nation, General U. S. Grant, upon the retired-list of the Army; and

Whereas, believing that gratitude and honorable appreciation is an underlying principle in the heart of every true American citizen, especially toward those who have accomplished great and glorious achievements, which have placed this nation among the foremost of the world, and united our country as one great fraternal Commonwealth, and that the Republic be saved from disruption in his vigorous manhood should not prove ungrateful in his declining years: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Legislature that General U. S. Grant, in view of his distinguished services to this nation, both in peace and war, should be placed upon the retired-list of the Army, and we respectfully request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to labor for the accomplishment of that end.

Be it resolved (the senate concurring). That the governor be, and he is hereby, requested to subscribe and forward this memorial to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

SAM. S. FIFIELD,
President of the Senate.
HIRAM O. FAIRCHILD,
Speaker of the Assembly.

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Department of State, ss:

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Ernst G. Timme, secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby certify that the foregoing has been compared by me with the original in this office, and that the same is a true and correct copy thereof, and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, at the capitol, in the city of Madison, this 20th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1885.

[SEAL.]

ERNST G. TIMME,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association, praying that Congress take steps so to amend the Constitution as hereafter forever to prohibit all political distinctions on account of sex; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Chippewa Falls, Wis., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of the New York Naval Stores and Tobacco Exchange, praying that on all imported material manufactured in the United States and exported a drawback be allowed equal to the amount of duties paid in lieu of the 90 per cent. thereof now allowed by law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MAHONEY presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Lynchburg, Va., praying for the establishment of a naval station at Richmond, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOWEN presented a petition of the Loyal Creek Indians, praying action of Congress with reference to the awards made to those Creeks who enlisted in the Federal Army, loyal refugees, and freedmen; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of San Francisco, Cal., urging the prompt construction of a modern navy and an approved system of harbor fortifications; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATOR FROM IOWA.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred two documents purporting to be the credentials of WILLIAM B. ALLISON, Senator-elect from the State of Iowa, to make a written report and to recommend that the credentials lie upon the table. The substance of the report is that Mr. ALLISON appears to be elected in either event, and it is not profitable to inquire at the present time whether the election which took place the second Tuesday after what is called the temporary organization of the Legislature of that State or a precisely similar proceeding which took place on the second Tuesday after what is called the permanent organization of the Legislature was the valid and rightful election under the act of Congress of the United States; and if it were necessary to determine that question the committee are of opinion that it should be determined by the Senate at the next session of Congress and not at present. I suppose there is no doubt whatever of the election of Mr. ALLISON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which were referred two sets of credentials of Mr. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, Senator-elect from the State of Iowa, reports back the credentials with a written report. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Massachusetts to ask that the credentials be laid on the table or placed on file?

Mr. HOAR. What is the usual custom with credentials to which no objection is made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are placed on file and go to make up the list of Senators to be sworn in on the first day of the next Congress. If they be laid on the table they will not technically be before the Senate for action on the first day of the Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Then the recommendation of the committee is that the credentials be placed on file.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the credentials will be placed on file. The accompanying report will be printed under the rules.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4679) for the relief of Sarah E. Webster, administratrix, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (S. 2153) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Brackett;
- A bill (S. 2125) granting a pension to Sarah Jane Prince;
- A bill (H. R. 7292) to increase the pension to Jacob Wiener;
- A bill (H. R. 5929) for the relief of Abigail Honey;
- A bill (H. R. 6796) to grant a pension to Lloyd W. Hixon;
- A bill (H. R. 6928) granting a pension to Leonard King;
- A bill (H. R. 5969) for the relief of Elizabeth A. Springstead; and
- A bill (H. R. 6287) for the relief of John H. Johnson.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

- A bill (S. 1997) to increase the pension of Louis J. Sacriste; and
- A bill (H. R. 6399) granting a pension to John H. Ivers, alias John H. Wilson.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (H. R. 6596) granting a pension to John Hazlewood;
- A bill (H. R. 4869) for the relief of Morris Geld;
- A bill (H. R. 7373) for the relief of Sarah A. Burchfield; and
- A bill (H. R. 4263) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hood.

Mr. BLAIR. By direction of the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2043) for the relief of Mrs. Maria L. Strong, I report it adversely with a minority report in favor of the passage of the bill. It is the case of a naval officer of long service and distinguished gallantry whose widow applies for a pension. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar. I have not the report quite ready yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the minority of the committee have leave to submit and have printed their views. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (H. R. 2627) granting a pension to Noah Caton;
- A bill (H. R. 2538) granting a pension to Christiana Almier;
- A bill (H. R. 3355) for the relief of Mary Mulholland;
- A bill (H. R. 1219) granting a pension to Charles Hendrix;
- A bill (H. R. 5374) granting a pension to Phillip Wiggins; and
- A bill (H. R. 4079) granting a pension to James D. Kirk.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of David E. Ford, of Illinois, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (H. R. 256) granting a pension to Mary A. Land;
- A bill (H. R. 7869) granting a pension to Ameline L. Fitch;
- A bill (H. R. 1898) granting a pension to Harriet Armstrong;
- A bill (H. R. 2540) granting a pension to Priscilla J. Small;
- A bill (H. R. 7696) granting a pension to Thomas D. Fitch;
- A bill (H. R. 5925) granting a pension to Margaret A. Berry; and
- A bill (H. R. 3994) granting a pension to William Strickland.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

- A bill (H. R. 391) granting a pension to Daniel H. Rose; and
- A bill (H. R. 1934) granting a pension to John C. Shacklett.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Sullivan, praying to be allowed a pension; reported adversely thereon; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

- A bill (H. R. 5215) granting a pension to Orlando Culver;
- A bill (H. R. 1127) granting a pension to Anson B. Sams;
- A bill (H. R. 5941) for the relief of Martha Lawson; and
- A bill (H. R. 7501) granting a pension to Hector W. Summers.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (H. R. 891) granting a pension to Robert J. Ebberman; and
- A bill (H. R. 3751) granting a pension to Francis Curran.

Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2212) for the relief of John R. Harrington, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JACKSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6881) for the relief of the trustees of the Christian Brothers' College, of Saint Louis, Mo., to report it adversely. The committee have heretofore reported adversely against a Senate bill of the same character, and the report in that case applies to the present House bill. I ask that it be placed on the Calendar, as there are views of the minority.

Mr. KENNA. In the same connection I desire to present the views of the minority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the views of the minority will be received and printed.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (H. R. 7769) to grant a pension to Joseph R. Dodds;
- A bill (H. R. 7026) granting a pension to Jeremiah P. Swatzell;
- A bill (H. R. 7002) for the relief of Harriet L. Stevens;
- A bill (H. R. 6948) granting a pension to George W. Eagles;
- A bill (H. R. 4061) for the relief of William C. H. Bowman; and
- A bill (H. R. 1653) granting a pension to John R. Hurlburt.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and moved their indefinite postponement; which was agreed to:

- A bill (S. 2175) granting a pension to George W. Eagles; and
- A bill (S. 2255) for the relief of Harriet L. Stevens.

Mr. MAHONEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 126) granting the right of way through Mail street in New York city to the Bleeker Street and Fulton Ferry Railroad Company, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1885, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1885 be printed, and that there be printed 11,000 extra copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the House, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added, the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

LIEUTENANT RAY'S ALASKA REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to report favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 335) to print 2,000 additional copies of Lieut. P. H. Ray's report of the international polar expedition to Point Barrow, Alaska, to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES BEDELL, SR.

Mr. MITCHELL. The bill (S. 2327) for the relief of James Bedell, sr., was amended in the other House and was referred with the amendment to the Committee on Pensions. I am instructed by that committee to report in favor of concurring in the House amendment, and I ask that it be considered at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James Bedell, sr., as dependent father of Samuel Umstead, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment was concurred in.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HARRISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories to report an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. As that bill is being considered now, I ask that the amendment may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations without printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred without printing, if there be no objection, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAYARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF SCIENTIFIC MEMOIRS.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, submitted the following resolutions; which were referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Volume I of the Scientific Memoirs of the United States Department of Agriculture, being a monograph of the Noctuidæ of North America, with the necessary illustrations, be printed in quarto form, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,200 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,800 copies for the use of the House, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Volume II of the Scientific Memoirs of the United States Department of Agriculture, being a monograph of the Sylphidæ of North America, be printed with the necessary illustrations, in quarto form, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,200 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,800 copies for the use of the House, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

OKLAHOMA LAND TITLES.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave at this time to present a preamble and joint resolution of the Legislature of Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will receive it. The preamble and resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Preamble and joint resolution adopted by the Thirty-fourth General Assembly of Illinois.

Whereas there is a strife and a bitter feeling that is liable to result in a conflict of arms between the cattle-men and the people in that part of the Indian nation known as Oklahoma; the cattle-men now having the possession of that country and having fenced the same into large tracts for grazing purposes on the one hand, and the people who are seeking it for settlement and homes on the other; and

Whereas the Creeks and other Indians did, by the treaty of 1866, cede the Oklahoma country to the United States in trust; Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring herein), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their influence for such legislation as will open that country to settlement under the homestead laws of Congress; and that the secretary of the State of Illinois be requested to have printed and mailed to each Member in Congress and each Senator from Illinois a copy of this resolution.

Introduced by Senator Streeter, February 4, 1885.

Adopted by the senate February 6, 1885.

J. C. SMITH,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

L. F. WATSON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house of representatives, February 16, 1885.

Attest:

E. M. HAINES, Speaker.

R. A. D. WILBANKS,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. CULLOM. I was about to move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] suggests that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have no objection to that reference.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, it may not be out of place to say a word at this moment.

I get every day papers from Illinois, Kansas, and Missouri, making great complaint against Congress because Congress does not open that land to settlement. The opinion of Congress I think is pretty well settled that that land must ultimately be opened to settlement, but these papers represent to the public there that the title of the United States to the land at this moment is perfect, and that it differs in no way from the title of the United States to any public land. That is misleading the people, and it is to a great extent the cause of the excitement and anxiety among those people and their disposition to press upon that land.

If those papers which publish this declaration to the people and thus mislead them would take the trouble to examine for a moment the title to that land they would agree with the Attorney-General and the leading lawyers of the country, West as well as East, that the United States are not at liberty to open that land to public settlement, for the Indians still retain a title and interest in the land, and that it never was granted to the United States for the purpose of settlement by homestead. That it may not be wise to do it at an early period is another matter, and about that I think there may be very little question. Ultimately if that land is not needed for the purposes for which the United States obtained what interest they have in it, it ought under proper regulations and with proper outlet to the United States to be opened to settlement; but to call upon the United States now, and to complain of Congress or the Executive that they do not open it to-day to the homesteader is like calling upon them to open your land and mine to the homesteader.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether there is anything being done looking to a final opening of those lands to settlement by the people and the extinguishment of the Indian title?

Mr. DAWES. There has been a bill reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and is now pending in this body, which I should like to ask the action of the Senate upon at the earliest possible moment, authorizing the President to negotiate for the title of the Indians in that land for the purpose of ultimately opening it to settlement. That bill contains a clause requiring people to keep off from that land until they are authorized by law to enter upon it.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire simply to say that I hope the Senator and the committee over which he presides, as they seem to have charge of this subject, will as early as possible do whatever may be necessary to settle the question so that the people of the West and everywhere else in this country may not misunderstand the true legal situation in reference to these lands.

Mr. DAWES. It is difficult to see how the actual existence of that title and the character of it can be more settled than it is now. Committees of this body have two or three times made report to that effect. The Attorney-General of the United States has given an official opinion to that effect. Two Presidents of the United States have by proclamation declared the title actually as it exists; and the President of the United States has felt compelled to remove those who have unlawfully entered upon that land. They have entered upon it, honest people, supposing that they did have a right to enter upon it as public land; and they have been largely misled by statements like that contained in the official resolution of the Legislature of Illinois now upon the table, and by influential leading public journals, West and East, who, failing to look into the real title, failing to understand why it is that the United States do not open it like other public land, and not giving justice to the sentiment of Congress that they want to obtain fairly and honestly the title so that they may open it to public settlement, have led those people into the trouble they find themselves in.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I have not had the benefit of hearing all the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I have heard enough of it to know the purpose which he has in mind.

I wish to remark that, whatever may be said about the Indian title, it is not a title which as a title the Indians can ever avail themselves of. It is not a title which the Government of the United States can not with legal and moral propriety take away from the Indians. Whatever interest they have is an interest which can only sum itself up in the question of dollars and cents. The Indians can not resume possession of the land because the Government has failed to locate friendly Indians upon it. They can not do anything with the land. They can not sell their interest to anybody, and they have no interest unless it was reserved in the condition of the treaty of 1866, which provided that the land was ceded to the United States for the purpose of locating friendly Indians or freedmen upon it. The land is remote from the location of the Indians who are claiming a residuary interest in it. They have no purpose in connection with it except to make use of whatever remains of that interest for the purpose of getting some more money out of the Government of the United States.

That being the case, I hold that Congress may not only legally, morally, and properly remove that condition and open the land to settlement, but it seems to me manifest that it is incumbent upon Congress to do so. In other words, we can not sit here allowing the condition of things now existing, and which is going to be aggravated by time, to go on simply because the Indians will not (if they fail to do so) agree with us as to the condition on which they will relinquish the interest that they have in the lands.

It is within the legal power of Congress, as I believe. As I said, that power may properly be exercised to say what shall be done with the land, and then to say to the Indians, "We shall submit the question, as to how much damage by reason of our taking the land, this condition to the contrary notwithstanding, to the Congress of the United States itself, or to one of the courts of the United States, for the purpose of determining what that interest is worth and how much the Indians have been damaged by reason of Congress having acted contrary to a condition named in the treaty."

I do not care to enter extensively upon this question, but I want to say now, I hope once for all, that that is what I think is not only the legal right, the legal power of Congress, but is also the bounden duty of Congress to do.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kansas will pardon me if I say that it is just such remarks as those he has made which have brought trouble on the people who have gone down there. While it may be true that the title is so fixed between the United States and these Indians that the Indians themselves can not use this land for any purposes of their own, it is equally true that the United States can not use it for any other purpose but the one purpose for which they acquired an interest in it. So while the Indian has put his title in such a condition that the land can be used only for one purpose, the United States have put themselves in precisely the same condition, and it is only by a release by the one to the other of the remaining interest in the land that either of them can appropriate it to its own use.

The idea that the United States can seize it and extinguish the title of the Indian in it and then pay him damages is a statement which, as between individuals in a court of law, would not be tolerated for a single moment. That a trustee for a special purpose can seize what he holds in trust and appropriate it to any other purpose, and let the cestui que trust get what he can in damages, would be new in a court of justice. The United States may have power to do it; the United States as between them and the Creek Indians are all powerful; but let them put themselves on an equality in the courts of the United States, and I venture to say that the doctrine announced here that either could extinguish by force or by the judgment of a court the title which the other holds to this land is a doctrine that never could be enforced in a court of justice as it never has been yet. It is a proper subject of negotiation, and I have no doubt that the Indians will listen to negotiation if it comes in the terms and in the spirit of fairness and justice; and that is the way to reach it.

Sir, there is more in this question than Oklahoma. Oklahoma is but 1,200,000 acres of land, situated in the center of a large Territory. There is a large territory of 6,000,000 acres between it and any of the States and Territories of this Union that would shut it off from all connection. That ought to go with it, and it is in some sense held by the United States by the same trust title, and it should be a part of the negotiation to open that vast country to homesteaders. When the people of Kansas and of Illinois and the western country generally understand that the United States are actuated by a purpose to procure and open to honest settlers that country upon fair terms, they will await the result; but when they are told that the United States can take it and appropriate it and are only kept back by cattle-men who are using it for their own purposes, they are misled and great wrong is done to them.

Sir, if the Senate will consent I will ask them to consider the bill which I reported to authorize the President to negotiate for the land, and the second section of which will keep it open for the honest and earnest builders of homes who desire to enter upon the public land according to law and to appropriate it, as the United States generously promised them that they might, under the forms of law, to their own use.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I only desire to say that this discussion has shown to my mind very clearly that the Legislature of the State of Illinois and the people of the West generally, if they mistake the legal situation of this land, are justified in the mistake, because it is evident that the Senate does not agree upon the question of whether this land is in that sort of condition that the people can go upon it or not.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. No person in the Senate has ever doubted the legal status of it.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kansas stated it openly here a few days ago.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is no dispute about the legal status of the land.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts will be called up and passed at the earliest possible moment, so that the people of this country will not remain in this sort of doubtful situation as to what their rights are in reference to lands that ought to be open to the public.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for five minutes to put the bill on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield? Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the motion that this resolution of the State of Illinois be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent—

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the bill lead to debate?

Mr. DAWES. If it leads to debate, I shall withdraw the request; but I do not think it will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the order of business?

Mr. DAWES. I will give the number in a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the bill passed, but let it be passed in the regular time.

Mr. DAWES. The regular time will never come.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order on this request. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that Order of Business 1272, being the bill (S. 2648) to enable the President to negotiate for the purchase of portions of certain Indian reservations, be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the President to ascertain without unnecessary delay, by communication with the authorities of the Creek, Seminole, and Cherokee Nations of Indians, in the Indian Territory, upon what terms those nations will relinquish and convey to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to all that country described in article 3 of the treaty made between the United States and the Creek Nation on June 14, 1866, as "the west half of their entire domain," and the lands described in article 3 of the Seminole treaty of March 21, 1866, and so much of the lands described in article 16 of the treaty made between the United States and the Cherokee Nation on July 19, 1866, as has not been already purchased by the United States from the Cherokee Nation for the purpose of settling friendly Indians thereon, as provided for in the treaty, and to submit the result thereof to Congress at its next regular session.

The second section provides that every person who, without authority of law, enters and shall be found upon the lands described in the first section, with intent to occupy any such lands or reservation, or any part thereof, shall, for the first offense, upon conviction, pay a fine of not more than $500, or be imprisoned at hard labor for not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, and for every subsequent offense shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not more than $1,000 and be imprisoned at hard labor for not more than two years; and the wagons, teams, and outfit of such person or persons so offending are to be seized and delivered to the proper United States officer, and be proceeded against by libel in the proper court, and forfeited, one-half to the informer and the other half to the United States.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to hear the latter part of the first section read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The part referred to will be read.

Mr. DAWES. I will say that the last section is a copy of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading requested by the Senator from Arkansas will take place.

The Chief Clerk read the first section of the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I move to insert at the end of the first section:

With such suggestions and recommendations as he may see proper to make.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 23, section 1, it is proposed to add: "With such suggestions and recommendations as he may see proper to make."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the motion to refer the resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the Senator will now be content with a reference of that resolution to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAWES. I do not care where it is referred now.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was in error. The Chair understood the Senator from Illinois to suggest a change of reference.

Mr. CULLOM. I did suggest a change, but it was with relation to the bill we have just passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no present objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE HENNEPIN CANAL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to present by consent another resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, which I ask to have read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper which the Senator sends to the Chair seems to be a telegram.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a telegram from the secretary of state of Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks leave to present at this time a telegram the nature of which he has stated. If there be no objection, it will be received and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The paper was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., February 20, 1885.

To S. M. CULLOM, Senate:

The Legislature has unanimously passed the following joint resolution: Whereas the construction of the Hennepin Canal is now pending in Congress: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring herein), That the General Assembly of the State of Illinois hereby again expresses its approval of this measure and requests our Senators and Representatives to use their earnest efforts to secure its success.

Resolved, That the secretary of state is requested to forward a copy of the foregoing to each Senator and Representative in Congress from Illinois.

HENRY D. DEMENT, Secretary State.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. 2344) for the relief of Melissa G. Polar;

A bill (H. R. 4088) to incorporate the Luther Statue Association to erect and maintain a monument or statue in memory of Martin Luther in the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 288) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2551) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes."

The message, further, returned to the Senate the bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla., with the amendments of the House of Representatives thereto.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 70) for the relief of Joseph M. Cumming, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts;

A bill (S. 194) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey land in Providence, R. I., for highway purposes;

A bill (S. 357) granting a pension to William Lockhart;

A bill (S. 526) granting a pension of $50 per month, to be paid out of the naval pension fund, to Julia T. Scott, widow of Gustavus H. Scott, late a rear-admiral in the United States Navy, and for forty-six years in active service;

A bill (S. 1117) for the erection of a public building at Macon, Ga.;

A bill (S. 1183) granting a pension to Hugh O'Neil;

A bill (S. 1268) for the relief of Sydney L. Skaggs;

A bill (S. 1473) to enlarge the United States custom-house at Richmond, Va.;

A bill (S. 1655) granting a pension to Newton J. Burris;

A bill (S. 1709) granting a pension to Leonora A. Boyden;

A bill (S. 1790) granting an increase of pension to Edgar L. Dutton;

A bill (S. 1803) granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn;

A bill (S. 1804) granting a pension to Clarinda Hunt;

A bill (S. 1915) to remove the political disabilities of James D. Johnston, of Georgia, incurred under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution;

A bill (S. 2272) granting a pension to Andrew Franklin, alias Andrew McKee;

A bill (S. 2350) granting a pension to Anna Ginn;

A bill (S. 2514) granting a pension to David T. Hoover;

A bill (S. 2570) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Thompson;

A bill (S. 2587) granting a pension to William H. H. Gilley;

A bill (S. 2610) granting a pension to Patrick Furlong;

A bill (S. 2623) to remove the political disabilities of Alexander W. Stark;

A bill (H. R. 483) for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

GEORGE E. SPENCER.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution authorizing the payment to George E. Spencer, formerly a Senator from the State of Alabama, of the sum of $7,132, to report it favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I should like to have the resolution acted on immediately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that this resolution be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and it will be placed on the Calendar.

DEBATE ON APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following resolution, which relates to the business of the Senate:

Ordered, That during the remainder of the present session of the Senate it shall be in order to move at any time that debate on any amendment or all amendments to any appropriation bill then before the Senate be limited to five minutes for each Senator, and that no Senator shall speak more than once on the same amendment in form or substance. The question on such motion shall be determined without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this order?

Mr. HOAR. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and it goes over until to-morrow.

LIBRARIAN'S REPORT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present the annual report of the Librarian of Congress; and in connection with it submit from the Committee on the Library a resolution of which I ask the present consideration.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the annual report of the Librarian of Congress be printed, and that 500 additional copies, with covers, be printed for distribution by the Librarian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for additional copies requires a reference to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SHERMAN. It falls slightly below the limit fixed by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar in the following order: First, Senate bills; next, House bills, as they stand reported upon the Calendar; and that no Senator speak more than once and not exceeding five minutes on any bill and the amendments proposed thereto; also, that no bill reported adversely shall be taken up except on call of a Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar, beginning and going through with Senate bills favorably reported, and that the bills adversely reported be not taken up except on the call of a Senator, and that five minutes debate be allowed to each Senator on any bill—

Mr. HOAR. The sentence the Chair just uttered was not heard here. The Chair made some exception.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The exception stated by the Chair, as the Chair understood the Senator from Pennsylvania, was that bills adversely reported be not taken up except on the call or motion of a Senator; that without that the Senate would proceed first with the Senate bills reported favorably and then with the House bills, and that five minutes' debate be allowed to each Senator, and that each Senator speak only once. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I ask unanimous consent to make a response to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to be heard on this question. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. HILL. I rose to offer a resolution before that order was closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of resolutions is not yet closed. The Senator from Pennsylvania is asking unanimous consent; the Chair has stated what he asks. The Senator from Kansas now has leave by unanimous consent to speak upon that question, after which the Chair will recognize the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. INGALLS. How many of these bills are there? Will the chairman of the committee advise us?

Mr. MITCHELL. There are about two hundred bills altogether upon the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. Pension bills?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. That will consume, with the greatest rapidity that can be employed in their consideration, four or five hours. I understand that to the majority of these bills there is no objection. There are other matters of great importance that should be discussed, and that demand the consideration of the Senate. I therefore suggest that this evening or some other evening which may be convenient the Senate hold a session expressly for the purpose of considering pension bills. It appears to me that that will comport better with the dispatch of public business, and enable us to devote the time during the day to the consideration of measures of equal if not greater importance. I am very sure the Senate would be disposed, if the Senator from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, would make the request, to agree that a session should be held this evening or to-morrow evening for the purpose of considering measures reported by that committee.

I gave notice yesterday morning that at the conclusion of morning business to-day I should ask the consideration of the bill reported yesterday from the Judiciary Committee affecting what is known as the Kidwell Meadows claim, lying along the shore of the Potomac, and involving the consideration of the expenditure of a million or two of dollars by the Government; but of course I waive that now until such time as the Senate may dispose of the suggestion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I may be permitted—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to reply. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state that down to this morning there were upon the Calendar one hundred and sixty-two pension bills. Of these forty-five were reported adversely and one hundred and seventeen favorably. Among the adverse reports there are eighteen fifty-dollar cases, those cases in which many Senators feel greatly interested, and which they have requested should be placed upon the Calendar for consideration. There are so many of these bills reported adversely now upon the Calendar that I feel it my duty on the solicitation of many Senators to ask that the Senate consider also the cases adversely reported. I am disposed to think the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas is not a practicable one.

Mr. JACKSON. May I ask the Senator whether he is not making a request, not on behalf of the committee, but of Senators?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not hear the remark of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. JACKSON. I wish to suggest that the Senator is not making the request on behalf of the committee to take up the cases adversely reported, but that is a personal request of Senators.

Mr. MITCHELL. In this I am not representing the committee, but only a general opinion that has come to me very strongly expressed by many Senators who desire to reach those bills.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if his request is to have the debate limited to five minutes without accompanying it with the provision of the Anthony rule that one objection takes a case from the consideration of the Senate?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir; that was the way I put the request.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say that I shall resist with all my might anything which contemplates the establishment of a limitation of debate in the Senate as an overthrow of the entire constitutional field of the Senate, as I understand it. That is avoided in the Anthony rule by providing that the whole thing goes on by unanimous consent, because under that rule one objection will remove a case from the consideration of the Senate unless the Senate by majority vote take it up free from the rule. But I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania now to ask the Senate to agree that two hundred cases, some of them involving very important principles, shall be considered by the Senate under a rule which limits every Senator to speaking but once and speaking but five minutes. To that I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I will modify the request in the manner the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, leaving all bills subject to objection as under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the modified request of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask one question. Are these bills all private pension bills?

Mr. MITCHELL. All private pension bills.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator from Massachusetts think that five minutes' debate by any one Senator is sufficient to throw light on a subject of this kind? How can we ever get through with the business of the session if on every private pension bill unlimited debate such as the Senator from Massachusetts advocates is thrown in? We shall never get anything done.

Mr. HOAR. The first private pension bill taken up may involve a principle which affects the Treasury to the amount of millions and millions.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Massachusetts desires to spend the time of the body in talk rather than in doing business, a large proportion of the business will necessarily go over.

Mr. HOAR. Well, Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to say that debate is not in order.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to say one word in reply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to be heard upon the matter now pending on the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. It is my duty to say in reply to the gibe of the Senator from Maine that in my judgment it proceeds from a very imperfect comprehension of the Constitution of his country and the constitution of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will now state the request as modified by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MITCHELL. Allow me to state that I make the modification because the Senator from Massachusetts objected to the request as I made it originally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the private pension bills on the Calendar, giving Senate bills the preference in the order of disposing of them (so that they may go to the House as the Chair supposes), be taken up under the so-called Anthony rule. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent to be heard. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not insist upon his motion. We have an order now to go to the Calendar of House bills under Rule VIII, and under that rule we can this morning dispose of all the House bills preceding the pension bills. Then we can go on with these other cases. Now, if the Senator will modify his motion so as to include only the Senate pension bills favorably reported, and then let all the House bills come under the other order, I am willing to agree to it. We can in that way dispose of the business in a very short time. If the Senator wants simply to act on the Senate bills favorably reported, so as to get them to the House, let us act upon them now, and then let us commence under the other rule and take up all the House cases favorably reported in order. We can do business in that way. We can dispose of all these cases without any trouble to-day and to-morrow. If we undertake to go on in the other way the Senate will find on the arrival of 1 o'clock that they have not passed six bills. I hope that the modification of the request will be made in the way I have suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri to object to the request as now made.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to it in its present form.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate now proceed to consider the bill (S. 544) granting an increase of pension to Elijah W. Penny, being Order of Business 65.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion will not be in order until the call for resolutions is gone through. That has not been exhausted. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] rises to offer a resolution, the Chair understands.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I may be allowed, I should be willing myself to consider bills as proposed by the Senator from Missouri; but there is a large number of Senate bills that ought to go to the House immediately or they can not pass that body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers a resolution.

ILLEGAL LAND ENTRIES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HILL submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish to the Senate copies of the reports of Special Agent of the Land Department Wilson T. Smith, with accompanying affidavits and papers sent to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in August and September, 1883, which reports, affidavits, and papers referred to the illegal timber-land entries, and fraudulent issuance of titles under the act of June 3, 1878, in the Humboldt land district, California, said entries being confined to townships 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 north, range 1 and 2 east H. M., and townships 7 north, range 2 east, and 13 north, range 1 east H. M., and embracing over 100,000 acres of redwood timber land.

Also copies of the reports of Special Agents George D. Orner and W. H. Goucher, of the Land Department, sent to the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the General Land Office, which refer to the same illegal timber-land entries in Humboldt County, California, and inform the Senate what action has been taken by the Commissioner and Secretary of the Interior, as to the cancellation of the illegal timber-land entries in the above described townships, and if any patents have been issued by the Commissioner since June 1, 1883, under the act of June 3, 1878, for timber lands in the above enumerated townships, to give the date of their issuance, name of entrymen, and description of land.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and go over.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that a session of the Senate be held to-morrow evening, commencing at 8 o'clock, for the purpose of considering pension bills upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that motion is not in order. He can entertain it by unanimous consent.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to move at this time for consideration that the Senate hold a sitting to-morrow evening, commencing at 8 o'clock, for the purpose of considering pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I shall object at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. Concurrent or other resolutions are now in order. If there be no further resolutions that order is closed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I now renew the motion that I made a few moments ago, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 65, being the bill (S. 544) granting an increase of pension to Elijah W. Penny.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. JACKSON. In that case there is an adverse report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division on the question.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent to say simply a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to be heard on this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON. This is a case of a soldier who entered the Army as a private early in 1861 and served until December 1865. He lost an arm above the elbow and was also shot in the spine. He is totally paralyzed on one side, and since this adverse report he has received an increase of pension for loss of an arm up to $36. He was reported to be entitled to $12 for a wound in his side, and much of the time he requires an attendant. So I am sure the case has merit in it and the Senate ought to consider it.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask consent to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to be heard on this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JACKSON. The claimant is now pensioned at $36 a month. That was given by a special act of Congress in 1882, and he has shown no increased disability since that date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to say one word. Since that time Congress has increased the pension for the loss of an arm to $30, and you are giving but $6 for the other disability.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been stated.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. CALL. My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 22; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

ELIJAH W. PENNY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 544) granting an increase of pension to Elijah W. Penny is before the Senate. The bill has heretofore been indefinitely postponed, and the vote indefinitely postponing the bill has been reconsidered; so the question now recurs on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. JACKSON January 15, 1884:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 544, granting an increase of pension to Elijah W. Penny, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

That the claimant, Elijah W. Penny, was captain of Company A, One hundred and thirtieth Indiana Volunteer Regiment, during the late war; that he was honorably discharged December 2, 1865, being disabled by loss of right arm and gunshot wound in right side. On the 20th December, 1865, he filed his application for invalid pension, which was allowed January 2, 1867, and he was pensioned at $20 per month from December 2, 1865, the date of his discharge. He subsequently applied for an increase, and his pension was raised to $24 per month June 4, 1874. He made a second application for increase, which was rejected by the Pension Bureau in 1879 and 1880. He then applied to Congress, and by special act passed July 22, 1882, his pension was increased to $28 per month on account of the aforesaid disabilities—loss of right arm above elbow and gunshot wound in right side—and he is now in receipt of said pension of $36. The present bill proposes to increase his pension by special act to $50 per month, and for the same disabilities which induced Congress to grant the special relief and to raise his pension to $36 in July, 1882 (see Senate Report No. 775, first session Forty-seventh Congress). The claimant's case having once been fully considered by Congress, and such relief awarded as was deemed proper, your committee think it would be setting a bad precedent to give the case a second favorable consideration, no increased disability being shown. But aside from this consideration it appears from the certificate of the examining board of surgeons, made March 3, 1883, that the claimant is fully rated at $36 per month. The board of surgeons make the following report:

"There is loss of right arm at junction of upper and middle third above the elbow. Gunshot wound of right side. Ball entered one inch to the right of spine opposite the twelfth dorsal vertebra, and came out forward and to the right three inches from point of entrance. It struck the twelfth rib, but did not penetrate the cavity of abdomen. We think him fully rated for gunshot wound of right side at $12 per month. We are unable to see any increase of disability. We find the disabilities as above described to entitle him to a $36 rating."

Being thus fully rated, your committee recommend that the bill be not passed, but be indefinitely postponed by the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I know that many Senators will probably take it for granted that the examination of the committee was so thorough that they ought not to reverse the action of the committee; but I am satisfied, if I can get the attention of the Senate, that those who listen to me and hear the facts will see that there is good reason why this report should be reversed.

At the time the special act was passed in 1882 fixing the pension of Colonel Penny at $36 a month, the regular pension rate for the loss of an arm above the elbow was $24 a month. Colonel Penny suffered that injury. He lost his arm above the elbow. Since that we have increased the general pension for the loss of an arm above the elbow to $30 a month. There has been a general increase for that disability; and no one questions that under the general pension laws for that injury he would now be entitled to $30 a month. He is drawing under the special act of 1882 $36 a month; but in addition to this loss of an arm Colonel Penny received a wound in the side, the ball breaking one of his ribs and lodging against the spinal column. The result of that has been, as the surgeons certify, almost a total paralysis of the right side, leaving him at times in such a condition that an attendant to take care of him is absolutely necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask the Senator if the Pension Office has any authority under the law to increase the pension for such absolute disability which he says is developed, above $36?

Mr. HARRISON. For what disability?

Mr. COCKRELL. For his disability.

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Pensions of the Senate added to the $24 a month which he would have been entitled to for the loss of his arm when his special bill was passed $12 a month for this wound in the back, making his pension $36 a month.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not the point. The point I want to get at is whether the Pension Office under existing law can make any increase of this rate of $36 now allowed because of disability increased since its allowance?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not suppose they could, as he holds under this special act; he takes his pension under a special act which fixes the amount of it. Here is a case where taking the regular pension allowed of $30 for the loss of arm above the elbow, and adding to it the $12 which the committee of the Senate gave him before for the wound in the back, the party would be entitled to $42 a month instead of $36; and this bill only proposes to make it $50 in view of the fact that he is totally disabled, and for months at a time requires an attendant to take care of him. Upon the finding of the committee giving him $12 for the wound in the back and the $30 the law gives him for the loss of an arm, he would be entitled to $42 a month; and yet the Senator from Tennessee is insisting that he shall be kept at $36; in other words, giving him only $6 for this injury in the back which the committee have found should be compensated at least at the rate of $12.

This is the case of a most gallant soldier receiving two wounds in the service of his country and having served his country faithfully, beginning as a private in 1861, and being mustered out with his regiment in December, 1865, as its lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. JACKSON. The Senator from Indiana singles me out because I made the report as the one attacking the pension applied for. It was the unanimous report of the Committee on Pensions. Now what are the facts? This soldier for the loss of the right arm above the elbow and for a wound in the side was pensioned finally at $24 per month. His pension was increased from time to time until it reached $24 per month. He applied for an increase in 1879, and the board of examining surgeons said that he was not entitled to any increase above the $24. He applied for an increase again in 1880, and the board of examining surgeons said again that he was not entitled to any increase; that $24 was his proper rate. He came to Congress and asked for special relief; and because of the two wounds Congress increased his pension in 1882 from $24 to $36 a month, covering all his disability.

There was not an iota of evidence in the papers before the committee that his disability had increased since Congress acted upon his case specially in 1882. Since that time he has been examined again in March, 1883, by a board of examining surgeons and they say he is properly rated at $36, and they decline to give him a further increase.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Tennessee will allow me one moment, I ask him whether it is not apparent to him under the findings of the committee when they reported his bill before that under the amended law as to pension for the loss of an arm he would be entitled to $42 now?

Mr. JACKSON. I am coming to that in a moment. The law of 1883, passed about the time that he was last examined, raised the pension from $24 to $30 for the loss of an arm above the elbow; but it is now proposed to put this man on the roll at $50 a month. All the increase that he could possibly be entitled to would be $6. Even under the claim of the Senator from Indiana he would not be entitled to more than $6.

But that is not the question. We are pursuing a course that is inviting every rejected claim from the Pension Office to Congress; we are pursuing a course that leads every failure to get an increase in the Pension Office to come to Congress; and every rejected case is coming here. The records of our committee show that these private pension bills are on the increase fearfully. We undertake to override and overrule the action of the examining boards of surgeons who rate these disabilities and give way to our sympathies and run rough-shod over the action both of the committee here and of the Pension Office.

Why, sir, we reported last session from the Committee on Pensions four hundred and fifty cases. We have already reached eight hundred at this session. Eight hundred cases that had been rejected in the Pension Office have been examined by the Committee on Pensions of this body since the 20th of December, 1884; 60 per cent. of them reported favorably, overruling the medical examinations of medical experts even on questions as to disease. The result of this course is that we are converting one committee of this body into a reviewing court for the entire pension business. I think there is no excuse in this case for increasing this pension, and no pretense for it under the last examination made by a board of examining surgeons in 1883.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the reconsideration may be had, and that the vote may be upon the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLISON in the chair). What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the pending question was the reconsideration of the action taken heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the pending question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that that may be taken by consent, and that we may come to a vote on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The Chair put the question, and declared that the yeas appeared to prevail.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to take the yeas and nays upon a direct vote upon the bill rather than on the postponement.

Mr. JACKSON. I am willing for that.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the proposition about to be voted on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition which has just been voted on is the question of indefinite postponement. Now the Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the vote may be taken directly on the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to that. I believe an amendment is in order now.

Mr. HARRISON. I should think not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not while the motion to indefinitely postpone is pending.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will let this matter stand, as the Chair has announced that the yeas have it on the motion to postpone. Then he can propose his amendment, and then we can take a vote directly on the bill. There is no use in having two roll-calls.

Mr. BLAIR. Let us hear the amendment read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, I should like to hear the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be again read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the amount allowed by the bill is $50 a month?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment, and will be read. The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the word "fifty," in line 7, and insert "forty-two;" so as to read:

At the rate of $42 per month.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

Mr. HARRISON. I will not object to that amendment. It puts it exactly where the committee put it before, and gives him only the benefit of the increase in the general law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SLATER. Provided there were no question in relation to the propriety of putting this man's pension at $42, there is great impropriety in doing it by act of Congress. We have no means ordinarily of giving a man a proper rate of pension, and it is improper in every sense of the term for Congress to undertake to do this work for which we have all the machinery in the Pension Bureau. This man has already been rated since the passage of the law of 1883, and the board say that they have already rated him at all that he should have. We are setting a precedent that will return to trouble Congress from session to session, and we ought not to enter upon such a system of legislation. We have bills year after year of this character, and they will multiply; they are multiplying. Four years ago it was seldom that a bill came to Congress asking for a rating of pension. Now they are a very large percentage of the bills that reach here. We ought not to pass any bills of the kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. JACKSON. On the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the roll is called may I inquire whether the case is reported unanimously by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. The Committee on Pensions reported $36. On the motion of the Senator from Missouri there has been an amendment adopted increasing the pension to $42. The question is on $42.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg my friend's pardon. The bill proposed $50.

Mr. BLAIR. That is so.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Pensions reported adversely to any increase at all.

Mr. HARRISON. He has $36 now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I then moved to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-six" in the original bill.

Mr. HARRISON. No, forty-two.

Mr. COCKRELL. "Forty-two" I mean. That was agreed to, but the bill still stands upon the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. BLAIR. At $42?

Mr. COCKRELL. At $42.

Mr. BLAIR. It stands at $42 upon a vote of the Senate adopting an amendment. That is the way the bill now stands.

Mr. COCKRELL. In lieu of $50.

Mr. BLAIR. In lieu of $50, certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. It stands now before the Senate upon the action of the Senate striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty-two."

Mr. BLAIR. The question is whether the Senate will reverse itself.

Mr. BUTLER. I inquire of the Senator from Missouri what the action of the committee was upon the allowance of $42. Was it favorable or adverse?

Mr. COCKRELL. I presume—not being a member of the committee I can not speak for it—that that proposition was not considered.

Mr. CULLOM. It was not.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill was reported adversely against any increase, and postponed indefinitely. Then there was a motion to reconsider, and that prevailed as a matter of course, as is usual in such cases; but the bill has not been considered by the committee at the sum of $42 at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—28.
Aldrich,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Sabin,
Allison,	Frye,	Miller of Cal.,	Sawyer,

So the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a preamble to the bill, the Chair understands.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The preamble will be read.

The Secretary read the preamble.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senate will just disagree to the preamble. There is no occasion for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was rejected.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MINA M. GWYNN.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 452, being the bill (S. 1360) giving a pension to Mina M. Gwynn, of Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. SHERMAN. As these bills are being taken up, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate, because this is perhaps the only day that can be devoted to pensions, that after this bill is disposed of the pension bills be taken up, both Senate and House bills, in their order on the Calendar, those that have been reported favorably, and that after they are acted on all other pension bills which have been reported adversely may then come up on the motion of any Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. On the call of any Senator in their order?

Mr. SHERMAN. Whether in their order or not. Let any Senator then move to take up any pension bill he chooses, but let us get through first with the unobjected cases.

Mr. SEWELL. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that bills reported adversely be taken up on call in their order. There are some cases apparently reported adversely that are really favorable reports. They are merely reported adversely for the larger sum proposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. We had better first dispose of the bills favorably reported, so that we need not be here all the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio—

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to say a word before the suggestion is acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to say a word before the question is put.

Mr. BLAIR. We have got started. The great thing in the pension business is to get started; and if we keep right on just as we have started, taking up the cases as we come to them, whether adversely or favorably reported, we shall get through the Calendar and everything will be off the Calendar by 5 o'clock. Now we are wasting a great deal of time in discussing how we shall do it. Most of these adversely reported cases will be settled on a single debate. There are not more than three or four different sorts of cases, and the disposition of any one will be a precedent that will control the others. If we keep right on we shall be through by 5 o'clock with the whole pension business, and probably before that hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that after the present bill is disposed of the Calendar of pension cases shall be taken up, and those reported favorably shall be first considered and then adverse reports shall be considered as suggested by Senators. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I object.

Mr. JACKSON. I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1360) giving a pension to Mina M. Gwynn, of Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. JACKSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know why the Senator passes over Order of Business 406?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I object.

Mr. BLAIR. I can state in regard to that that the man is dead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—24.
Aldrich,	Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sawyer,

So the motion was not agreed to.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills reported favorably from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. I object. There is only one way to do this business, and that is to go right on.

Mr. COCKRELL. Regular order.

Mr. INGALLS. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not rise to debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next case on the Calendar.

Mr. VOORHEES. I rise to make a suggestion to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to hearing the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VOORHEES. Among the several suggestions made this morning as to the best mode of considering this important branch of public business now on our Calendar, I think the Senator from Kansas made a most valuable one; and if it would be in order I would make a motion to set aside some evening when we can take up the entire Calendar of pension business, bills reported favorably and unfavorably, and dispose of them, without breaking into a session so precious and important as the day's session is now. Am I in order in making such a motion, Mr. President? If I am, I will make the motion that the Senate—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not in order without unanimous consent.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask leave of the Senate to make the motion in order to test the sense of the Senate that the Senate shall meet to-morrow evening at some hour that is agreeable, say 8 o'clock, and proceed to the consideration of pension business alone, and in that way clear the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to the suggestion as totally impracticable. A single objection would prevent the passage of any bill whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. The Chair will lay before the Senate the regular order, which is Senate bill No. 15.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg the Chair's pardon. There is a rule which says we are to go to the consideration of unobjected House cases, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that rule applies to the morning hour, which has already expired. The regular order is the bill (S. 15) to provide for the further protection of citizens of the United States and others against the violation of certain rights secured to them by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a motion that is in order. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the first bill reported from the Committee on Pensions favorably. I do not know what it is, but as soon as the Chair announces it I will insert it in my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is in order.

Mr. MILLER, of California. We voted that down.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in order.

Mr. MITCHELL. The first pension bill favorably reported is Order of Business 1167, the bill (S. 1877) granting an increase of pension to John Hall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which will be announced.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 406, being the bill (S. 772) granting a pension to Erastus W. Babson.

Mr. BLAIR. I will suggest that the man is dead and has been dead six or eight months.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us take up the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Ohio moves to take up the bill, and I will say in regard to it that the committee are waiting for some evidence so as to substitute the name of the widow of the man who is dead, and the evidence is not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order. The Senator from Ohio moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is a mistake in regard to that. That bill has been reported adversely.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I move to take up the first bill reported favorably.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the Chief Clerk report the first bill reported favorably from the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will allow that to be done. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Order of Business 1167, I think, is the first bill of that kind.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is that the first favorably reported bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first bill on the Calendar favorably reported from the Committee on Pensions will be announced.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1136; a bill (S. 1633) granting a pension to James Bond.

Mr. BLAIR. Is not that reported adversely?

Mr. CULLOM. No; there are views of the minority against the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES BOND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1633) granting a pension to James Bond. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Bond, who was a private in Company B, Fifty-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in the late war of the rebellion, the pension to date from November 14, 1864.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill is debatable, and I wish now to debate it just to the extent of saying a few words. It seems to me we are wasting the time that is now due and set aside for these pension bills. I do not care in what order they are taken up. The objection I have to the proposition made by the Senator from Kansas is that if we attempt to hold a night session, unless it is a prolonged session running into the night, we shall be here without a quorum, and a single objection will prevent the passage of any bill. Now, I want to utilize the few rapidly-passing moments of the session in favor of the pension bills. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Pensions that the better way would be to move to take up the bills favorably reported in their order as they stand, and we shall soon get through with those; and then, as we are all more or less interested in contested cases, the bills adversely reported can be taken up on the motion of any Senator who desires to call up any particular bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. That arrangement would be agreeable to me.

Mr. BLAIR. That arrangement would result in what the Senator from Ohio does not want to accomplish. There are a great many of these bills reported adversely which under his suggestion would fail to be considered at all. The committee is known to be very closely divided upon nearly all the bills which occasion serious controversy and they come here reported adversely. Such bills as the Senator from Rhode Island is interested in, the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from California, and the Senator from New Jersey, would all be excluded by the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio. If he is not now he has been interested in bills which by his own suggestion would fail of consideration.

If the Senate had proceeded as it was proceeding, in fifteen minutes it could have disposed of all these preliminary cases, which really do not require much consideration. As to the bill which occasioned the discussion in the first place there is no other case like that on the Calendar. The very next case, the one which we were in process of taking up, was one reported adversely by the same Senator, and it was reported right; nobody would contest it. The report shows that. There is no evidence upon which the bill could be passed. As soon as it could have been considered it would have been put out of the way and the report sustained. Then came the Babson case. The man has been dead six or eight months, and we have been waiting to get testimony by virtue of which we could substitute the name of his widow in the same case, and the honorable Senator from Ohio steps in and, in utter ignorance of the whole thing, wastes time enough to have passed that and twenty other bills like it, as though the Committee on Pensions did not know anything about their business at all.

So many persons undertake to help the Committee on Pensions that we waste double the time necessary to dispose of all the business which they bring before the Senate. Very soon we should have reached the controverted cases which the honorable Senator's suggestion would rule out. All know that the committee stands four to five or five to four, and, with probably no debate at all, as we debated the whole thing over at the last session, we should have wiped all those cases out of the way, and they would have been passed or rejected. Then comes again the great mass of bills not objected to, and we ought in an hour's work to dispose of the whole of them.

As I said before, all the pension bills on the Calendar, contested and uncontested, could easily be disposed of by 5 o'clock if the Pension Committee were allowed to take charge of its business and go along with it as other committees do with theirs. For the first time since I have been in the Senate, in half a dozen years, I hope the Committee on Pensions will have the privilege of doing its business as other committees do their business, without being interfered with, and that they will be supposed to know something about what they are engaged in transacting in the committee-room and about their work on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator if he thinks the Pension Committee has the right to come in here and monopolize absolutely and unqualifiedly all the remainder of this session, and if other committees have no rights, if other Senators have no rights, if other interests have no rights before this body?

Mr. BLAIR. I will reply to the honorable Senator that the Pension Committee has not occupied one-tenth of the amount of time in this body that any other committee has that has appreciably the same amount of legislation to propose to the Senate, and when it does come here with a matter that is contested everybody knows so much about its business, everybody has so many objections, everybody so undertakes to lead off in the direction of his own particular bill on the Calendar of pension bills that he is interested in, that the time is frittered away as it has been done every time. When the Pension Committee comes in here near the close of the session, having neglected this business, if you please, until these few remaining moments, why can it not have this afternoon, which is to be talked away at all events? Why not let us have it to do our business in?

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am very much astonished at my good friend from New Hampshire insisting upon what has never been insisted upon in this body in the last ten years. He is insisting that the cases adversely reported by the Committee on Pensions shall receive the same consideration and attention from this body that the bills reported favorably receive. That never has been accorded to any committee of this body.

There has been proposition after proposition submitted to proceed to the unobjected pension cases, being Senate pension bills, in order that they may be passed and may go to the other House for consideration there. There has been a proposition that we proceed to the unobjected House bills reported favorably so that we may economize the time and get them out of the way. But, no; nothing shall be done, says the Senator, unless the cases reported adversely are taken up in their order. I simply desire to say, in all kindness, that if that order is insisted upon, not one-half of the pension cases upon the Calendar will be passed by 12 o'clock meridian on the 4th day of March. It will be simply a physical impossibility to do it.

We should proceed in a business way to consider these matters. If there are Senate pension bills that have been reported favorably and nobody objects to them and there is no controversy about them and they ought to be considered by the other House, why not take them up and pass them and let them go to the other House? Then, if there are numerous bills here which have passed the House and have been reported favorably by Senate committees, by the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Claims, and other committees, why not take them up and let them be disposed of, and then attend to the business to which the Senator refers? The cases reported adversely can come up on the motion of the Senator and be disposed of. They are not precluded. We shall have simply removed away from them these important measures to which no one objects. But if we are compelled to consider every adverse report before we have disposed of the unobjected cases, the Senator will find at the close of the session that there will be many, both favorable and adverse, cases that will not have been considered.

It seems to me this is such a plain proposition that no one can gainsay it or doubt it. Take up and act upon the Senate pension bills reported favorably and to which no one objects. You can do it inside of an hour or half an hour. There are not many such Senate bills. Then take up the House pension bills to which there is no objection, and dispose of them, and then take up the other cases, if you can get them up, and the Senate wants to consider them; but let us have an opportunity of disposing of this business rapidly without any discussion so as to get it out of the way; then when we get into a talking humor we can consider the bills reported adversely. I make the suggestion because I know it is in the interest of the transaction of the business of this body.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's suggestions are mainly wise. His last suggestion was the original effort of the committee. Objections prevented the desire of the committee from being carried out. Now, the sensible thing to do is to take up the unobjected cases and run through them without any opposition in a very short time. It is not a matter of any importance whether we take the Senate bills first and then the House bills, because there are so few Senate bills. Both may be included in the same order and we may go through the Calendar and dispose in an hour or two of every one of them.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Ask unanimous consent for that.

Mr. BLAIR. I should be very glad to do that. That is what I wanted to do; but somebody outside of the committee objected. Now, if somebody outside of the committee will ask to have that course pursued I have no doubt unanimous consent will be granted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that that be the order so that we may facilitate the transaction of proper and legitimate business in a decent and orderly way.

Mr. VOORHEES. What is the proposition now?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that we take up the unobjected pension cases and dispose of them.

Mr. CULLOM. Both House and Senate bills?

Mr. COCKRELL. Both House and Senate pension bills.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that will be agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Simply the unobjected cases.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not mean the unobjected cases. He means cases reported favorably. He does not mean to put it in the power of a single Senator to prevent the consideration of a bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. What I want is to proceed simply to consider the pension bills on the Calendar reported favorably; any Senator can move to take up a bill as a matter of course if anybody objects.

Mr. CULLOM. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. If any objection is made to taking up a case favorably reported, then let the Senator interested in it move to take up and consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Missouri mean under all the provisions of Rule VIII?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The Senator from Missouri asks that unanimous consent be given that pension bills favorably reported on the Calendar may be taken up in their order and disposed of. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that is agreed to. The bill which was under consideration when the request was made is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. JACKSON. I should like to hear the report read. There are views of the minority in that case. It is a case providing for arrears.

Mr. CULLOM. For the purpose of facilitating work in this case of Bond, I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that so far as I am concerned I am willing to allow the bill to be amended by striking out the clause providing for arrears.

Mr. JACKSON. I agree to that. That is proper.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

Mr. BLAIR. I want to know what the bill is first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a bill granting a pension to James Bond.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the bill be amended so as to strike out the arrears.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me call attention to the case at the bottom of page 26.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us dispose of this first.

Mr. VOORHEES. We shall have to go back to the other case.

Mr. CULLOM. This case is up on motion. We can go back.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the bill, in line 8, after the word "from," by striking out the words "the 14th day of November, A. D. 1864," and inserting "and after the passage of this act;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of James Bond, who was a private in Company B, Fifty-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in the late war of the rebellion; the pension under this act to date from and after the passage of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third third, and passed.

ADALBERT STICKNEY.

The bill (H. R. 5207) granting a pension to Adalbert Stickney was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Adalbert Stickney, late a private in Company G, Eighth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask that the views of the minority in that case may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The views of the minority will be read. Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me to make a statement, the basis of the minority report, as I recollect, is in the fact that there was a contradictory statement on the part of the claimant as to the manner in which he received the wound. That appears in the papers. I have corresponded with the soldier since the claim was passed upon by the committee, and the claimant states that the agent put that statement into the papers wrongly, and the claimant afterward found it out and tried to get him to take it out; that the agent declined to do so without being paid, and he did not have any money to pay him, and so the thing stood. He admits himself that he received the wound not strictly in the line of duty, but by accident in some way in the camp.

Mr. JACKSON. That discrepancy is referred to in the views of the minority, but that is not the point upon which the minority rest their objection. This soldier's regiment was furloughed and was absent at home. He with a detachment was left in the command of Captain King, and he left his camp without leave and went into the city of Memphis, got into a riot, a street fight, and was shot with a pistol in the knee in that fight. That is the proof in the case. He was not in the line of duty. That is referred to in the majority report, but the fact is stated by the captain under whose immediate control he was at the time, and who says he was not entitled to a pension, and refused to sign his application for a pension, knowing the fact that he was wounded in a quarrel in the streets of Memphis when away from camp without leave.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator from Tennessee makes a statement as to the fact stronger than the papers show. It may be true that one witness testified that he thinks it was in a street riot; but others contradict that statement. He himself writes to me—I received a letter within a few days—that he received the wound by an accidental shot in the camp, and some of the testimony indicates that he was inside the camp or very near to it at the time he was shot.

I had the honor of making the report on behalf of the committee. The soldier had served within about three weeks, as I recollect, of the three years, and the testimony all showed that he was a good soldier. I thought, and the minority of the committee thought, in view of the contradictory statements in reference to the manner in which he got the wound, that the pension ought not to be allowed.

Mr. WILSON. While the evidence in this case, according to my recollection of it, discloses that a street riot was in progress at the time the wound was received, it does not establish the fact that the soldier was participating in that riot. There was simply a broil going on in the streets, and he was proceeding to his camp when from some cause he received the wound. The fact that he was participating in the riot was not established.

Mr. JACKSON. I shall detain the Senate but one moment. A portion of the evidence was not referred to in the majority report. The House report has adopted it. The material statement of Captain Williams is entirely overlooked in the majority report. He says:

My recollection is that he received the wound while in town, and not while in the line of duty with his company.

Then Lieutenant Doty, his lieutenant, says:

In regard to the claim of A. M. Stickney for a pension, I would say that I do not think he is entitled to it, as he was not on duty at the time and was out of camp without permission. I understood at the time that he got the wound in a street fight. I have refused several times to sign his petition for a pension on that account.

Captain King, who had charge of the soldier, says:

In reply to your favor referring to claim of Adalbert M. Stickney, will say I have no personal knowledge of the affair, as he received the wound during my absence from the command; but I was informed upon my return that he was wounded in a street broil, and not while in line of duty.

Now, it would be going entirely too far to grant a pension in that class of cases.

Mr. WILSON. My recollection of the testimony is that this soldier was in the city of Memphis by leave of his officer, and although not engaged in any military duty at the time, still under a recent decision made by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, if absent from camp by leave he was in the line of duty. As I read it in the newspapers, the Assistant Secretary decided that the person whose case was under consideration was in the line of duty at the time of the accident; and that anyway, being a staff officer, he is always on duty. He further rules "that any soldier, whether officer or private, who engages in recreation, joins social gatherings, religious meetings, or innocent amusements, and is going to or from them with the assent of his superior officer, does not thereby place himself out of the line of duty." This case I think comes fairly within the rule of that decision.

Mr. JACKSON. I examined the papers with great care. There are two comrades who state that they think he had permission to leave the camp, but the officer immediately over him says he left the camp without permission, and was wounded in the street fight.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. SLATER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julia A. Chambers, widow of John Chambers, late an ordnance-sergeant in the United States Army, who died at Fort Monroe, January 30, 1879, and increase the pension paid to her to $12 per month.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to have the report read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR February 13, 1885:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 4317, granting a pension to Julia Chambers, have examined the same, and reports recommending its passage with an amendment reducing the amount from $20 to $12.

Mr. BLAIR, for the minority, opposes the amendment, and the following House report is a statement of the facts of the case:

[House Report No. 535, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions of the Forty-sixth Congress recommended the passage of this bill. We think they were justified in so doing.

For the reasons set forth in their report, which is hereto annexed, and which we ask shall be made part hereof, we recommend the passage of the bill:

[House Report No. 173, Forty-sixth Congress, third session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom the subject was referred, submit the following report:

"Julia A. Chambers is a pensioner at the rate of $8 per month, which she asks Congress to increase to $20 per month.

"It appears that petitioner is the widow of Ordnance-Sergeant John Chambers, United States Army, who died in the United States military service at Fort Monroe, January 30, 1879, after having served in the Army nearly half a century. It also appears that she is the daughter of William Johnson, who was in the military service of the United States for a period of thirteen years, and who was discharged therefrom by reason of wounds contracted in battle with Indians.

"Petitioner alleges that she is 60 years of age; that the greater portion of her life has been spent in the Army with her husband and father. She states that she is infirm in addition to the disability on account of age, and that the pension now paid her is wholly inadequate to satisfy her necessities.

"In view of the fact that this is an exceptional case; that she suffered the hardships of her husband and father, in their long services in the Army, the committee think the relief asked should be granted, and they recommend that the bill herewith reported do pass."

Mr. BLAIR. The bill passed the House granting a pension of $20. It is a woman whose husband served almost fifty years. He was only a sergeant but he rendered very meritorious service. She was with him during the whole time, and the Army got the benefit of her services largely. Her father was in the Army thirteen years. She is now old, dependent, entirely helpless, and any less amount than $20 is insufficient for her support. It seemed to me at least, and to others of the committee, as it did to the House, that a case like this ought certainly to merit the consideration of the Senate when we are every day increasing the pensions of the widows of those of high rank who rendered lifelong and distinguished services in higher stations.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to support the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. BLAIR. I do; giving a pension of $20 a month.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think that is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to, because it proposes to reduce the amount.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS M'GILL.

The bill (H. R. 8133) granting a pension to Thomas McGill, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas McGill, late first-class pilot on the steamer Sally List.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT CARY.

The bill (H. R. 6011) granting an increase of pension to Robert Casey was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, after the word "Robert," in line 6, to strike out "Casey" and insert "Cary;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert Cary, late a private in Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at $45 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

ension-roll the name of H. D. Prior, late a private in Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. BLAIR. I offer the following amendment to be added as a new section:

SEC. 2. That the act entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," approved June 9, 1880, shall be construed so as to include within its provisions all officers and enlisted men of the Army and their widows and minor children.

That is to relieve a hardship which extends to some four or five widows who were originally pensioned, being the widows of officers of distinguished merit, at $25. By a mistake or misconstruction of the law the Pension Office reduced the amount to $20. An act has already been passed which relieves all widows of naval officers by restoring them to the old rate of $25. This is designed to reach some four or five, possibly six, of the older widows of Army officers who originally were pensioned at $25. It includes the widow of the quartermaster who took our Army from Vera Cruz to Mexico and some four others. There is a great hardship which ought to be remedied.

Mr. WILSON. What bill is under consideration?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the whole bill be read as it is proposed to be amended.

Mr. BLAIR. It is simply a private bill to which this additional section is proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has no connection with the bill, but the bill will be read with the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read the bill and the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish the Senator from New Hampshire would explain and have read the act which is proposed to be extended.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's attention was not attracted to what I said before, and perhaps I had better state the matter more fully. The act of June 9, 1880, provides—

That section 3 of an act entitled "An act increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes," approved July 25, 1866, and section 13 of an act entitled "An act relating to pensions," approved July 27, 1868, and section 412 of the Revised Statutes, shall not operate to reduce the rate of any pension which had actually been allowed to the commissioned, non-commissioned, or petty officers of the Navy or their widows or minor children, prior to the 25th day of July, 1866; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to restore all such pensions as have already been so reduced to the rate originally granted and allowed, to take effect from the date of such reduction.

The amount of the reduction which had been previously ordered, by what was thought to be a misconstruction of the law relating to some of the more elderly pensioners, was $5 a month—from $25 to $20. That hardship was observed; and by the act which I have just read the hardship was relieved so far as the widows of officers of the Navy were concerned. Now there are, as I am informed, from four to six—I do not know the number actually, but I am informed it is not in excess of six—of the aged widows of these older Army officers whose pensions have never been restored as has been done in the case of the widows of Navy officers. It only puts them back to the rate at which they were originally pensioned in any case.

My attention was attracted to this application by the case of the widow of the quartermaster of General Scott's army. She was pensioned originally at the rate of $25. In 1873 I think it was—it may have been 1871—her pension was reduced to the extent of $5 a month, from $25 to $20 a month. She told me her story, and it was one of the most pitiful I have ever listened to in these cases. She is evidently a woman of aristocratic birth and of the very highest associations, and she on the $20 a month has barely existed in utter poverty and without sufficient means to rely upon for her living, so that the little piece of land she owns down in Virginia, fifteen or twenty miles out of the city, has become encumbered, and she is about to be turned from her home unless she can have some relief. She told me her case, and it is one of those which, if the evidence was offered, Congress would not hesitate a moment in pensioning the woman at $50 a month; but it is altogether too late to think of giving her any relief of that kind at this session. Meanwhile she is likely to lose her home.

This hardship was called to the attention of the Pension Committee at the last session, and in a general bill a section was inserted to relieve the case, which section is that I now move as an amendment to a House bill that it may be sent back to the House for concurrence, precisely as the other day we annexed to a House bill a provision which increased the pensions of all widows of soldiers who served in the late war from $8 to $12, and of all dependent parents from $8 to $12. This is not far-reaching; it can not affect more than five or six at the most, and this $5 a month during these years will save this woman's home to her and enable her to live. She is now over 70, and I assure the Senate that I do not think as much good can be done with so little effort in any other direction whatever. It seems to me gross injustice that the pension was reduced originally. We have restored it so far as the widows of naval officers are concerned, and now it seems to me we ought to do this slight act of justice for which this woman can not wait.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 6029) for the relief of Jeremiah McCarty was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "pension," to strike out the words "of twenty dollars per month" and to insert "at the rate to which a private soldier is and shall be entitled by law for like disabilities;" so that the bill as amended will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Jeremiah McCarty, of Newport, R. I., on the roll of pensioners, and to pay him a pension at the rate to which a private soldier is and shall be entitled by law for like disabilities from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HENRY RODENBACK.

ELIZA PIGEON.

The bill (H. R. 6044) granting a pension to Eliza Pigeon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza Pigeon, widow of Joseph Pigeon, late a private in Company B, Third Regiment New York Artillery Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. WHITCOMB.

The bill (H. R. 5364) granting a pension to William H. Whitcomb was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, which was, in line 7, after the word "cavalry," to strike out the words "and pay him a pension of $8 a month;" so that the bill as amended will read:

) That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Whitcomb, late a private in Company M, Fifth New York Cavalry.

) The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARIA G. DUNBAR.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate indefinitely postponing the bill (S. 993) for the relief of Maria G. Dunbar be reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. This is a case where there was an adverse report, and I have the consent of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] who made the report to make the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that there may be unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill indicated by him was indefinitely postponed, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

FREDERICK BRAUNWALD.

The bill (H. R. 5123) granting a pension to Frederick Braunwald was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Frederick Braunwald, late a private in Company E, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Illinois Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ANN W. MULVEY.

The bill (H. R. 2398) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Ann W. Mulvey was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 11, after the words "amount of," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "sixteen;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and conditions of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Ann W. Mulvey, mother of Francis S. Mulvey, late of Company D, Fifth New Jersey Volunteers; James W. Mulvey, late of Company D, Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers, and August J. Mulvey, late of Company D, Eleventh New Jersey Volunteers, all of whom died in the Army, and pay her an increase of pension to the amount of $16 per month, in lieu of $6 that she now receives; but nothing in this act shall entitle the said Mrs. Ann W. Mulvey to arrears of pensions.

Mr. SEWELL. I trust the amendment of the committee will not be adopted in this case. This woman is very old, between 70 and 80 years of age, the mother of three sons who were killed in the Army. I speak advisedly of this, as one of them was killed in my own command at Chancellorsville. I think a woman who has given three sons to the Army in this way is entitled to the small pittance of $24 per month for the remainder of her life.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 7, noes 10; no quorum voting.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think when the Senate undertakes to overrule a unanimous report of the Committee on Pensions we had better have the yeas and nays and have the report read and let us understand the case. If the report of the Committee on Pensions is not to be observed and we are simply to put our hands into the pockets of the tax-payers of the United States and give to whomsoever asks, let us know.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, when a poor woman has lost her sole three sons in the Army, I am ready to put my hands into the pocket of the United States Treasury and pay her $8 a month in excess of what the committee recommended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are called for on the question of the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nobody called for the yeas and nays; but if the Chair knows how to pass a bill without a quorum, I should like to see it done.

Mr. SEWELL. I shall ask for the yeas and nays if it becomes necessary to call them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to call the Senate.

Mr. SEWELL. One reason why I do not want an amendment made is that the bill will go back to the House if it is amended, and it will be almost impossible to get action there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will be a call of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk called the roll and 48 Senators answered to their names.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was requested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] to say that they are necessarily absent on the committee to provide for the inauguration ceremonies, and to ask for that committee leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending a call of the Senate the motion is not in order. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL. For the information of members of the Senate who were not here when I made my statement, I will say that this woman lost three sons in the Army. She has been pensioned at $8 a month. The bill as it came from the House gives her an increase to $24. The Committee on Pensions have limited it to $16. There is great danger in amending a bill of this character at this late day of the session. Besides that, I take it that a woman who has given three sons to the country is entitled to $24 a month in her old age.

Mr. JACKSON. The general law now places a dependent mother upon the same footing as a widow, and allows her to make her election as to which son she will ask a pension for. The present bill proposes to increase that threefold. The committee recommend, in view of the old lady's age, that her pension be made $16. This is a special case. This is to give her two dependencies; and the Senator from New Jersey asks for three. The committee recommended two in view of the old lady's age, and whenever you go beyond that you open the way for an immense number of claims beyond the general law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the question. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions.

The question being put, a division was called for; and there were—ayes 19—

Mr. BLAIR. Is it in order to say a word while the Senate is dividing?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not now.

The division being concluded, there were in the negative 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. BLAIR. I want to say a word about the question.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question, as he seems to have personal knowledge about the case, and that is whether this old lady can be supported comfortably upon the $16 a month?

Mr. SEWELL. I should think not.

Mr. BLAIR. Has she any means of support or livelihood?

Mr. SEWELL. She is entirely dependent.

Mr. BLAIR. I remember this case as it was discussed in committee, and I favored the bill as it came from the House; but it was finally after discussion compromised in the committee on $16. For one I should be very glad to have the bill passed as it originally came from the House, especially since the statement of the Senator, which was not before the committee, to my knowledge at least, that on account of her age and her dependence upon the sons she can not live comfortably on a less sum than $24. It seems to me that $5.33 for each boy is not quite enough. If you give $8 per month for each of these boys I think it will be cheap enough, and we ought to do it.

Mr. PLATT. As I shall vote in favor of this amendment I would like in a word to give my reason for doing so. It is one of those cases where our sympathies are appealed to and where if we do not follow our sympathies we are supposed to be hard-hearted and illiberal; but it looks to me like favoritism. This is not the only mother who lost more than one son in the war; she is not the only mother who has lost three sons in the war and who is now old and poor. I know mothers in my own town who have lost more than one son in the war and who are old and very poor, but they receive only $8 per month.

Now, what I object to is the favoritism. If we are going to do anything of this sort, we ought to put on this bill an amendment which shall say that whenever a dependent mother has lost more than one son in the war she shall be pensioned at the rate of $8 per month for each son that she has lost. That would be fair. There would be no unjust discrimination about that.

As I dislike in all these cases where an appeal is made to our sympathies to vote against that appeal, I wanted to put the reason why I should sustain the committee on record before my vote was cast.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, having been out of the Chamber while this discussion has been going on, I rise to ask if this is a question whether an aged and dependent woman who has given three sons for her country shall receive $16 or $24 per month?

Several SENATORS. That is the question.

Mr. INGALLS. And I am advised that the House of Representatives passed a bill allowing her $24 a month, and that the Senate committee for some reason reduced it to $16 a month, and the question now recurs whether the Senate committee shall be sustained or whether we shall act upon the bill as it came from the House. I should like to vote so as to give this woman $24 a month, and if I can be instructed whether a vote "yea" or "nay" will enable me to do this I shall so vote.

In regard to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut that there is any unjust favoritism by this action that is now invited from the Senate against any woman who gave one, two, or three sons to the service of the country, I have only to say that I shall hail with pleasure as one of the inestimable privileges of my life the opportunity to vote to increase the pension of any such woman to the sum of $24 or more per month whenever I can have that opportunity. It is no discrimination; it is no injustice, because these people have not applied for the increase. The Senator from Connecticut is not just in attempting to place upon those who are willing to give this poor widow this increased sum of money the stigma of favoritism, that we are acting in this way in favor of one to the exclusion of others. I believe there should be a general bill passed that would increase the pensions in all such cases; but no general bill being presented, I vote with pleasure for the act that enables me to do justice in a private case.

Mr. PLATT. I differ with the Senator from Kansas entirely in relation to this whole matter. I believe that this business which the Senate of the United States is engaged in giving to those persons who apply, and whose claims happen to be pressed here by influential Senators, a larger sum of money than is given by general law to persons in precisely the same circumstances, is all wrong, and, whatever the Senator from Kansas may think about it, it savors to me of discrimination and injustice.

I would vote, I think, for a general bill which should make a pension of each dependent mother $8 per month for each son she has lost; but the dependent mothers of this country are not instructed about the way to get these special acts; they have no diligent attorneys to present them here, and if they did their claims would be numbered not by the hundred but by the thousand. They do not know how to engage the sympathies of Senators to present their claims and get them through the Senate of the United States, and they never will be pensioned at any more than $8 a month unless some general bill is prepared and presented here for that purpose. If it be not done, and Senators I think will agree with me that it is not likely to be done immediately, as nobody seems to have as much consideration for the whole number of dependent mothers of this country who have lost one or more sons as Senators have for some particular individual mother of this country, we shall have just this state of affairs, that one mother who has lost three sons in the Army is pensioned at the rate of $24 per month, and that hundreds of mothers (for there are hundreds of mothers in this country who have lost three sons in the war, all their sons in the war, and who are now old and dependent) will be pensioned at $8 per month. If that is not favoritism and discrimination I do not know what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 30; as follows:

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR THORNBURGH'S WIDOW.

The bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Maj. Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza W. Thornburgh, widow of Maj. Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the Fourth Regiment of Infantry, United States Army, at the rate of $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order of Business 1328, being the bill (S. 2043) for the relief of Maria L. Strong, has not yet been returned from the Printer.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has Order of Business 1321, being the bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army, been acted on by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not appear from the Calendar.

Mr. JACKSON. There was an adverse report.

Mr. COCKRELL. What action has been taken in that case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been passed, House bill 7655.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was certainly a misunderstanding. I move to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator will yield to me, I desire to ask unanimous consent to proceed with the cases reported favorably to-day so that we can finish them.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not want a bill passed that was reported adversely without attention being called to it. Let it be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, there will be a reconsideration of the vote by which the last bill was passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. We are not able to hear on this side of the Chamber what action was taken on Order of Business 1331.

Mr. COCKRELL. Without anybody knowing it, that bill was passed, and I simply ask that it may be placed where it was before. Then it will be up for reconsideration.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Missouri asks for the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. I make no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was really no vote taken upon it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no objection to that, but I desire to move after the unobjected cases are disposed of that the Senate consider the House bill which is Order of Business 1331, being the same matter that was reported adversely as Order of Business 1283, being the bill (S. 2400) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Willson Thornburgh.

I propose at the proper time to move to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the vote by which Order of Business 1331, being House bill 7655, was declared passed is reconsidered and the bill is placed in the position that it was before action was taken upon it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa. I think it is proper and just.

MARIA L. STRONG.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the cases reported favorably to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one bill that was passed over which is now in the hands of the Secretary. If there be no objection, that will be considered.

The bill (S. 2043) for the relief of Maria L. Strong was read. It provides for the payment, out of the Navy pension fund, to Maria L. Strong, widow of the late Rear-Admiral James H. Strong, of the United States Navy, of $50 per month during her widowhood, in lieu of her present pension.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report on this bill it seems was adverse, so that the Calendar of unobjected cases is disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. Now I renew the request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pension bills reported favorably to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks that unanimous consent be given to proceed to the consideration of pension bills reported favorably to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and those bills will be proceeded with.

BENJAMIN F. BROCKETT.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are more, but they are not at the desk at this moment. They will be here soon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Are they sending for them?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been sent for.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to make a statement and appeal to the Senate. There are two House bills of a general nature, very important, about which I think there will be no controversy, the passage of which will be a relief to all the Senators and a relief to Congress, and I think they can be passed inside of ten minutes.

Mr. ALDRICH. What are they?

Mr. COCKRELL. One of them is Order of Business 976, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously by myself, being the bill (H. R. 5713) to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States, which will take out of Congress twenty or thirty cases and prevent them bothering us hereafter. The other is Order of Business 1045, reported by the chairman of the Committee on Claims, now the Presiding Officer [Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin], being the bill (H. R. 5849) limiting the time for the presentation and payment of claims against the United States.

They are both very short bills, and I am sure they can be disposed of in a very few minutes. I hope they will be taken up and disposed of. I think no one can object to them. I ask that the first one be taken up now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pension bills are now in the hands of the Secretary.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will wait a few minutes I think he will have an opportunity of getting his bills before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask to call up—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are pension bills on the table reported to-day, and they will be proceeded with in their order.

HARRIET L. STEVENS.

The bill (H. R. 7002) for the relief of Harriet L. Stevens was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll, at the same rate of pension received by her prior to having been dropped, the name of Harriet L. Stevens, widow of George H. Stevens, a lieutenant-colonel of the Second Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, in the military service of the United States in the war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEREMIAH P. SWATZELL.

The bill (H. R. 7026) granting a pension to Jeremiah P. Swatzell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jeremiah P. Swatzell, late first sergeant of Company I, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH R. DODDS.

The bill (H. R. 7769) to grant a pension to Joseph R. Dodds was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph R. Dodds, late a private in Company K, Seventh Regiment of Iowa Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET A. BERRY.

The bill (H. R. 5925) granting a pension to Margaret A. Berry was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret A. Berry, widow of William M. Berry, late private in Company I, Tenth Indiana Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN R. HURLBURT.

The bill (H. R. 1653) granting a pension to John R. Hurlburt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John R. Hurlburt, late a private in Company G, Twenty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, and Company G, Fourteenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM STRICKLAND.

The bill (H. R. 3994) granting a pension to William Strickland was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Strickland, late second lieutenant of Company G, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteers, in the Mexican war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REUBEN J. EBBERMAN.

The bill (H. R. 891) granting a pension to Reuben J. Ebberman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Reuben J. Ebberman, of Macon, Mo., late colonel of the Sixty-second Missouri Regiment Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS CURRAN.

The bill (H. R. 3751) granting a pension to Francis Curran was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Francis Curran, late a sergeant of Company E, Thirteenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. EAGLES.

The bill (H. R. 6948) granting a pension to George W. Eagles was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Eagles, late a private in Company D, Eightieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM C. H. BOWMAN.

The bill (H. R. 4061) granting a pension to William C. H. Bowman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William C. H. Bowman, late a private in Company D, Second Regiment Missouri Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM. Does that conclude the pension bills?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pension bills reported to-day are concluded.

LOSSES OF PROPERTY BY TROOPS.

Mr. CULLOM. Now I hope the Senator from Missouri will have an opportunity to pass the two bills he has referred to, with the understanding that we go back to the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to that, but these are two public measures which ought to be passed. I ask that Order of Business 976 be taken up. Let it be read. It will explain itself. It is only what we have been doing for the last fifty years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5713) to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendments of the committee be acted on as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued if there be no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 6, after the word "officers," to insert the word "and," and in the same line, after the word "men," to strike out "and duly authorized landresses;" so as to read:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of the private property belonging to officers and enlisted men in the military service of the United States which has been, or may hereafter be, lost or destroyed in the military service under the following circumstances:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 27, after the word "war," to insert "or hostilities with Indians;" so as to read:

And provided further, That this act shall not apply to losses sustained in time of war or hostilities with Indians.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the attention of the Senator from Missouri. Of course it is perfectly correct. The committee ordered that amendment; but I have some doubt about the wisdom of it. I have no recollection of acting on it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment was expressly agreed on and has always been the universal rule of Congress in all such cases. The committee simply made the bill conform to what has been the rule of Congress in regard to compensation for such losses.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know compensation is not allowed in war between this country and a foreign country, but we have not treated hostilities with Indians as war.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have not considered hostilities with Indians as war, so far as giving brevets is concerned, but we have never paid for such losses in troubles with the Indians.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will simply make a remark on the equity of the case and leave it. I think if an officer and his squad of men are suddenly ordered to march against Indians and they lose their clothing and arms, compensation to them is quite as reasonable as it is in the case of an officer who properly enough stores his trunk in a railway station and has it burned up journeying in New York State. I think the equity is rather with the man who has lost private property fighting the Indians. I do not like that amendment myself.

Mr. VOORHEES. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri to say that it has never been the policy of the Government to pay for losses incurred in Indian wars?

Mr. COCKRELL. In Indian wars or in any other wars.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understood the Senator to draw the line on Indian wars.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; it is not done in any war. This bill simply conforms, and the Senate Committee on Military Affairs made it conform, to what has been the uniform rule adopted by Congress in allowing compensation in these cases.

Mr. DOLPH. Before I vote on the bill, as I have not had time to examine it, I should like to know something more about it. I inquire of the Senator from Missouri if I understand the provision of the bill to be that in all cases where property of officers or enlisted men in the service of the United States is accidentally destroyed, as in the case of an accidental fire, while they are in service, the claim may be presented to the War Department, allowed, and paid?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read as proposed and the bill with it, and then the Senator will get the idea. As I stated, there is no new principle in this. It is simply to take out of Congress a large number of cases that are pending here every year and that always pass when reached. It establishes no new principle of liability at all, and the Senator will discover exactly what it is if he listens to its being read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The whole bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. The part in regard to liability.

Mr. DOLPH. I thought I caught the reading of the bill. I should like the Senator from Missouri to inform me if it is proposed by this bill, which is certainly new, although it may be a general law in conformity to the practice of the committee, to provide that any officer or enlisted man who has lost property by an accidental fire without his negligence may present his claim to the War Department and have it allowed and paid?

Mr. COCKRELL. Under certain conditions therein stated.

Mr. DOLPH. It seems to me that it is based on a wrong principle.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question has been debated fifty times in the Senate, and always decided one way; and the committee, in order to get rid of the personal investigation of all these cases, reported this general bill which has been passed by the House, and we limited it, did not make it as wide as it was when it passed the House. We restricted it more narrowly than the House bill.

Mr. FRYE. And the payment in case of a loss by fire is limited, is it not?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is.

Mr. FRYE. Where an officer or soldier in taking charge of Government property sacrifices his own.

Mr. SEWELL. The limitation extends to the articles necessary for the position of the officers or men, not to watches, trinkets, or anything of that kind, but to the necessary equipment of the soldier or officer.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill as proposed to be amended reads:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of the private property belonging to officers and enlisted men in the military service of the United States which has been, or may hereafter be, lost or destroyed in the military service under the following circumstances:

First. When such fault or destruction was without fault or negligence on the part of the claimant.

Second. Where the private property so lost or destroyed was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of any officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment.

Third. Where it appears that the loss or destruction of the private property of the claimant was in consequence of his having given his attention to the saving of the property belonging to the United States which was in danger at the same time and under similar circumstances. And the amount of such loss so ascertained and determined shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be in full for all such loss or damage: Provided, That any claim which shall be presented and acted on under authority of this act shall be held as finally determined, and shall never thereafter be reopened or considered: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to losses sustained in time of war or hostilities with Indians: And provided further, That the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such article of personal property as the Secretary of War, in his discretion, shall decide to be reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for such officer or soldier while in quarters, engaged in the public service, in the line of duty.

Mr. DOLPH. Now I think I understand the bill. In the first place it proposes to pay for the loss of all property of persons in the military service of the United States where the property was lost without the fault of the party losing the property. In the second place it proposes to pay for the loss of all property shipped on unseaworthy vessels by order of the Government. In the next place it proposes to pay for the loss of property of the claimant, notwithstanding he may be negligent himself, if his negligence arose from the fact that he was engaged at the time in saving Government property instead of saving his own. The very first provision there is that the United States invites claims for payment for all property lost while in the military service except in time of war and during hostilities, without the fault or negligence of the party losing the property. I think that is a very broad and very important measure to be brought up on the spur of the moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have a reasonable period of limitation provided so that these claims shall not be allowed to slumber, but that all claims made under this act shall be presented within three years from the time of the loss.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right. I have no objection to that, and I suggest the amendment in this form:

Provided further, That all claims under this act shall be presented within three years from and after the passage of this act, or from and after the occurrence of the loss in cases hereafter occurring.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the rule of three years ought to apply to the past cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say three years ought to apply to all past claims, and three years to all future claims. That is the amendment I propose.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

Mr. COCKRELL. This does not cover anything in the shape of carpets, or pianos, or gold watches, or silk dresses, or things of that kind. The committee has never allowed compensation for them, and this is the most restrictive language ever proposed. I propose the amendment, as follows:

And provided further, That all claims heretofore existing shall be presented within three years from and after the passage of this act, and all claims hereafter arising shall be presented within two years of their occurrence.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator whether he proposes to give three years from the passage of the act for claims already in existence and only two for those hereafter occurring?

Mr. COCKRELL. A good many of these claims of officers have been scattered around, and they may not know about the passage of the bill. I will move to make it two years for each.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well; that will do.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will put it in this form:

Provided, That all such claims now existing shall be presented within two years from the passage of this act, and all such claims hereafter arising shall be presented within two years from the occurrence of the loss or destruction.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that that language is no limitation on the presentation or consideration of claims by the Secretary of War. It should be provided that the Department have no authority to consider any claim unless presented within a certain time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add:

And provided further, That all such claims now existing shall be presented within two years from the passage of this act, and all such claims hereafter arising shall be presented within two years from the occurrence of the loss or destruction.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will be sufficient. The Secretary of War will not act on any claim after that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At what point in the bill is this proviso to be inserted?

Mr. COCKRELL. At the end of the bill, after the provisos already in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment already pending not disposed of.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 30, after the word "reasonable," the Committee on Military Affairs proposed to insert "useful, necessary, and proper for such officer or soldier while in quarters, engaged in public service, in the line of duty;" so as to read:

And provided further, That the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as the Secretary of War, in his discretion, shall decide to be reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for such officer or soldier while in quarters, engaged in the public service, in the line of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. The first proviso of the Senator from Missouri providing for claims within two years should say, "and not afterward."

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas proposes to amend the amendment of the Senator from Missouri so as to read:

And provided further, That all such claims now existing shall be presented within two years from the passage of this act, and not after; and all such claims hereafter arising shall be presented within two years, and not after, from the occurrence of the loss or destruction.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HAWLEY. It occurs to me that there is some unnecessary verbiage. "Within two years from the occurrence of the loss or destruction" is sufficient. "Within two years, and not after, from the occurrence of the loss or destruction," is not a very elegant sentence, and the words "not after" are superfluous, it seems to me. "Within two years after the occurrence of the loss or destruction," I submit, is sufficient.

Mr. COCKRELL. The addition of those words can not hurt; and the Senator from Texas thinks it better. I have no objection to it, though I do not think it makes it stronger.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not object, only on general principles. I like our bills to read as well as possible.

Mr. MAXEY. I say that those words in my view of the law are necessary to prevent the presentation of a claim after the time limited. The Senator from Connecticut, having a very much better knowledge of language than I have, I am perfectly willing to withdraw it if he insists on my doing so.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill be printed as amended by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MAHONEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE and Mr. HOAR submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2551) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes;"

A bill (H. R. 2344) for the relief of Melissa G. Polar;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 288) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 4088) to incorporate the Luther Statue Association to erect and maintain a monument or statue in memory of Martin Luther in the District of Columbia.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Maria G. Dunbar, now on the files of the Senate, be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8030) making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HALE, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 5828) for the relief of Saint Mark's Protestant Episcopal church in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 7556) to regulate the manufacture and sale of spirituous and malt liquors in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 7557) to provide for the sale of certain real property in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief of the Church of the Ascension, in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 8236) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KEY WEST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the City of Key West, Fla.

The amendments of the House were read, as follows:

In line 2 of the bill strike out all following the word "directed," down to and including the word "necessary," in line 4, and insert the words "to select, of the lands owned by the United States in the city of Key West, Fla., a suitable building site."

In line 8, strike out the words "including the purchase of land."

In line 10, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "forty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the House of Representatives are before the Senate for its action.

Mr. CALL. I hope the amendments will be concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments proposed by the House of Representatives to the bill.

The amendments were concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 20th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1365) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O'Sullivan, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry;

An act (S. 1571) granting a pension to James McCallen;

An act (S. 2547) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances L. Thomas, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas;

An act (S. 2549) granting a pension to Isabella Higgins;

An act (S. 2246) to provide for the purchase of additional land for the uses of the public building in the city of New Bedford, State of Massachusetts; and

An act (S. 2594) to change the name of the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York to the Manufacturers' National Bank of Brooklyn, N. Y.

CONFIRMATION OF LAND TITLES.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I ask the Senate to take up Order of Business 1045, being House bill 5849.

Mr. CONGER. Will not the Senator give way until I give a notice?

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to pass another general bill that is much shorter than the one just passed, and to which there is no amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I only want to give a notice, as I am going away.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. I give notice that to-morrow, after the ordinary morning business, I shall desire to call up Order of Business 1026, being the bill (S. 2509) to confirm titles to lands in certain cases, for the purpose of making some remarks thereon.

LIMITATION OF CLAIMS.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I call for Order of Business 1045. It is a very important measure reported by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON].

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5849) limiting the time for the presentation and payment of claims against the United States.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill:

Nor to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to any claim or class of claims over which it has not already jurisdiction, nor to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to consider and pass upon any claim or class of claims which they are not already empowered to consider and adjust by existing law.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to inquire in regard to this bill whether it expressly or impliedly removes the bar of the statute of limitations from any claim against which the statute now runs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The understanding of the committee was that it does not, but to guard against any possibility of its doing so I have proposed the amendment which I have just sent up and which has been read by the Secretary.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear the amendment read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read again.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. Wherever a provision of law recognizes the existence of any class of claims, whether barred by the statute of limitations or not, they are all recognized as existing claims, and unless the proposed statute expressly prohibits the repeal of the statute of limitations as to those claims, it would be impliedly repealed. I want to have the proviso express, so that it will guard all classes of that kind, as if it were:

Provided, That it shall not remove the bar of the statute of limitations where the statute of limitations now runs.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is in now.

Mr. McMILLAN. I did not hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Minnesota will hear one provision of the bill read—

Mr. McMILLAN. I want to hear it.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a bill of great importance, and I should like to have it read over again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be again read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Missouri. Claims for back pay and bounty are barred, as I understand, by a charge of desertion standing on the record.

Mr. COCKRELL. That does not bar any claim.

Mr. PLATT. The officers will not settle the claim of a soldier where the charge of desertion stands on the record.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not for bounty.

Mr. PLATT. Not for bounty or back pay. Now, we are continually removing by degrees, passing statutes to remove, the charge of desertion, and the charge of desertion under those statutes is being removed from time to time. The inquiry I want to make is this: Suppose that some soldier who is entitled to have the charge of desertion removed should not accomplish that within three years from the passage of this bill, when would the statute of limitations begin to run in that case? From the passage of the bill, or from the time when he got the charge of desertion removed?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think there would be any doubt about that.

Mr. BLAIR. There is another class that has not been suggested. There is not one bounty as yet paid where there are ten due to the colored soldiers of the country. As I understand this bill, unless their claims are presented within three years they are barred.

Mr. COCKRELL. My understanding is that nearly all those claims have been presented, but they have not been acted on because the proof has not been furnished.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand that to be so.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think so.

Mr. BLAIR. Great numbers of them as yet are unrepresented.

Mr. COCKRELL. They will have three years to present them.

Mr. BLAIR. It has been more than three years since their service, and they may find their rights out after a while. I do not see any object in presenting any statute of limitations against this class of claims or any other class, indeed, as long as the United States is careful not to allow the statute to run against itself. It seems to me that the entire bill is one that will be likely to provoke a great deal of discussion if it were properly considered.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this bill is an absolute innovation upon the long-existing practices of the Government, and it involves very momentous and far-reaching consequences. It is a bill that deserves, I think, a great deal more consideration than it will be apt to get in the way in which it appears before the Senate in the temporary hiatus that is invited in the discussion of other bills.

I observe by casual examination that it not only applies the statute of limitations to all existing claims, but in one section provides that it shall exist against all claims that may originate hereafter. I believe I am correct. Upon all claims hereafter originating the limitation of six years is prescribed by this bill—that is to say, no man hereafter shall have any right to prefer his demand against the Government if he permits six years to elapse from the time of its initiation.

There is an old saying that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, an ornithological maxim that perhaps might be properly applied to national affairs. Time does not run against the king. I believe the Government of the United States does not permit the statute of limitations ever to operate against any demand it may have against any of its citizens, no matter when the default or deficit of the surety upon an undertaking occurs. It may enforce it whenever the fact is discovered. I doubt very much whether it is wise for us to permit an unlimited time to the Government in which to enforce its claim against the citizen, and say that the citizen shall be debarred by an absolute period of six years from interposing any claim against the Government.

I suppose this is intended as a relief to the committees of both Houses of Congress. The chairman of the committee says it is not.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Of course it is not, because we can not by any statute of limitations prevent a citizen from presenting his claim to Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. That is what I was about to say.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is not intended for that at all.

Mr. INGALLS. If it was not intended for that, for what can it have been intended?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. For the relief of the accounting officers of the Treasury and the other accounting officers of the Government.

Mr. INGALLS. That is precisely what I was about to suggest. The Senator from Wisconsin says this is intended to relieve the accounting officers of the Government. Why should we be permitted to relieve the accounting officers of the Government by refusing to pay our honest debts? It certainly would be a novel principle to apply in private affairs that because it was annoying and vexatious to a citizen to have any account taken of his estate or of his obligation, therefore he should be permitted to go scot-free. This will not in any way whatever interfere with the enforcement of claims against the Government except in this, that it will relieve the accounting officers of the Treasury and will precipitate every claim that is declared by them to be barred by prescription, upon the committees in both Houses of Congress.

I doubt the wisdom or the propriety of that species of legislation. I doubt very much whether we ought to consider a matter of this gravity and of this moment without further deliberation. In most statutes of limitations or repose there are saving clauses for minors, for women under coverture, for persons non compos. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] whispers to me that the same saving clause exists in this bill. I regret that I did not hear the clause when it was read. If it is there, it escaped my attention and some of the neighboring Senators who sit by me. One of them says to me—

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator let me read the sentence?

Mr. INGALLS. I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It reads:

In computing the years of limitation herein fixed no time shall be included when the person entitled to present the claim shall be a lunatic, a minor, or under any other legal disability.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I am relieved in that particular, but until this moment, although I casually read the bill, I did not know that was admitted. The Senator from Minnesota had called attention to another provision that he did not know was in this bill. I am not complaining that the bill does not contain proper provision, but that we are not advised and can not be advised in a question of this gravity and importance whether or not all particulars have been properly guarded.

Of course if the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Missouri insist upon the discussion of this bill and its consideration now, I have no right to object; but inasmuch as it involves a complete innovation upon our practice, I submit that it ought to be subjected to deliberate discussion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to say to my friend from Kansas that this is no innovation. A large number of claims are now barred. For example, under the act of 1849 compensation was allowed to those who lost their horses in the Mexican war and to civilians whose property was impressed by the Army. After a while there was a limitation put upon the soldiers who lost their horses in the war of the rebellion, but no limitation upon those in the Mexican war or on private citizens. We removed that limitation once, and still it left no limitation upon the others. Some years ago a bill was passed providing a bar to all that class of claims originating in any war prior to the passage of that act. So all claims of that character are now barred.

There are about 54,000 claims for quartermaster's stores and supplies under the act of July 4, 1864, which were filed with the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General. They were allowed to be filed from year to year. In 1878 or 1879 we passed a limitation on them requiring all those claims to be filed prior to the 1st day of January, 1880. A large number of my constituents are barred because they did not get their claims in prior to the 1st day of January, 1880. There is an immense number of claims there. They are barred.

So you find it has been the policy from year to year to place limitations upon claims, and there is no safety to the tax-payers of this country outside of some limitation. You let the persons who transacted this business with the Government pass from the stage of action. Their books are gone; their accounts are gone; the persons who transacted the business can not be found, and the individual comes and presents his claim with an ex parte affidavit. You have nothing to rebut it, and it is allowed.

It only illustrates an instance that the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] related to me some years ago. A claim was presented to the Committee on Military Affairs for allowance. He examined the papers. The claim was established beyond any reasonable doubt. It was so clearly proved that it created a suspicion. He referred it to the proper Department and there could get no information against its justice or correctness. He finally went to the Department, and in examining among some old papers he happened to find a bundle of unmarked, unbriefed papers, and on examining them found that they were the original papers in that claim which had been presented to the War Department and paid at the time of the occurrence of the claim. And then on further examination he found that a previous bill had passed Congress, and it had been paid the second time, and it was then pending for the third time.

I say that we must have a limitation upon the presentation of claims in the Departments here. They are flooded. They are liable to be called up at any time. Only last night I wrote to the Third Auditor to know what he was doing with a claim for a horse lost in the Mexican war in 1848. The claims are still pending and until we pass a law they are liable to be presented at any time. It is not just to the tax-payers of this country, who are the Government, that opportunities of robbing them in such a way should be allowed.

This bill was fully discussed in the other House. It was discussed by the leading members on both sides of the Chamber there. It was amended, and it was passed in the form in which it has come here. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] shakes his head. I do not know whether he does so with reference to what I have been saying or not. If he will look at the RECORD he will see that I state the truth, because I was noticing the bill, having been in favor of such a measure for a long time.

Mr. INGALLS. I was merely thinking of the fact that we have been frequently admonished that allusions to what occurred in the other House are not in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not say that it was at this session. It may have been at a former session. It was discussed very fully, however. I think the provisions of the bill are just and proper. I have taken some pains in examining it, although not a member of the committee, and I noted the fact that it had been reported. I think it is only such a limitation as is absolutely necessary for the protection of the Government against fraudulent claims.

Mr. INGALLS. "A new way to pay old debts."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer an amendment to come in as an additional section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one amendment now pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask to have mine read. I think no one will object to it. It was probably omitted by mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the pending question the Senator from Ohio presents an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill. It will be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section:

SEC. —. This act shall not apply to the bonds or other public securities of the United States, or coupons or interest thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. ALLISON and others. Let us finish this bill first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill the following words:

Nor to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to any claims or classes of claims over which it has not already jurisdiction, nor to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to consider and pass upon any claims or classes of claims which they are not already empowered to consider and adjust by existing law.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I was informed that there are certain classes of claims which are not now and never have been cognizable either before the Court of Claims or before the accounting officers of the Treasury, and it was feared that without some provision similar to the one just reported those claims might be presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury. It is for the purpose of guarding against that danger that I have proposed the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Where, then, would the Senator have those claims presented, if there is no tribunal for them now?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is no tribunal. They can come to Congress after the passage of this bill as they always have done heretofore.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the question simply because I intend, if I remember it, always to record my protest on appropriate occasions, and this seems to be one, against the conduct of this Government in relation to private citizens. It is the only civilized government that does not permit itself to be sued. It stands here and compels private citizens by the thousand and the ten thousand to come to Congress for one, five, ten, fifteen, twenty, and in a late famous case nearly eighty years, and present their claims at our doors, and we provide no tribunal to hear them, and refuse to hear them ourselves.

The conduct of this Government is not creditable to an enlightened people.

We are here barring men after three years or six years from the presentation of claims when the accounting officers of the Treasury have not yet completed the statement of account. I say we are now here barring private citizens against the presentation of their claims to such limited tribunals as they have when at the same time our accounting officers have not yet made a statement of account between the Government and officers of the Army and Navy who were in the war, and indeed quartermasters, contractors, and others.

It is within a short time that a citizen of my State had a suit brought against him, or against his bondsmen, when it was sixteen or seventeen years after he had closed his accounts and filed his papers and resigned his office before he had the statement of account upon which there was an alleged balance against him, when I firmly believe he could clearly have shown the account had he been notified within a reasonable time. The Government attempted to locate the balance against him in a particular place in the account, and he showed that it was utterly impossible there. Gentlemen familiar with this question know that suits are brought against bondsmen ten, fifteen, twenty years after the alleged occurrence of the liability. All these things are wrong.

I have no special sympathy with a bill of this kind while we are so guilty ourselves.

Mr. BLAIR. This bill is evidently one that requires a great deal of careful consideration. Senators are thinking of a new point every moment, and an important one, and new amendments are now being suggested touching the securities of the United States. No Senator knows what might be thought of if a little time and attention were given to the bill. I find in reading the very first portion of it that it discriminates against the soldiers and the officers who have defended our institutions in war. For instance, it says that they shall be cut off by a limitation of only three years, while all other claimants whatever, no matter whether the claim may have originated from the foundation of the Government, are entitled to six years from the passage of the bill within which to present their claims, whatever they may be.

The bill in the first clause, which applies to the officers and soldiers of the country, is, I think, very unjust and very dangerous. It will cut off a great many honest claims. Only a few days ago I received a letter from my own State, from a New Hampshire soldier, an intelligent man, and it turned out that he never had even presented his claim for bounty to the present time. That is not an unusual thing at all. It is twenty-odd years since the war. Such claims are likely to arise from time to time for the next fifteen or twenty years.

It is a matter that every one is informed of that the colored soldiers of the country, some 200,000 in number, have neither in the matter of pensions nor of bounty received anything like their rights up to the present time. They are ignorant, but they are gradually becoming informed, and their claims are coming in from time to time, and it is only fair to suppose that in future a great many more of those claims will be presented against the Government than ever have been as yet. But the bill proposes to take those people and discriminate against them; to give them only half as much time in which to present their claims as the ordinary claimant who has nothing but a civil source of claim against the country. I think that that is reprehensible and discreditable, and it is a shame to find it in a bill before the American Congress. Why should not they stand as well as anybody else?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, rose.

Mr. BLAIR. It is all very true, as the Senator is about to say, probably, that they can come to Congress, but there is trouble enough with claims in Congress to-day. This bill came in here under the assurance that it would not cause any debate; that it was a thing everybody would agree to, and was all right and nobody could object to it, and two bills were to be passed in ten minutes; and now for over an hour men are here talking against the bill when there is a stress upon us to get the pension bills before Congress, which perhaps will not be considered unless they are considered to-day.

I believe this is a bad bill, a wicked bill, and it ought not to be here for discussion under the circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now offer the amendment of which I gave notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

Sec. —. This act shall not apply to the bonds or other public securities of the United States, or coupons or interest thereon.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the amendment by adding the words "or to the claim of any State."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment the following words: "or to the claim of any State;" so as to read:

This act shall not apply to the bonds or other public securities of the United States, or coupons or interest thereon, or to the claim of any State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. The mover accepts it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "construed," in line 23, the words "to remove any limitation now existing against the presentation of any claim, nor;" so as to read:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to remove any limitation now existing against the presentation of any claim, nor to revive any claim now barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the Senator from New Hampshire made a very convincing argument to the Senate a few moments ago against the discrimination which is made in the bill against claims for bounty and back pay. The limitation as to such claims is for three years in the bill and as to all other claims it is six years. I do not think there is any class of claims where it is easier for the Government to meet and defeat a demand than these bounty and back-pay claims. The rolls of the regiment, all of the records make it easy for the Government. I therefore move to strike out "three" and insert "six," in line 7, before "years," so that the limitation shall be the same in all cases.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. All those claims have existed —

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin will suspend. The Chair will state the question. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "six;" so as to read:

That all claims for back pay or bounty due to officers, soldiers, or to any other person for services in the late civil war, or any previous war, shall be presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, or other proper tribunal, for adjustment and payment, within six years after the passage of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President —

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin was recognized, but suspended until the Chair stated the question.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I merely wish to state the reason for limiting this class to three years while others are generally limited to six. In regard to other cases the bill will take effect ordinarily on a future claim, one arising in the future; but these are claims which from the nature of the case must have been existing at least twenty years, a time which under the jurisprudence of probably every State in the Union bars all claims whatever. So it is not necessary to add six years to claims which already must have existed twenty years, and in regard to claims of the Mexican war they would have existed nearly forty years, and so on.

Mr. BLAIR. But it applies to all claims which have not been presented. There are many claims fifteen, twenty, thirty, forty years old which have not been presented, where the ground of the claim is simply a civil service, a civil debt, a civil obligation. Is there any reason for discrimination where the claim has not been actually presented? Where claims have been presented the bill does not apply to them at all. The Senator's point is no point, because it only applies to a claim which has been presented; and he says most of the claims have been presented, and therefore the law does not reach them in any way whatever.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the bill can not be disposed of to-night, and I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After fifty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 24, 1885.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2623) to remove the political disabilities of Alexander W. Stark;

A bill (S. 2610) granting a pension to Patrick Furlong;

A bill (S. 2587) granting a pension to William H. H. Gilley;

A bill (S. 2570) granting an increase of pension to Col. Samuel F. Thompson;

A bill (S. 2514) granting a pension to David T. Hoover;

A bill (S. 2350) granting a pension to Anna Ginn;
A bill (S. 2272) granting a pension to Andrew Franklin, alias Andrew McKee;

A bill (S. 1915) to remove the disabilities of James D. Johnston, of Georgia, incurred under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution;
A bill (S. 357) granting a pension to William Lockhart;

A bill (S. 526) granting a pension of $50 per month, to be paid out of the naval pension fund, to Julia T. Scott, widow of Gustavus H. Scott, late a rear-admiral in the United States Navy and for forty-six years in active service;

A bill (S. 1117) for the erection of a public building at Macon, Ga.;

A bill (S. 1183) granting a pension to Hugh O'Neil;

A bill (S. 1268) for the relief of Sydney L. Skaggs;

A bill (S. 1473) to enlarge the United States custom-house at Richmond, Va.;

A bill (S. 1655) granting a pension to Newton J. Buttriss;

A bill (S. 1709) granting a pension to Leonora A. Boyden;

A bill (S. 1790) granting an increase of pension to Edgar L. Dutton;

A bill (S. 1803) granting an increase of pension to George A. Washburn; and

A bill (S. 1804) granting a pension to Clarinda Hunt.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 70) for the relief of Joseph M. Cumming, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts;

A bill (S. 194) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey land in Providence, R. I., for highway purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 483) for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa.

Mr. YAPLE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House a bill, the title of which the Clerk will read, was withdrawn from the Senate for the purpose of making a correction in the enrollment. That correction has now been made, and if there be no objection the Clerk will return the bill to the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the order will be made. There was no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House insist on its amendments to the bill (S. 1609) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. PAYSON. Is that a report of a conference committee?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] moves that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. PAYSON. If it requires unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table, I object.

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged matter.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. STOCKSLAGER, Mr. HOPKINS, and Mr. BREITUNG.

UMATILLA RESERVATION, OREGON.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the recognition of members under the special rule. The hour begins at twenty-five minutes past 11 o'clock. When the hour expired yesterday there was pending a bill called up by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. GEORGE], the Senate bill No. 66, providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEORGE. Is there any time left?

The SPEAKER. The time expired during the reading of the report. The bill was read yesterday. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

Further objections being called for, three members rose—not a sufficient number.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill. Mr. WELLBORN. There are some amendments to be offered.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to amend by striking out the proviso on page 7 of the printed bill, in line 68 down to line 72.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Strike out the following proviso:

"Provided further, That after three years from the date when such lands shall be declared open for settlement and subject to sale, the lands which shall remain unsold may be purchased, without settlement, at the appraised value thereof."

Mr. PAYSON. I will say that is satisfactory to the gentleman from Oregon having the bill in charge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I sent to the desk yesterday. I will state that this is part of the House bill which has been approved by the House committee.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Add to section 2 the following:

"Provided further, That the water-right across a portion of said reservation through the town of Pendleton, granted by the Interior Department July 7, 1870, on the application of George A. La Dow, Lot Livermore, and other citizens of Pendleton, for manufacturing, irrigating, and other purposes, be confirmed and continued to W. S. Byers & Co., their successors."

Mr. GEORGE. This matter has been investigated by the Department. It is all right.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 79, noes 4.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk. I will state that when a similar bill was before the Committee on Indian Affairs these amendments were recommended by the committee. There are several amendments.

The Clerk read the first amendment, as follows:

At the end of line 43, in section 1, insert the words "by the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. Does the amendment apply to the line 43 of the printed bill? The House is acting not upon the printed bill but upon the engrossed bill of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. By reference to the printed bill it can be ascertained just where the amendment comes in. Let the amendments be adopted with reference to the printed bill.

The SPEAKER. The end of line 43 in the printed bill is not the end of a sentence. That line ends with a comma.

Mr. STEVENS. That is where the amendment is intended to come in, after the word "approved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In line 64 of section 1, after the word "reservation," insert the words "hereafter provided for them."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In line 12 of section 2, after the word "money," strike out the words "or in other improvements upon his allotment, as shall be determined by the Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In section 4, line 2, strike out the word "forty" and insert the word "thirty."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know where these amendments are coming from.

Mr. GEORGE. From the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. What committee?

Mr. GEORGE. The Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, ought not the bill to be read as it will stand when amended?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to have the bill read if he desires.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask that it be read as it will stand amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the section of the bill as it will stand amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed in section 4, line 2, to strike out the word "forty" and insert the word "thirty;" so that if amended as proposed the section will read:

"That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary," &c.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire if reading from the printed bill in this way will make the amendment conform to what it would be in the engrossed bill?

The SPEAKER. The bills are the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In section 5, line 5, after the word "reservation," insert the words "and by a majority of their chiefs in council assembled for that purpose;" so that the section will read: "That before this act shall be executed in any part the consent of said Indians shall be obtained to the disposition of their lands as provided herein, which consent shall be expressed in writing and signed by a majority of the male adults upon said reservation, and by a majority of their chiefs in council assembled for that purpose," and so on.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill; and on a division there were—ayes 104, noes 11.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. GEORGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK, CHICAGO.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 2375) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commercial National Bank of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, is hereby authorized to increase its capital stock, in accordance with existing laws, to any sum not exceeding $2,000,000, notwithstanding the limit heretofore fixed in its original articles of association and determined by the Comptroller of the Currency; and the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized to fix the limit of the increase of the capital stock of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago at the amount of $2,000,000: Provided, That two-thirds of the stockholders shall consent thereto.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule ten minutes are allowed for debate.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose there is any necessity for explaining this bill. Its object is to obviate the effect of an opinion of the Attorney-General, which was to the point that where a bank had originally started with a certain amount of capital stock the capital could not be increased except by law, the Comptroller having no power to authorize its increase. Several such bills have already been passed by Congress, and I trust there will be no opposition to this one.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what is the necessity for passing a law to increase the capital stock of this national bank, if it be true, as stated by the advocates of the national-bank system, that the business does not pay? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCKNER. That is a matter for the stockholders of the bank to consider.

Mr. WELLER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the bill, and present briefly reasons why these national banks and their advocates are and have been deceiving as to the profits to them and thus from the people—the business interest on which they feed. For they can prosper by their loans, discounts, and exchange only as they so do out of the creations and productions of labor and business. The surplus of this single institution, as shown by the report of the committee, as also admitted by the advocates of this bill, from these sources amounts to a very large sum, and yet it is true that not a single thing in the matter of actual creation of wealth can be shown as the product of their manipulations. They are absorbers of wealth, but never creators of wealth.

I believe it to be the bounden duty of every patriot to principle and justice to do what he can on all occasions to strike a death-blow at the national-bank system. I know that the system is not only undemocratic, unrepudican, but altogether inimical to the interests of the people.

Who is it that comes here seeking to pass a bill permitting an aggregation of profits achieved in this way to be put into a new deal with which to reap richer harvest from the same source? Why do they ask Congress for a permit if the only object is to enlarge their capital as a basis of credit? I do not understand from the statements of the gentleman having the bill in charge that there is any proposition in this bill to increase the capital as a basis for an increase in the volume of circulating notes; and, if not, then why seek in this way to secure this increase? It is true that this institution would have but little if any difficulty in organizing under the laws of the State in which this bank is situated, with a capital as large as they can find cash or some substitute for it to put up, or, in short, as large as they may desire. Then why come here if there is no underlying substratum that only will be developed in the future, when too late to remedy the evil hereby proposed to be created?

If the system does not pay; if the object is not for purposes of an increase of the national-bank circulating notes, then in the very nature of things there must be some undeveloped purpose that ought to be brought out fully before this bill is further considered.

I believe there is an underlying purpose here to perpetuate the national-bank system in so far as that object may be promoted by increasing the capital stock of this one institution. I am radically and emphatically opposed to any step in that direction; and I hope there will be not only ten but a hundred patriotic Democrats, who are really statesmen, looking earnestly and wisely to the best interests of the people, and who will stand up with me to object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. May I ask the gentleman a question? Would he not be satisfied to print these remarks, and allow us to go on with business?

Mr. WELLER. Not by any means. [Laughter.] I propose to call the attention of members and of the country to the methods employed to perpetuate a system that does not pay.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report as part of my remarks; and I do this for the reason that only yesterday I found the report, presented with the bill then under consideration, contained in it that which, being understood by the House, caused a large number to rise up in opposition to the consideration of the bill, and it was thereby defeated for the present at least. I think probably this report may show a similar state of facts.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2375) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago, having had the same under consideration, report that the bill is identical with House bill (H. R. 4378) reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency on the 20th of February, 1884, and referred to the House Calendar. The report accompanying said bill fully explains the bill and is herewith adopted and made a part of this report. Said report is as follows:

"That since the organization of this bank its business has increased so much as to demand an increase of its capital stock beyond the limit fixed in its original articles of incorporation; that under existing laws there is no warrant for such increase; that the new limit asked for in the bill is, under all the circumstances, just and reasonable.

"Hence your committee find that the legislation asked for in the bill is unobjectionable, just, and necessary, and they therefore recommend that the bill pass."

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate in opposition to this motion has expired.

Mr. BEACH. As the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] has reserved four minutes of his time, I would like to ask him why, instead of asking the House to take up this special bill, he does not ask the consideration and passage of the general bill on this subject, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Banking and Currency? Why should we adopt this special legislation? Why not, by passing the general bill, cover in a single measure the numerous cases of similar character now before the House?

Mr. BUCKNER. I will state the reason. The committee thought, and rightly thought, the House would not have time to consider the general bill, inasmuch as it involves several questions in addition to that here presented. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM].

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to consume any considerable time in explaining this matter. We have here a simple business proposition. The Commercial National Bank of Chicago desires to increase its capital. A large portion of this increase is now in the bank in the form of surplus. In order that this surplus may become a part of the capital stock of the bank this bill, to which, in my judgment, there can be no objection, is presented. I hope it will be passed.

Mr. WELLER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is not true that this bank has acquired its increased capital by percentages levied upon the people and business of the country to the extent of many thousands of dollars. In other words, is it not from profits derived from the people that this bank proposes now to add to its capital stock, and thus give it greater power in the same direction?

Mr. DUNHAM. The answer to that would bring us into a general discussion of the national banking system, for which the gentleman from Iowa is anxious, but which I do not care about; and I think the House is not anxious to go into that question this morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that this bank is losing money upon its business?

Mr. WELLER. I understand that by reason of profits there is an accretion of capital to the extent of many thousands of dollars, and that from the real business interests of the country. I do not think the institution should have any further advantages in that direction.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. All members objecting will rise. [Five members rose.] Not a sufficient number; and the bill is before the House for consideration.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to a third reading, there were—ayes 119, noes 8.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. WELLER, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. WELLER. At the solicitation of many personal friends I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PORT TOWNSEND, WASH.

Mr. BRENTS. I desire to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 2949) for the erection of a public building at Port Townsend, Washington Territory.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the custom-house, bonded warehouse, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Port Townsend, Wash. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $57,000; Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule five minutes are now allowed for debate in support of this bill and five minutes in opposition to it.

Mr. BRENTS. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allowed me I shall not attempt more than a partial statement of the facts in this case. Port Townsend is the port of entry of the Puget Sound customs district. Puget Sound, with its 1,594 miles of shore line and over 2,000 square miles of surface, navigable throughout its whole extent for the largest deep-sea vessels, is one of the grandest harbors in the world. Its commerce is very great and is rapidly expanding. During the last fiscal year a greater number of American steam vessels engaged in the foreign trade entered and cleared at this port than at any other port in the United States; and their tonnage was only exceeded by the tonnage of the same class of vessels that entered and cleared at the port of New York. The number entered was 570, with a tonnage of 264,655 tons, against 239 at New York, with a tonnage of 351,873 tons; 165 at San Francisco, with a tonnage of 239,769 tons; 149 at Boston and Charlestown, with a tonnage of 108,414 tons, and 123 at New Orleans, with a tonnage of but 55,735 tons. The number cleared was 563, with an aggregate tonnage of 236,751 tons, against 227 at New York, with a tonnage of 338,815 tons; 162 at San Francisco, with a tonnage of 231,935 tons; 145 at Boston and Charleston, with a tonnage of 105,007 tons, and only 95 at New Orleans, with a tonnage of but 35,798 tons.

Of American vessels, both sailing and steam, the number was only exceeded by the port of New York, and the tonnage by the two ports of New York and San Francisco. The number entered was 675, with a tonnage of 312,090 tons, against 1,869 at New York, with a tonnage of 1,006,556; 654 at Boston and Charlestown, with a tonnage of 304,376 tons; 452 at Philadelphia, with a tonnage of 222,258 tons; 416 at San Francisco, with a tonnage of 425,529 tons; 210 at New Orleans, with a tonnage of 81,670 tons; 187 at Baltimore, with a tonnage of 69,557, and all others still less both in number and tonnage. There were cleared 700 of this class of vessels, with a tonnage of 333,694 tons, against 1,442 at New York, with a tonnage of 839,762 tons; 421 at San Francisco, with a tonnage of 430,667 tons; 322 at Philadelphia, with a tonnage of 183,438 tons; 185 at Baltimore, with a tonnage of but 61,686, and all the others of the one hundred and thirty-one ports in the United States still less in number and tonnage. I grant you that this class of vessels predominates largely in our shipping, but when we take into calculation all classes of vessels, steam and sail, American and foreign, the number that entered and cleared in the foreign trade during the last year is only exceeded by seven other ports in the United States, New York, Boston and Charlestown, San Francisco, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Huron, and Oswego, and in tonnage by only nine other ports in the United States, those just named and the ports of Baltimore and Superior added.

The amount of commerce has doubled for the last five or six years every two years. In 1880 the number of vessels entered and cleared was 592, with a tonnage of 305,420 tons; in 1881, 628, with a tonnage of 318,459 tons; in 1882, 766, with a tonnage of 457,844 tons; in 1883, 1,062, with a tonnage of 534,824 tons; in 1884, 1,437 with a tonnage of 687,035 tons; and in the first half of the present year over 1,000 vessels entered and cleared at this port, with an aggregate tonnage of about 400,000 tons.

Mr. STEELE. Is there a United States court held at this place?

Mr. BRENTS. Yes; there is a United States court held there, and of course a large amount of admiralty and other business is transacted, as will be apparent from the amount of commerce there.

Mr. WELLBORN. What is the population of Port Townsend?

Mr. BRENTS. Perhaps about 10,000. Here, also, is the post-office through which all the mail to and from Alaska and to and from British Columbia must pass, and in which they must be examined, inspected, and rated up, and, in large part, be distributed.

Mr. WELLBORN. What is the revenue?

Mr. BRENTS. The revenue in 1880 was about $18,000; in 1881, over $26,000; in 1882, over $45,000; in 1883, over $56,000; in 1884, over $67,000; and for the present fiscal year, beginning last July, the fees collected will amount to more than the cost of this building, and during the whole year, as I am assured by the collector of the port, will go up to ninety or one hundred thousand dollars, while only $57,000 is provided for in the bill.

Mr. STORM. I will ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. REESE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, having considered the bill (H. R. 2949) for the construction of a public building at Port Townsend, Wash., beg leave to report as follows:

In its relation to commerce, Port Townsend, the port of entry of the Puget Sound customs district, occupies a place of considerable importance. Its location is such that all vessels from sea to any and all ports on Puget Sound must pass said port; its harbor is easy of access at all times, is commodious, and large enough to float all the vessels of the world, with good anchorage from five to fifteen fathoms, free from bar, rocks, or reef. The shipping of this district already exceeds that of four-fifths of all the custom districts in the United States. During the quarter ending September 30, 1883, there were one hundred and ninety-three vessels documented in this district, fifty-eight steam and ninety-five sail, with an aggregate tonnage of 40,565.41 tons. During the year ending June 30, 1883, the number of vessels entered and cleared at the custom-house in this district was 1,314 vessels, aggregating 813,962 tons.

During the last fiscal year the tonnage of American vessels in the foreign trade which entered and cleared at this port was exceeded by only four of all the ports of entry in the United States, and the tonnage of foreign vessels in that trade was exceeded at but six of said ports. Only one port in the United States exceeds Port Townsend in American ocean steam vessels in foreign trade, and the tonnage of foreign ocean steamers in said trade is exceeded by only seven of said ports. A large number of vessels engaged in the coasting trade are also entered and cleared at this port. Over 500,000,000 feet of lumber, 200,000 tons of coal, 10,000,000 cans of salmon, large quantities of produce, and various domestic commodities are annually exported from this district. The value of these exports for the last year is estimated at not less than $12,000,000. The amount of duties and fees collected at this port for the year 1880 was $18,448.94, and for the year of 1883 it was $75,921.65. The amount of rents paid annually by the United States for custom-house is $1,800, not including the buildings used for the United States court-room and clerk's office or post-office. These statistics, derived from official sources, mark this as a port of no small importance to the commerce and revenues of the country.

Constituting the entrepôt of the "Mediterranean of the Pacific," with its numerous bays, estuaries, and islands, with its 1,984 miles of inland shore-line, its unexcelled timber, its extensive fisheries, and other fast-expanding industries, with the rapid development of the mineral, agricultural, and manufacturing industries and resources of its adjacent country, and with the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad that terminates on its shores, it has taken its rank among the first ports of the nation. It now is the third in importance on the Pacific coast. The ports of San Francisco, Portland, Astoria, and others have received munificent appropriations for the construction of public buildings, while this port has received none. In view of these facts your committee recommend the passage of bill H. R. 2949.

Mr. BRENTS. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that this report was made over a year ago, during which time the commerce of the district and the business of the custom-house have greatly increased. The building in which this business is done is a mere wooden shanty, wholly inadequate in size, unsafe, and unfit for the purpose. The documents of one hundred and sixty-four vessels—and seventy-eight of them ocean steam vessels—and all the valuable records of the office are deposited here, exposed, and liable to be destroyed at any time.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one thing more. Port Townsend is in a Territory, represented on this floor by a mere Delegate—and a lame one at that—an unenfranchised member in this House, and unrepresented in the Senate, with no political power or influence to trade upon in any co-operative arrangement or log-rolling combination, had there been one—which I am sure there was not—to secure the passage of bills of this character. The bill has been favorably reported by three Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds to three successive Congresses unanimously and on its merits alone, and now unanimously and on its merits alone I confidently hope to see it passed.

There was no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 11 and 12, strike out "57" and insert "70;" and after the word "dollars," in line 12, insert "which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. BEACH. What is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. STORM. To increase the appropriation from $57,000 to $70,000.

Mr. STEELE. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. STEELE. The Secretary of the Treasury recommends it.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 22.

Mr. STORM. I shall raise the question of a quorum if they attempt to raise this appropriation.

The SPEAKER. As the point of no quorum has been made, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. STORM and Mr. STEELE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 140, noes 30.

So the amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FORT WAYNE, IND.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move, under the rule, to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 2084) to amend chapter 464 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, entitled "An act to provide for a public building at the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in the fifteenth line of the first section of the above recited act the same be, and is hereby, amended to read "one hundred and seventy-five" instead of "one hundred," so that the limitation therein contained will be in the sum of $175,000 instead of the sum of $100,000.

SEC. 2. That it being necessary in order to secure the proper commencement and construction of a building adapted to the varied uses for which the structure therein contemplated is required, the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated therefor out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes, under the rule, are allowed for debate—five minutes on either side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY].

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, I now move that this bill be ordered engrossed and read a third time. This Senate bill is identical with House bill 6412. The House bill passed the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds unanimously after the amount in the original bill was reduced by them from $100,000 to $75,000. The present bill passed the Senate committee by a unanimous vote, and also passed the Senate unanimously.

I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a communication from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, a communication reading as follows:

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
February 9, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 8th instant, asking my opinion as to the adequacy or inadequacy of the limit fixed by the act of August 8, 1882, for the erection of a public building at Fort Wayne, Ind., namely, $100,000, including cost of site.

The site for this building has already been purchased at a cost of $25,000, leaving but $75,000 for the erection of the building, which, in my opinion, is not sufficient for the erection of a building of suitable materials for the accommodation of all the Government officials in that city.

In my judgment the amount specified in bill H. R. 368, extending the limit to $200,000, is no more than necessary for the erection of a suitable building for the purposes for which it is required.

Very respectfully,

M. E. BELL,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. ROBERT LOWRY,
House of Representatives.

The same officer in his last annual report expresses himself on the same subject in these words:

The present limit of cost is insufficient to give more than a two-story building without fire-proof construction, which is totally inadequate to accommodate the Government officials in that city.

The following is a communication addressed at my request during the present session to the Secretary of the Treasury:

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
January 29, 1885.

SIR: In reply to a letter of this date from Hon. ROBERT LOWRY, I have the honor to advise you that the present amount of limit for the public building at Fort Wayne, Ind., now in process of construction, is in my opinion quite inadequate for the erection of a building with fire-proof construction, such as the needs of that locality and the best interests of the public service imperatively demand. In order that the work may be proceeded with advantageously and economically the limitation should be in my judgment enlarged at the present session of Congress in the sum of at least $75,000.

I request that this matter be called to the attention of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Very respectfully,

M. E. BELL, Supervising Architect.

Hon. HUGH McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury thereupon addressed the Speaker of this House as follows:

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a communication of this date from the Supervising Architect of this Department recommending that the limit of cost of the public building to be erected at Fort Wayne, Ind., be increased to $175,000, as the present limit, $100,000, will not admit of a building adequate to the needs of the public, and of fire-proof construction.

I concur in the opinion expressed by the Supervising Architect, and in my judgment the limit of cost for this building should be extended to $175,000, and this extension should be made at the present session of Congress.

I have already in several cases expressed the opinion of the Department as to the wisdom of making all public buildings fire-proof.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH, Secretary.

To the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

In the bill originally passed authorizing the construction of this building the limitation was $100,000. Twenty-five thousand dollars has already been expended outside of this for a site out of amounts heretofore appropriated. It will be observed the architect repeatedly states it to be imperatively necessary, in order to accommodate the wants of the public and to construct a fire-proof building such as is demanded there, to have an increase of the limitation. The Secretary of the Treasury concurs in this in strong and emphatic terms. Fort Wayne, sir, is the third city in population in the State of Indiana, and her population is only exceeded in numbers by the city second in size by a few hundred.

A MEMBER. What is the population?

Mr. LOWRY. The population by the census of 1880, in round numbers, was 27,000, and according to the best available data is at this time 35,000.

Fort Wayne is a focal point, from which diverge railways extending in ten different directions, connecting with every adjacent county-seat, and having direct railway communication with some thirty-two county-seats in the same State.

We had there for some years past three State courts of general jurisdiction, and now have two, which, owing to the importance of the place and the amount of the business done, are limited in their jurisdiction to the single county. The United States courts are also located there, and the late Postmaster-General, subsequently the Secretary of the Treasury, was compelled to hold his court when on the bench in that State in a room not larger than the Speaker's room of this House, for the accommodation of the jurors, witnesses, and all the officials, the bar, and parties having business in the court.

The post-office of this city is a distributing office. There are on an average some three million of pieces handled in the post-office per annum. The receipts in 1880 on money-order account were, according to the tabulated statement furnished by the Post-Office Department, $334,872.79. The receipts on general postal account were $104,286, and the net profit that year was $21,532.94. It is estimated by the officials of the Post-Office Department that there has been an increase since that year of 25 per cent., which would make the gross receipts of the office $535,230.99, while the net annual profit would be $30,532.94.

Even if the increase is but 20 per cent. the gross receipts would be still $513,772.97, while the net profits arising from the business would still be in excess of $30,000. The city of Fort Wayne has three national and two private banks, five daily and eight weekly newspapers, a number of wholesale mercantile establishments, several iron foundries, hub and spoke and wagon factories, furniture manufactories, manufactories of railroad cars, organs, woolen goods, steam-engines and boilers, electric lights, railway-car wheels, a paper-mill, four grist-mills, a number of large machine-shops, and the extensive manufacturing or repair shops of four of the railway lines centering there, including those of the two great trunk lines stretching through from the Southeast and the Northeast to the great Southwest and Northwest.

Other salient features are, some twelve hotels, ten brick public school buildings, besides several sectarian and private schools; three colleges, one of which, the Concordia, is the leading Lutheran institution of that character in the West, another the Methodist Episcopal, and a medical college; also an academy of music and opera house. Here also are large hospitals—one Catholic and the other Protestant—the episcopal residence of the Catholic bishop of the diocese of Fort Wayne, and the finest cathedral in the State. A crowning and conspicuous fact, which will be especially gratifying to the entire membership of this House, is the presence there, as stated in Lippincott's Gazetteer, from which I quote in order to avoid exaggeration, of no less than twenty-seven churches—one of which is of colored people—and with these churches, as with the population itself, increase is the order of the day. With all these advantages it may be asked why no more was provided for this building in the first place. With similar and characteristic modesty no more than is absolutely needed to make the building of fire-proof construction and meet the actual needs of the locality as to dimensions is now asked for by this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Indiana a question, and I may have a few words to say on this subject on hearing his reply. In the first place I wish to ask him how many officials are to be accommodated with offices in this building?

Mr. LOWRY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I rely upon the judgment of the Supervising Architect in reference to that matter. He has made his estimates in reference to it, and they are before the House and can be examined.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I must confess I have very little confidence in the estimates and recommendations of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury in reference to this matter; for if he thought he could get an appropriation of $100,000 for the construction of a public building in a town containing 1,000 inhabitants I think he would recommend it. These architects seem to like to display their architectural talents.

Mr. LOWRY. The increase is not so much sought on account of size as it is to make the building fire-proof. With the present appropriation it would not be suitable for the storage of records, and of course it is desired to extend it as far as can be permitted by the appropriation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If one hundred officials are to be accommodated in this building, and I am satisfied that is twice as many as will actually be accommodated, it would still be an expenditure of about $1,750 per man for office-room alone. Now I venture the assertion that within one hundred miles of that place the people, those who pay the taxes, live in dwellings that on the average have not cost more than $1,000 each, and in these, their homes, they rear and educate their families. And yet it is proposed to appropriate money out of the public Treasury to supply room to officials of the Government at an annual expenditure of over $1,700 each, supposing, as I have said, that there are one hundred to be accommodated in this building, which is doubtless largely in excess of the real number who will thus be accommodated.

Mr. STEELE. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio how many offices are there in your court-house?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. We have been building good court-houses in the counties of the State of Ohio for $50,000, $75,000 to $100,000.

Mr. STEELE. But I ask how much for each officer accommodated with quarters in them?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Certainly less than the amount specified here. I do not oppose the construction of a building at this place; but I speak with reference to the general system of paying out money for the erection of monumental buildings—monuments of folly most of them—all over the country, at an expenditure of four or five times as much for office-room for public officials as the homes of the people cost who must pay the taxes out of which those buildings are constructed. To these large expenditures for buildings I am unalterably opposed. This morning hour seems to be devoted mainly to the consideration of bills for the construction of public buildings. I think, indeed, it ought to be called the "public-building rule." The purpose of it seems to be to put through public buildings alone, and in fact little else is done. Everybody seems to want a public building. There are any number of other important bills on the Calendar which deserve consideration.

Private bills—

A MEMBER. That is what we are here for.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is what we are here for! I do not understand we are here for the sole purpose of appropriating money for the erection of public buildings all over the country. I do not know how many of such bills have gone through already or how many will yet go through. The difference between appropriating money for the construction of a public building and the improvement of a river, making navigable a stream that was not before navigable, is the difference between an expenditure and an investment; between the rearing of an elephant and constructing a locomotive. The one is a constant source of expenditure, while the other is an economic force which, when constructed, goes to work, becoming itself an earning power. Public buildings are huge elephants that involve constant outlay. They necessitate expenditures for watchmen, for maintenance and care; and the annual expenditure for these purposes will be larger in most cases than would be the rent of a suitable building.

I shall offer an amendment when it is in order, if this bill shall be considered by the House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I now move to strike out "75,000" in this bill and insert "50,000."

Mr. LOWRY. Twenty-five thousand has been already expended on the site.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Speaker stated that in the judgment of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 90.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is not a quorum, is it?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point of no quorum?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. When does the hour expire?

The SPEAKER. In five minutes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not make the point as to a quorum. So the amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let us have a vote on that.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. LOWRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DR. W. LEIGH BURTON.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8021) authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to grant an extension of letters patent to Dr. W. Leigh Burton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Commissioner of Patents be, and he is hereby, authorized to hear and determine the application of Dr. W. Leigh Burton, of the city of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, for the extension for the further term of seven years of the letters patent for the improvement in electro-heating, numbered 89008, dated March 23, 1899, and antedated March 12, 1899; and he is hereby authorized to grant the same if he deem it just and proper to do so: Provided, That no one shall be held responsible for infringement of said letters patent, if extended, between the date of expiration and date of extension.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. That bill is as near nothing as a bill could well be. I hope it will be passed without objection.

Mr. COOK. If it is of so little value as that, why should we pass it?

Mr. WELLER. I desire to make an inquiry for information. As the hour has almost expired, will the gentleman from Virginia allow his remarks to be printed for the information of the House, to save time?

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Wait till I make them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the attention of the gentleman from Virginia. The bill seems to be still in the hands of the Committee on Patents.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. No, sir. The bill was duly reported by the chairman of the Committee on Patents, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. There is a report in the case, and the bill is on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired, and the bill goes over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to pass a little resolution for the distribution of books to members who are not members of the next House.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let this be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania insists on the regular order.

INSANE UNITED STATES PRISON AT AUBURN, N. Y.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a letter from the medical superintendent of the insane asylum at Auburn, N. Y., and asking an appropriation for the completion of an insane United States prison; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] insist on the call for the regular order?

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TOWNSHEND], who desires to call up the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent to take up the Post-Office appropriation bill, and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to that. I prefer that the bill should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects, and asks that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] object?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I thought the gentleman from New York wanted to have the appropriation bills disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] desire to have the bill referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I prefer that it shall stay where it is.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it not in order to have the bill referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to take the bill from the Speaker's table except by unanimous consent, and objection is made.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] will only persist in that objection he can force the House to go to the Speaker's table, where the first bill is the Mexican pension bill. If he wants to pass that bill, that is the way to do it.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution sent up by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That all documents and books ordered to be published by the present Congress and which are actually printed prior to the first Monday of December next, together with documents and books heretofore ordered printed, which have not been actually furnished, to which members of present Congress are or would have been entitled if published prior to the 4th of March next, and which are actually printed prior to first Monday of next December, shall be allotted as heretofore to members of the present Congress and transmitted to their residences as fast as printed, unless otherwise ordered by the members themselves.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the usual resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DIBRELL. I desire to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8030) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DIBRELL, Mr. BEACH, and Mr. CULLEN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, my object being to reach the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I suggest that the morning hour has not been dispensed with. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. DUNN. I hope that will not be done.
The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIS, there were—ayes 151, noes 19.

So the morning hour was dispensed with (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. RANDALL. I now renew my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. WILLIS. For the purpose of saving time I will ask at once that the yeas and nays be taken on that motion.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the yeas and nays be ordered by consent.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the yeas and nays will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 139, not voting 64; as follows:

Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. ELLIS with Mr. RYAN.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2344) for the relief of Melissa G. Polar;

A bill (H. R. 4088) to incorporate the Luther Statue Association, to erect and maintain a monument or statue in memory of Martin Luther in the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 288) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and, pending that motion, I move that debate upon the pending appeal be limited to thirty-five minutes on each side.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the Chair entertain that motion?

Mr. KEIFER. The provision in the rules for limiting debate does not apply to an appeal.

The SPEAKER. No point of order was made, and the Chair supposed that the motion was entertained by unanimous consent. Is the point of order made?

Mr. KEIFER. It is.

Mr. WILLIS. Too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman rose in time. The Chair is not aware of any decision that has ever been made on this question. The rule of the House seems to confine the power of the House in limiting debate in Committee of the Whole to amendments, to paragraphs, and sections of a measure pending before the committee, and unless the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] knows of some decision on the subject the Chair will be obliged to hold that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I think it quite clear, as all debate on this section has by a special order of the House been limited to a certain time, which time—

The SPEAKER. That is a different proposition entirely. The Chair is not called upon to rule on that.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] will permit I think I can suggest a way out of the difficulty. It is possible that the presiding officer has a right to determine when debate has gone far enough—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to limit debate on the appeal can not be entertained. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is in session for the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill, and the pending question is whether the opinion of the Chair ruling out the Hennepin Canal provision was correct—an appeal having been taken. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] has the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The motion was made that we should go into Committee of the Whole, but it was not stated that we should go into committee for the consideration of the river and harbor bill; and I now raise the question of consideration, and move that we take up the appropriation bill designated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. KING. I insist upon the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is not in order. This bill is in order under a former instruction of the House, and the House has already declined to take up the regular appropriation bill referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] has the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it was not stated by the Speaker that we were going into Committee of the Whole to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that we shall have order, so that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] can be heard.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair to this point: When the motion was made that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole it was precisely as that motion is usually made; there was no designation of any particular business to be considered in the committee. It seems to me, therefore, that it was entirely competent for the committee to choose between any of the different matters that may be considered in Committee of the Whole. Nothing was said to indicate that it was the will of the House that we should consider this particular measure; there was nothing in the nature of instructions to the committee as to what it should take up. I know there were gentlemen who refrained from voting negatively upon that proposition because they were under the impression that when we did go into Committee of the Whole the usual rule would be observed, and we would then have an opportunity of raising the question of consideration and determine what matter should be considered.

Mr. WILLIS. The Chair has ruled upon this question, and there has been no appeal. I submit that the question has been settled by the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The point made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is identical with the one raised a few moments ago by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE], which the Chair has decided. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] will proceed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Illinois can proceed to debate without unanimous consent. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, that there should be unanimous consent; but as all debate on this section has been closed without making any exception with regard to any appeal, I submit that debate is not in order except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. All appeals are debatable.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. All debate has been closed upon this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The House limited debate on the section to one hour and a half and to three-minute speeches in favor of amendments. But the Chair expressly held that all the arguments which were had upon this question of order did not come out of that time. The uniform practice has been that debate on questions of order shall not be considered as affected by any limitation placed on debate.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. That is a very different question from an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] is not in order in arguing this proposition. He propounded a parliamentary inquiry, which the Chair has answered.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then I make the point of order that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto has been closed and debate upon this appeal can not be had except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Now I appeal from that decision; and I ask for one moment—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has just said that such appeals are not debatable. [Laughter.] The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair upon this point of order stand as the judgment of the committee? Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. All I wish to state is this: If the decision of the Chair is correct, then there may be unlimited debate upon this appeal, because in Committee of the Whole no motion to lay the appeal on the table is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the opinion of the Chair on this point of order—

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I withdraw the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] will proceed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavor to be as brief as possible in discussing this appeal, as I want the friends of this bill to understand that so far as I am concerned I have taken the appeal in good faith and not for the purpose of obstructing the passage of the bill.

I believe the decision of the Chair to be an erroneous one; and so believing, I have taken an appeal, and, with all due deference to the Chair, I desire to present my views upon the appeal.

It is held by the Chair that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction of the subject of the Hennepin Canal, and that therefore the proposition relating to it is not properly incorporated in the bill. Now, in order to reach this conclusion, the Chair refers to a rule, which is a rule of the House—not a rule of the Committee of the Whole—a rule which is in no manner applicable to the Committee of the Whole when engaged in the consideration of a bill which has been committed to it by the House itself. Rule XI provides that certain proposed legislation relating to certain subjects shall be referred to the committees respectively designated. But I desire the attention of the Chair and of the committee to the fact that this is a rule for the government of the House in the disposition of its business as it is presented by members from time to time, and can not possibly be applicable to the Committee of the Whole.

I claim that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had jurisdiction of this question first, because there were petitions on this subject presented by a member of the House in the way provided by the House itself and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The reference of these petitions to the committee gave the committee, I contend, jurisdiction of this subject. I call attention to Rule XXII, which is as follows:

Members having petitions or memorials to present may deliver them to the Clerk, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions and memorials, except such as, in the judgment of the Speaker, are of an obscene or insulting character, shall be entered on the Journal.

The language of this bill shows that these petitions and memorials are to come under the observation of the Speaker of the House, and if of a proper character—not obscene or insulting—they are to be referred; otherwise not.

But the point I make is this: This rule authorizes petitions to be presented and referred in this way, and it is the only rule of the House for the government of members of the House in regard to getting petitions before committees of the House; and I claim the gentleman from Indiana is in error when he says this is a mere clerical duty. This is the way the House itself has provided under the rules that we shall reach committees of the House by the presentation of petitions.

I insist that the petitions were properly presented; but, admitting that they were improperly presented, they were nevertheless referred to a committee of the House. They were so entered upon the Journal as having been referred to this Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Furthermore, they were printed in the RECORD as petitions referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That committee, if they thought they were improperly presented to it, might have reported them back to the House for reference to some other committee. The committee, however, held otherwise, and believed they had jurisdiction over this subject, and so there was incorporated in this bill this provision in reference to the Hennepin Canal.

I say with reference to these petitions in the absence of any action on the part of the House whatever that they conferred jurisdiction on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and that the only way any member could have avoided that committee's taking jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the petitions was by moving for the discharge of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors from the consideration of these petitions which had been referred to it by the House under the rule of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I could rest this whole case, in my opinion, upon the position alone that these petitions, having been referred under the rule of the House, and therefore referred by the House itself, were before that committee, and that committee was authorized to take jurisdiction of the subject even if it had not otherwise jurisdiction under the powers conferred upon it.

Now let me say further: The chairman has said it is claimed that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had jurisdiction because the report of the Chief of Engineers, with accompanying papers from officers in charge of rivers and harbors, was laid before the House by the Speaker and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The Chair says that does not refer to this provision, because if we claim that it claims too much, as "that construction would have given jurisdiction to that committee over the seacoast and lake-frontier defenses, the surveys of the Territories, the improvement and care of public buildings and grounds in and around Washington, the water supply of this District, the fishways at the Great Falls of the Potomac, the control of the Washington Aqueduct, &c.; for all these things are covered in that report."

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the opinion of the Chair, that is erroneous, for the simple reason that these subjects do not in any way relate to the improvement of rivers and harbors, and would not be germane in a river and harbor bill, and under the ordinary parliamentary usage would be subject to the point of order which might be raised against it both in committee and anywhere else that it was not germane to the bill. The Hennepin Canal is germane to the bill, I claim. It does relate, in the language of Rule XI, to the improvement of rivers and harbors.

I know it has been said in the discussion of this subject this canal could be constructed without removing a shovelful of earth from a river, but this canal will be as useless as the fifth wheel of a wagon without rivers. It connects rivers. You could not connect them without lifting a shovelful, and many shovelfuls, from the beds of the rivers it connects. It is intended to improve rivers, because it gives you, instead of going five or six hundred miles, a short cut and connects you with the lakes. The commerce which comes down the Mississippi River may take this canal and by the Illinois River go to the lakes, and so connect with the Atlantic seaboard. Therefore it is germane, and does relate to the improvement of rivers and harbors in the language of Rule XI itself.

I wish to give a little history, showing that everything that has been done in connection with this measure has been done on river and harbor bills. In 1870 there was a provision inserted in the river and harbor bill of that year authorizing a survey of this canal, and I have the statute here to show it. In 1870 there was a committee appointed on transportation routes to the seaboard, of which Senator Windom of Minnesota, Senator Conkling of New York, and Senator BECK of Kentucky, and other distinguished members of the Senate were members.

That committee examined this Hennepin Canal in connection with other transportation routes and they made a favorable report, recommending that this canal should be constructed in the interest of the commerce of this country and to give the people of this country cheaper transportation, and accordingly in 1875 this very provision, word for word, letter for letter, except as to the amount appropriated, was incorporated by the Senate of the United States in the river and harbor bill. It passed the Senate in that condition by a vote of 29 to 16, as I remember. I have the vote here, but will not stop to give it in detail, but by a decided majority it was incorporated into the river and harbor bill.

I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, that in the Forty-sixth Congress the Committee on Commerce of the Senate reported this same provision again, word for word, differing only in the amount of appropriation, as an amendment to the river and harbor bill. Points of order were made against the amendment, first, because it was new legislation; and second, because it was not relevant or germane to the bill; and after long discussion both points of order were overruled on a ye-and-nay vote of 33 to 18 on the first objection and by a vote of 33 to 17 on the second objection. The points of order were therefore overruled by a decided vote of the Senate, after an extended discussion, as any one will see by referring to the RECORD containing the same.

Senator MORGAN, of Alabama, raised the points of order, which were discussed by Senator ALLISON, Senator CONGER, and other Senators before the vote was taken; and it was held to be germane or relevant to a river and harbor bill. In that discussion Senator MORGAN used this language:

Those who framed this rule never gave to it that interpretation. On the contrary, the rule was established for the purpose of excluding that interpretation. If the rule means anything at all, it is that whatever appropriations shall come in upon a general appropriation bill shall be germane to the subject of that bill. The subject of this bill is not commerce or commercial facilities.

That is a great mistake. If the subject of this bill is anything at all it does relate to commercial facilities. It is but carrying out in its provisions the great object we have in view in improving rivers by the appropriations provided in this bill. It is for the purpose of giving increased facilities to commerce that we are here in this bill improving rivers and harbors, constructing canals, and carrying on the work on internal improvements as far as we can.

Senator MORGAN went on to say:

Therefore the amendment is not germane.

Now Mr. CONGER said in that debate:

Now, sir, as I say, there are propositions in this bill where the improvement proposed consists in opening a channel from one river by a canal into another or into a bayou. Why, sir, we have a proposition in this bill not only to dig a canal, but to make a lock in Louisiana—if Senators will look they will find it—to make and construct a lock through a marsh where there is no navigation at all. This bill bristles all over with propositions to dig artificial channels either through land above water or through land under water which is unnavigable; it is so all over the South, and I tell the gentleman that if this point of order can be raised upon this proposition it will stop the progress of dozens and dozens of works provided for in the bill at the South in the marshy region, in the bayou region, and all over that country. It does not affect the Hennepin Canal alone, but it stops with a jerk dozens of these improvements at the South.

What is the object of this bill that you call this improvement "general legislation" on it? The whole bill is to improve the means of transportation by water, whether it be by building canals to connect navigable waters in one place with navigable waters in another, or whether it be with dredges to dig a canal where there has been a channel of some kind where water has flowed. Where is the legislation in this amendment? I do not speak to the merits of the work at all, but I do say that almost half of the appropriations in this bill have been made to dig canals through the earth under water or over water for navigation. There is not one of the improvements, from New York Harbor clear around the Gulf to Corpus Christi, but what has for its object the making an artificial canal from the mouths of rivers and bays out into the ocean that are filled with earth or sand. The object is to provide for transportation, that vessels may go and come, that they may carry freight, that they may be useful to the people.

Apply this rule, and who shall say whether the channel through a sand bank or through other ground is excluded under such a rule as this? Is it relevant? Is it relevant to the object? The object is to make communication along water-courses or between water-courses. Where would the Louisville Canal have been if this rule had been applied, or the Keokuk Canal with its eight or ten or twelve miles of channel dug out upon the river, outside of its banks in many cases, or the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, dug through dry ground from the bed in the lake below to the river above, connecting Lake Superior and Lake Huron? They are all canals. It is a mere question of degree whether they are longer or shorter, and the question of degree can not control any such case as this.

This work takes the improvements which have already been made from Lake

Michigan down to Hennepin, a distance of some seventy miles, and there, instead of following the Illinois River two or three hundred miles to the Mississippi, makes a short cut across the land to the Mississippi of sixty-five miles, shortening navigation the whole distance.

Any one familiar with the appropriations made in the river and harbor bills for the last thirteen years will know that in a great many cases, in a majority of cases for improving harbors and improving streams, the engineers have recommended new cuts out of harbors by a shorter passage to the ocean or to the lake, a canal where there was no stream at all, and Congress has approved it. Why? Because the object was an outlet for the navigation of those waters to the greater waters beyond by the shortest, most expeditious, most convenient, most economical route.

Now, sir, after having investigated this subject, I will say that at one time jurisdiction over this subject was given to the Committee on Roads and Canals. That committee had jurisdiction over the improvement of the navigable rivers of the country; and it seems that some bills were reported by the Committee on Roads and Canals and some by the Committee on Commerce; but the Committee on Commerce has most generally exercised jurisdiction over the improvement of rivers and harbors. It has done so for many years. The Committee on Commerce has reported these bills not because I can find any rule imposing upon them the duty of doing so, but undoubtedly under the general powers conferred upon the committee to report matters relating to the commerce of the country.

And, as I said before, we find we may deal with the subject in relation to river and harbor improvements under the power to regulate commerce conferred by the Constitution upon Congress. It is under that provision that we are doing all this work, digging out channels where they are insufficient for transportation, enlarging them, improving them in many ways as a means for regulating, facilitating, and improving the commerce of the country, and giving to the people cheaper transportation.

I want to say a word in regard to the decision of the gentleman from Texas, Mr. WELLBORN, made as chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union at the last session of Congress, when these same points of order were made as to this canal provision. The chairman in his decision the other day sustaining the point of order said that the committee might not have understood the questions which were presented to the committee.

I do not think it just to indulge in presumptions that members of the committee did not understand their duties when they were voting upon any question presented to them. I think the presumption should be that every member votes understandingly; and I do not think the point well taken, as was suggested, that the House may not have understood how they were voting. But I have here the decision of the Chair to which I refer, and I want to read it:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark simply in reference to this, that the paragraph objected to is not an amendment, but is a part of the original bill, and therefore obviously not obnoxious to the clause of the rule which has just been read.

With reference to the third ground, the want of original jurisdiction in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the Chair will say this: the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is asked to withhold from the consideration of the committee a particular clause in an original bill on the ground that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors reporting the bill to the House did not have jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the particular clause. In the view in which the chairman of this Committee of the Whole takes of the question it is not necessary to decide whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of this particular clause or not. Whether it originally possessed that jurisdiction it is not necessary for the Chair to decide in the view which he takes of this question. Hence the Chair will not take the time to express any opinion in reference to it.

The view of the Chair is this: The action of the House in submitting this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for consideration does not leave it within the province of the Chair to pass upon the question of original jurisdiction in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The bill has been committed to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of consideration, and the chairman of this committee believes that he is but executing the order of the House when he decides that the bill shall be considered. The commitment of the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the Chair thinks was not a submission to the committee of the question whether or not the bill should be considered, but an express direction to the committee to consider the bill. To hold that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on a point of order could go back and inquire into asserted irregularities and errors in the stages of the bill which preceded its reference to the Committee of the Whole would be either to clothe the chairman of the Committee of the Whole with power to review and reverse the order of the House in the matter of the reference or place the House in the anomalous position of having expressly directed the Committee of the Whole to do a particular thing and at the same time left the committee to determine whether the thing directed should be done or not.

Now there is a plain declaration from the chairman in making that decision that in the view which he took of it it was not necessary to consider whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had jurisdiction over that subject or not; and why? I answer simply because, in the view which the Chair took of the question, it was not competent for the Committee of the Whole to inquire into the jurisdiction of another committee. I believe that decision will stand in the opinion of men who investigate it thoroughly as a sound decision; that is, that the House having received that bill from the hands of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and having referred it to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering it, the Chair had no right to go back and inquire as to the processes of legislation by which the subject-matter reached the River and Harbor Committee, was acted upon by the River and Harbor Committee, and ultimately reported by that committee to the House of Representatives, and by the House was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

If you adopt that rule, you involve the Committee of the Whole in endless investigation and examination, going outside of the legitimate duties of the Committee of the Whole, because the Committee of the Whole is a creature of the House; it is a committee of the House as well as a standing committee, as I said once before. It is a committee of a little higher dignity, but it has no powers except such as are conferred upon it by the House and by the rules of the House. And unless you can find some rule which authorizes the Committee of the Whole to go back and investigate everything connected with a bill—whether it was properly referred to a committee, whether the committee properly acted upon it or not—you involve us in endless confusion and in the investigations of questions and subjects which do not come legitimately before the Committee of the Whole.

What was said by the chairman [Mr. WELLBORN] about the decision of the Chair being based on a presumption that points of order were not reserved was a mere verbal declaration, made after he had pronounced the decision of the Chair, in answer to an inquiry by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. Therefore it is no part of the decision; it is a mere dictum outside of the decision of the Chair, and can not have any force whatever.

Now let us go to the last declaration which the chairman referred to. Here are the utterances of the Chair at that time, and the very last utterances ever made on that subject. They were quoted by the chairman in his opinion, and are as follows:

The Chair will further state that on yesterday he refrained from giving expression to his opinion touching the original jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors over the proposition for the Hennepin Canal, for the reason that the bill in its entirety having been referred by the House to the Committee of the Whole, it was not competent for the Committee of the Whole to go behind the reference and pass upon the question of original jurisdiction—

In another committee, to wit—in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

These, as I have said, were the last utterances of the Chair. The Chair also said, in addition to what I have just quoted, that—

Had the point been presented before the House at the proper time and in the proper way, the Chair thinks the clause should have been stricken from the bill.

The decision was then clearly based upon the ground that the Committee of the Whole had no power to inquire into the jurisdiction of another committee, even though points of order were reserved.

The chairman [Mr. WELLBORN] also said in the decision last referred to that if the Hennepin Canal clause had been out of the bill he should have ruled the amendment of Mr. O'NEILL out of order, it not in that case being germane to the bill.

I think in making that statement the Chair probably had not investigated the whole subject of the river and harbor bill, because the Committee on Commerce, exercising the power to report bills relating to commerce, and therefore to the improvement of rivers and harbors, while it took from the Committee on Roads and Canals, which at one time had the power of originating bills for the improvement of navigable rivers, began to absorb the duty of the Committee on Canals, and to include in river and harbor bills the construction of canals; and they entered on the construction of the Des Moines Rapids Canal, costing millions of dollars, which was originally reported in a river and harbor bill, as will be seen by reference to volume 14 of the Statutes at Large, page 420.

There will be found in a river and harbor bill the original provision to commence the construction of this Des Moines Rapids Canal. So with the canal around the Cascades; and so also with the Sault Ste. Marie Canal; it was in a river and harbor bill that the General Government received that work from the State of Michigan and went on to enlarge and improve it. And I hold there is no difference for the purpose of this argument between canals. A canal is a canal wherever it is situated, whether to connect two navigable parts of the same river or to connect two navigable rivers; it is all in the interest of navigation; it is all in the interest of improving rivers and harbors; it is all in the interest of enlarging the facilities of commerce for our people. And therefore this provision is germane to this river and harbor bill, as was held by the Senate by a vote of 33 to 17, and as much so as any other provision of the bill.

I want to call the attention of the committee to what Cushing in his Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies says as to the authority of a committee of the whole house. He says:

A committee of the whole like other committees derives its authority solely from the resolutions and votes of the house; is in like manner confined within the powers delegated to it, and can not consider any other matters than those which have been regularly committed to it, or in any other manner than it is authorized by the house.

"Than it is authorized by the House." Now, if this Committee of the Whole has any power whatever to consider the jurisdiction of another committee of this House in its action upon any bill, I care not what, it must be under some rule of the House. And I say there is no rule of the House that justifies this committee in striking this provision out of the bill upon a question of order, because Rule XI, as I have said, only defines the jurisdiction of committees, and says all proposed legislation relating to certain subjects, that is, standing in some relation, having some bearing or connection, which is the meaning of the words "relating to," shall be referred to such and such committees; and that, as I said before, is a complete answer to everything that can be said as to that rule. It is a rule of the House for the government of the House itself in its reference of petitions or of bills and other subjects which are referred to committees. And the Committee of the Whole, I repeat, had no authority to call in question proceedings under that rule.

Now the Chair referred to the Digest and read paragraph 7 of Rule XI, which not only defines the jurisdiction of the committee as I have stated it, but adds this matter of privilege to that committee. The Chair says Rule XXIII requires that "all motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people, all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced."

But that, I submit to the Chair, refers to action in the House. If a bill is called up in the House for consideration and the point of order is made that it is a bill appropriating money or imposing a tax upon the people, then it has to be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, where it must be first considered. But even in the House, if the discussion has been entered upon, it is then too late to make the point, and I can not see that that rule has any bearing whatever in this case.

But the chairman goes on to say: "Paragraph 8 of the same rule (XXIII) declares that the rules of proceeding in the House shall be observed in Committees of the Whole House so far as they are applicable." That is the only authority that is given to the Committee of the Whole to act under the rules of the House when in Committee of the Whole. The House itself expressly declares that the rules of proceeding in the House shall be observed in Committee of the Whole—not all of them, but only so far as they are applicable. In that case only they are binding on the Committee of the Whole.

Now in answer to that I say: If you turn to the rules and find any rule there applicable to the Committee of the Whole which justifies the committee in striking out this provision upon a question of order, then I concede you may do so; but I ask gentlemen to point out the rule. There is no such rule from the beginning to the end. On a general appropriation bill I might offer an amendment, or the Committee on Appropriations might bring in a bill here with provisions changing existing law and making new appropriations from the Treasury, and they would be in order except for a certain rule of this House, to wit: Rule XXI, clause 3, which provides that no appropriation shall be included in a general appropriation bill which changes existing law, unless it at the same time reduces expenditures.

That is a rule of the House which is applicable to the Committee of the Whole, and when the point of order is reserved in the House it means that if there should be any such provision found in the general appropriation bill a member shall have the right to take advantage of that rule. But you find no such rule relating to river and harbor bills, none whatever.

Now let me read from the Digest, page 268. The Chair also alludes to the Digest, and says: "Our Digest of Rules, when it states that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole can not rule a proposition in an appropriation bill committed to it out of order, says, 'Of course it is otherwise where the point was reserved before commitment.'" Now I want to read what is said in the Digest, and I ask members to pay particular attention to it, because, instead of being an authority against the position I take, it is an authority directly in favor of it, as I contend by every fair construction of language. I read from the Digest, page 268:

In the case of an appropriation reported by the Committee on Appropriations in conflict with Rule XXI, clause 3, and committed with the bill, it is incompetent for the Committee of the Whole, or its chairman, to rule it out of order—

Now, let us go on—because the House, having committed the bills, are presumed to have received, as in order, the report in its entirety; but of course it is otherwise where the point was reserved.

Where what point is reserved? Why, where the point is reserved, on a general appropriation bill, that the provision changes existing law without reducing expenditures—in other words, that it is new legislation, which, under the rules, can not be incorporated in a general appropriation bill.

But I submit that that relates only to the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole in the discussion of general appropriation bills which are always to be first considered in Committee of the Whole. Therefore I claim that this is an authority in my favor. Suppose that had been left out as I read it in the first place—"and committed with the bill it is incompetent for the Committee of the Whole or its chairman to rule it out of order, because, the House having committed the bills, are presumed to have received, as in order, the report in its entirety."

I say that in this case the House is presumed to have received as in order this bill in its entirety. The House referred it to the Committee of the Whole not to strike out its provisions upon questions of order, unless they were questions of order which might be legitimately raised, and such as are raised in the consideration of a bill in Committee of the Whole upon all amendments which are not germane, upon amendments which are forbidden by some rule of the House that may be applicable to Committees of the Whole. I submit that that is an authority against the decision of the Chair and against the position of the gentleman who took these points of order; and, in my opinion, the point of order was not properly sustained by any fair view of the question.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield the floor?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. No, sir; I do not. I want to yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HENLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENLEY. I desire to know how much time the gentleman from Illinois has on this appeal from the decision of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole? My question is, whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON], having obtained the floor as he did on this appeal, is entitled to a full hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows no limit excepting an hour.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, is there no way of limiting the debate upon this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not called upon to answer that question. The House can limit the debate when it sees fit. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee, I can say what I have to say on this subject in less than five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I should hesitate under any circumstances to vote to overrule the decision of any chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and especially the present occupant of the chair. I was very much interested in the very able argument that the Chair submitted in ruling upon this point of order; and that argument, if it had been presented to the House at the proper time when this matter was before it, would have had deservedly great weight. The only error that the Chair committed was in assuming that a question of jurisdiction was one addressed to the Chair as a question of order. If the honorable chairman had been more of a parliamentarian than he is a lawyer, he would have realized the fact that all questions of the jurisdiction of committees in this House are addressed to the House and to the committees of the House, and have never been determined by the Chair as questions of order.

It is true that frequently, when the title of a bill presented is read, the Chair states that it should go to this or that committee. But that is merely an opinion; it is not a decision from which an appeal can be taken. It is merely obiter dictum. Any gentleman in the House could immediately rise and move a different reference; and that would be the proper course rather than to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, because it is always in the province of the House to determine what reference of a matter shall be made by the House.

These petitions which are sent to committees through the petition-box have indicated upon them by the person introducing them the reference he desires. That reference is published in the RECORD the next morning, and is open to the investigation and scrutiny of every member of the House. Unless some member then objects to that reference, moves to discharge the committee and bring the matter back to the House for proper reference, the question becomes by that reference adjudicated by the House, and the reference as made is final.

It is within the province of this House to send a bill granting a pension to the Committee on Ways and Means; and if that committee gets such a bill by direction of the House it has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, because it has been referred to it by the House. So a tariff bill might, by a majority of the House, be referred to the Committee on Pensions; and if so referred that committee would have jurisdiction to pass upon the bill and report it back. These committees are simply agents of the House for the convenient transaction of its business. The House is to determine what bills shall be referred to particular committees; and when a committee gets a bill in that way it has to act upon it.

Now the Committee of the Whole stands in the same relation as any other committee of the House; and when any matter is referred to it by the action of the House it is a proper subject for the Committee of the Whole to act upon, and should not be suppressed from consideration on a point of order decided by the Chair.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE].

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, the question of order now pending in this case is before this House for the second time. During the first session of this Congress the same point of order substantially was raised, and the decision of the Chair at that time overruled the point of order. In this case the objection taken to the consideration of this particular item of the bill has been sustained by the Chair. But while substantially this same question has already been before the House, it is not now presented under the same conditions as heretofore. When the question arose at the last session there existed a fact which, in the judgment of the chairman, was decisive; and that was that points of order had not been reserved. Upon that fact the opinion of the Chair in that instance was based.

Now, I do not claim that that decision is to be received as conclusive in the case. There is here a fact which did not exist in the other case. In this case there were petitions referred, and properly referred, to the committee; and this circumstance distinguishes this case from that which arose a year ago. While I do not claim that the decision in the first case is to be accepted in any sense as conclusive in this case, I shall, perhaps, have occasion to allude to the doctrine of the former decision as having some bearing upon the question under consideration.

Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that when the present question was first argued the objection to the provision of the bill was put substantially on the ground that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had no jurisdiction on this subject, because in attempting to deal with it they were violating Rule XXIII. That position, as I understand, is now abandoned; and it is now maintained by the Chair and by those gentlemen who agree with the decision that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had no authority to deal with this matter because of Rule XI, which limits the authority of this committee to matters which may be strictly defined as rivers and harbors. Now I have two answers to make to the claim that this committee had no jurisdiction. My first, which I think is decisive, is that the submission of petitions on the subject to that committee is conclusive upon this question of order. I make that point, because when this question was argued a few days ago I observed that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentlemen from Georgia (and I think the Chair inclined to adopt the same idea) admitted that if these petitions had been referred to that committee by a vote of the House the committee would have had jurisdiction; but it was contended that a reference of the petitions through the petition-box did not give the committee jurisdiction.

Now, I ask these gentlemen to reflect for a moment and tell me, if they can, how a petition can go to any committee of this House except through the petition-box? If their construction is to stand, then they deny the right of petition to the people, because there is no other mode of referring petitions provided in your rules. No man can rise here in the House on any day in the week and offer a petition to be referred to a committee unless he obtains unanimous consent. I ask attention to that fact. Under our rules in no other way than through the petition-box can a petition go to a committee. It is expressly declared that on Monday only bills and resolutions shall be presented. Now, reflect a moment. How are your rules established? What do they mean? You are so pressed here with business that you can give but one day in the week to the presentation of bills and resolutions; and you can not give a single day to the presentation of petitions. Yet you do not mean to deny the right of petition to the people. So you provide by your rules that every day in the week the people may, through their Representatives, come here with their petitions, and that these petitions, through the petition-box and in no other way, may be referred to appropriate committees; because by reason of the stress and pressure of business it is impossible to deal with petitions in any other way. That is the meaning of our rules.

Why, Mr. Chairman, look at your RECORD to-day. You will find that yesterday fifty petitions were presented. Could you receive these numerous petitions every day in the week and in the same manner that you receive bills? These petitions have to be presented and referred; and by the very necessity of the case they go to your committees through the petition-box because they can go in no other mode.

Then will any gentleman of this committee, when he reflects upon that, undertake to say that when a petition goes to a committee in regular form in the mode prescribed by the rule, that when it gets there that committee has no jurisdiction? Is that to be maintained?

Again, that rule not only provides it should go in that way to the committee, but that invests the committee with authority to decide whether it is a proper submission. If this House authorizes the committee to make that decision it must stand upon it and accept it as final.

I mean to qualify, and am willing to qualify, this remark by this observation: It was suggested here this rule may be abused. I grant it; but is it to be objected to a rule that it is not the rule because it may be abused?

Again, if that rule is to be abused in any gross, in any flagrant way, it has been decided by this House that it is a question of privilege on the part of the House to take cognizance of the fact and discharge the committee on the subject in controversy, and refer it to the committee which in its opinion has jurisdiction of it. So that if your committee, or any member of the House, attempts grossly to misapply a rule, the House can vindicate itself by exerting its privilege to discharge the committee and refer the matter to wherever it thinks proper.

But I repeat, and ask the attention of the committee to the fact, that you deny the right of petition to the people under the rules if you say this mode is not just as valid and just as conclusive on any point of order as if made by the House itself. It is the action of the House itself. That conformity to the rule observed by the members of the House in that way is known to the House. That is one point I hope I have succeeded in making clear to this committee. Therefore I submit it is impossible to maintain the position that reference under this rule through the petition-box does not give jurisdiction to the committee.

It may be consistent with Rule XII; but observe what Rule XII is. Let me say that Rule XII is not a rule in any satisfactory sense as compared with other rules. As has been said on the floor, if a wrong reference has been made by the Speaker does it not compel the asking consent that rule shall be suspended every day when any gentleman moves for a reference?

A MEMBER. What rule?

Mr. STONE. That which applies to the reference of different subjects to different committees. That which provides that all subjects relating to railways and canals should go to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and all subjects relating to naval affairs should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and so on. That is not in any satisfactory sense a rule compared with other rules of the House, for it is suspended every day in the week, while every other rule can only be suspended twice a month by a two-thirds vote. That we know is practically suspended by any gentleman getting up and moving to have any reference he may choose. Only yesterday the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] tried to refer a matter to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] stated that in his judgment it ought to go more properly to the Committee on Public Lands. Can there be any question the Speaker was right in referring that matter to a majority vote of the House? That can not be denied.

Again, not to take too much time on this point, there is another I wish to submit, and that is this: My experience has taught me this practice of the House authorizing the Committee of the Whole to deal with the question of order is a vicious practice, and one which can not be defended. And for this reason, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama: what power have you to-day in committee in limiting debate? How can you limit debate on a question of appeal? You can not move to lay the appeal upon the table; you can not call the previous question, and the only way of limiting debate is to move that the committee rise. That is the only way you can get out of the difficulty. You have to move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate. In my opinion, the proper way is in accordance with the English practice: to move the committee rise at once, so that the House may decide the matter as soon as it is presented. I say in my judgment this thing is indefensible and inconsistent with the idea of the Committee of the Whole—this attempt to deal with questions of order.

But, to pass from that for a moment, assuming under our practice it may be proper to deal with the point in committee, I maintain it can not be competent for the Committee of the Whole to undertake to define the jurisdiction of another committee, such as is attempted here. Upon no theory of construction can you find authority in a committee such as this, constituted as any other committee is, to define the jurisdiction of any other committee unless specially required to do it.

I understand the chairman to say, although on that point I did not quite understand him, that by reserving the point of order the committee was virtually instructed to decide upon the point of order. I submit it is not possible to interpret the reservation of the point of order as an instruction to the committee to decide that point of order. On the contrary, the reservation made is a reservation of the House itself, and it can not properly or successfully be maintained such reservation is an instruction to the committee to decide such a point of order.

And if the committee was not instructed to decide the point of order, I submit it is impossible to hold satisfactorily, upon any construction of the power and authority of the committee, that the Committee of the Whole has by virtue of its general authority the right to deal with the question of order which relates to the subject-matter submitted to them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I reserve the remainder of my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I have but two objects in view: the first is to maintain the rules of the House; and the next is to prevent what I regard as a mischievous innovation upon the river and harbor bill. These, I think, are important public objects which may well engage the attention of members.

The gentleman from Illinois who entered this appeal seems to lay his chief stress on the proposition that the reference of this bill by the House to the Committee of the Whole concluded all inquiry as to the question of jurisdiction. I respectfully dissent. When a bill appropriating money comes from the Committee on Appropriations, or when the Committee on Rivers and Harbors report their bill, the only thing that can be done then under the rules of the House is to refer such bills to the Committee of the Whole, because they can not receive their first consideration in the House; and it is on account of this rule that the practice has grown up of reserving points of order before the bills are so referred. It is well understood that by "points of order" objections are raised to such parts of a bill as violate the rules. And the reference of the bill after the points of order are reserved carries with the bill these objections into the Committee of the Whole.

After we have come into Committee of the Whole on a bill so referred, after the points of order had been reserved, shall we be told that we have no standing on the points of order? We have no standing on these questions in the House, because, under the rules, the first consideration of such a bill can not be had in the House. The result of the gentleman's position would be to preclude altogether points of order on such a bill, and to invest the committee reporting it to the House with the power to create its own jurisdiction. Under that view also the practice long established of reserving points of order on all appropriations would be nullified—a practice under which millions are annually saved to the Treasury. Why, no longer ago than yesterday a clause of the naval appropriation bill, involving an expenditure for new ships of war, was stricken out on a point of order reserved.

The gentleman from Illinois insists that the reference of a petition on the subject of the Hennepin Canal to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors through the petition-box confers upon that committee jurisdiction over that subject. After the exhaustive opinion of the chairman on this point I would not have referred to the matter had not the honorable gentleman from Illinois given it the weight of his great authority. The rule which directs the reference of a petition in this way on its very face provides that it shall be done by a clerk under the indication of a single member.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. That is done by the House.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I deny that it is done by the House. In no sense of the word can it be claimed that this is the action of the House. It is done by the action of a single member.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. But if the gentleman from Georgia will allow me, I say subject to the approval of the Speaker of the House.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is right, I can, by the presentation of a petition through this box without the Clerk having the power to say yea or nay to me—I can have referred to the Committee on Elections, of which I am a member, memorials which will confer on that committee the jurisdiction of every other committee of this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. And that is frequently done, too.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman from Illinois says it is frequently done. The gentleman has seen a longer service in this Hall than I; but I believe no such thing, and he can not demonstrate any such absurd assertion against the practice of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not mean—

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I hope the gentleman will allow me to proceed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg pardon for interrupting the gentleman.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. This reference of matters through the petition-box to committees the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] says is under the supervision of the Speaker. That is a limited supervision, which any gentleman will find by examining the twenty-second rule is confined simply to the question as to whether the petition contains any obscene or insulting matter. When the Speaker finds any such matter as that he can exclude it; but in no other case has he the power to change the destination of the petition. And hence all that argument of the gentleman from Illinois falls to the ground.

The general business that comes into the House goes to committees by the reference of the House or by the reference of the Speaker (which is the same thing), but petitions and memorials are sent to committees through the petition-box under the other rule to which I have adverted. When these petitions or memorials reach a committee the question comes up there whether or not the petitions and memorials have been referred to the appropriate committee. The first question is, has the memorial or petition gone to the committee through the petition-box by the action of the Clerk; the next question is, has it gone to the proper or appropriate committee? When these two things concur then the committee has jurisdiction over the subject-matter; otherwise under the rule (XXII) the petition or memorial has to come back to the box.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] relies upon the decision of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole during the last session, when a similar bill was presented having this clause in it. He seemed in the first part of his argument to rely greatly on the authority of that opinion. But before he had taken leave of it, as I understood him, he himself impeached the decision—I use the word in no offensive sense—he questioned the accuracy of the opinion of that same chairman when he said he would have ruled the Hennepin clause out of the bill if points of order had been reserved on it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Georgia will allow me only a word—

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman for a correction, not for a speech.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. The correction I desire to make is this: The Chair said that he would have ruled the Hennepin clause as not germane; but there were other canal clauses in the bill, and I took it for granted that had been overlooked.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I have a high respect for the opinion of the chairman of that Committee of the Whole, and I think it is due to him that his precise position should be stated. It was done by the chairman of this Committee of the Whole in the opinion delivered on this question. The opinion of the chairman cited from the RECORD of the last session was based upon the fact that no points of order were reserved against the bill then pending. The points of order have been reserved in this case, and, therefore, as has been candidly stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE], that opinion is authority for the decision of the present chairman. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have a certain defined jurisdiction which is expressed in these words:

The improving of rivers and harbors.

Can a committee having only the power to report an appropriation for the improvement of rivers and harbors go to the extent of making a river?

Mr. STONE rose.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I have no desire to pursue the question of germaneness, because that is not involved in the appeal. What does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] desire?

Mr. STONE. Will the gentleman give us the words of that rule which he has just attempted to repeat, in which he says the committee is limited to the improvement of rivers and harbors?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman knows that rule as well as I do.

Mr. STONE. I insist the rule says:

Subjects relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I ask the gentleman in reply whether the making of a new river is included in "the subjects relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors?"

The main ground of this contention, Mr. Chairman, is involved in another clause of the rule to which neither of the three gentlemen who have preceded me has given even the respect of a passing glance. Nor was it noticed in the arguments against the point of order when it was raised. I refer to clause 8 of Rule XI, which not only defines the jurisdiction of the committee as I have stated it and not as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] would state it, but adds this:

And the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills.

Here is a special parliamentary privilege conferred for reporting bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors; but no possible construction can extend this privilege to embrace a canal. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have, therefore, plainly exceeded their privilege.

This point, Mr. Chairman, was not made in the case which was tried before the Committee of the Whole during the last session.

No gentleman who has challenged the decision of the Chair has said a single word in reply to it. I insist that this view of the rule concludes every question of order involved in this case. It is the first time the point has ever been made, and no gentleman has ventured to reply to it. I insist, therefore, that the judgment of the Chair on the main point stands unchallenged and uncontradicted.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] has five minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I regret to make the point, but under the rule I think the Chair will find that the gentleman's time is exhausted.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my right to occupy the remaining five minutes. In the first place, in regard to the petitions having been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I have only this to say, that if the gentleman [Mr. TURNER] is correct, and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors received those petitions and hold that they did have jurisdiction of this matter, then I want to know what right this Committee of the Whole has now to go back and inquire into that question of jurisdiction and decide that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not have jurisdiction. I submit that this committee has no right to do anything of that kind.

No, sir; as to the objection which I omitted to note, I desire, with all due respect to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] and the Chair, to submit this consideration: That was a matter which might properly have been interposed against the consideration of this bill; but by no rule, by no twisting or squirming or torturing of any rule, can you now divide up the bill after you have entered upon the consideration of it, and say that you will not consider all that part of it because you are giving precedence to one part over another. If the gentleman [Mr. TURNER, of Georgia] had at the proper time made the point that this was not a river and harbor bill because it contained provisions that did not relate to the improvements of rivers and harbors, that might have been a good point—though I do not admit it—but now, after the Committee of the Whole has entered upon the consideration of the bill, it is too late to attempt to divide it up into parts and consider some parts and reject others. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. No question has come before this House in which I have felt so deep an interest as I feel in this, but I am not unmindful of the fact that our time is very limited, and that therefore it may be as well for the interests I represent that the House should not be delayed in reaching a vote. For that reason, sir, I will not longer occupy the time of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 107, noes 62.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, and Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 108, noes 85.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to ascertain which and how many, if any, of the navigable streams within the jurisdiction of the United States have been and are now improved by locks and dams, or by either, or by other improvements, either by States or by corporations in pursuance of State authority, and upon which streams and for the use of which improvement toll is now charged, and whether said improvements can be purchased or condemned by the United States, and the probable cost of each of said improvements, together with the probable benefit to navigation and commerce of such purchase or condemnation when made with the view of making the navigation of such streams free; and that he report to the next Congress.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. There was an amendment to the first section which I sent to the Clerk's desk when we were last considering this bill. It has not been read.

Mr. WILLIS. I suggest to the gentleman that it will come in at the end of the bill just as well as here.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I am not particular about the place where it is inserted, so that I have the opportunity to present it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN], as the Chair understands, does not insist on his amendment now.

Mr. WELLER. There was an amendment placed in the hands of the Clerk which I desire to have read. It was intended to come in as section 2. I have submitted that amendment to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and as I understand he will make no objection to it, I desire to have it read and acted on now.

Mr. WILLIS. I suggest to my friend from Iowa that it be offered hereafter as a separate section.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it come up at once.

The Clerk read Mr. WELLER's amendment, as follows:

Add to section 1, at the end of line 985, the following words:

"SEC. 2. That each particular appropriation in section 1 of this act contained or mentioned shall be paid as nearly as may be only in the following moneys and currency of the United States of America, and the same, and no part thereof, shall be paid in any representative of the currency or moneys in said section mentioned, namely: one-third part of each particular sum of the aforesaid appropriation shall be paid only in standard silver dollars; one-third part in silver certificates, and one-third part in Treasury notes; and each sum of said appropriations shall be, at the expense of the Government, in said moneys and currency as herein mentioned, actually transferred to and disbursed at the locality where the appropriation is to be expended."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WELLER, it was not agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I understand that if I do not insist upon a division on this question I shall be permitted to have a vote on the amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. No division being called for, the Chair could not do otherwise than pronounce the decision. Any arrangement the gentleman may make with regard to a vote in the House is a matter with which the Chair can have nothing to do.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the second section.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "directed," in line 1, section 2, "to detail such a number of officers from the Army, of the rank of captain and lieutenant, as will be sufficient to take the places of the civilian engineers now employed in the improvement of rivers and harbors. And hereafter no civil engineers shall be employed on such works, except in extraordinary cases, and when so employed he shall report his reasons for such employment to the next session of Congress; and also, &c."

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point that this amendment is not germane to the section.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to be heard on the question of order. A number of days ago substantially this same amendment was offered and the same question of order raised. At that time, after discussion, the Chair held the proposition to be in order, but later, for the convenience of the committee—

Mr. WILLIS. I recognize the correctness of the gentleman's statement, and withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the other day when this amendment was pending I suggested to the House that a late report from the Secretary of War had informed us there were about two hundred and two civil engineers now in the employ of the United States upon these works; that the amount paid in salaries to these engineers was something like $500,000 a year, or at that rate by monthly payments. Now we have 1,468 officers of the line who are captains and lieutenants. Every one of these gentlemen has been educated as an engineer, and is at least the equal of the average of the civilians who are employed by the Government. A great majority of these officers of our Army have comparatively little to do, and it seems to me it would be eminently proper that they should be put upon this work.

It was suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas the other day the art of military engineering was entirely distinct from that of hydrographic engineering, and by imposing this new duty on the officers of the Army their fitness for their legitimate duties would be destroyed. I desire to remind him as military engineers there is no occupation for them. We are not engaged in constructing defensive works. We have refused Congress after Congress to make appropriations for purposes of that kind, and the probabilities are we will never have a war where land forces will be needed. We are so situated we can be entirely independent of fear of attack here on our own soil. No European army in numbers sufficiently formidable could land on our shores. Our neighbors on the north and south are much more formidable it seems to me. If there should be difficulty between ourselves and them we would be compelled to act on the defensive rather than on the offensive, so that there may be little necessity for continuing the large number of engineers we now have simply for military engineering.

It was also suggested by another gentleman that the instructions received at the Military Academy were not of a character to fit them for this work. I am not willing to believe that is entirely so, and if it is so, and if we adopt the plan of putting the work into the hands of the officers of the Army, the line of instructions at the Military Academy will have to be reformed. New studies will be imposed upon them, and they will pursue them, and we will in a short time have the best educated men of the country to carry on these works.

Mr. HERR. Army engineers do the work now.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is a mistake. There is an idea abroad Army engineers do this work. As a matter of fact they are not doing it.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I wish to say that the statement to which the gentleman refers, namely, that officers educated at West Point are not taught civil engineering is a mistake. They are well trained in it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I thank the gentleman for his correction. I was simply quoting an objection put the other day, and I was about to say there was a popular error that these works are being carried on by the Army, but as a matter of fact the Mississippi River Commission now have in their employ sixty-seven civil engineers in addition to the details made from the Army, and we are now paying an excess of $100,000 to the civil engineers employed upon that one work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the debate on the pending section and amendments thereto be limited to one minute.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. I move the committee rise to close debate.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 14.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum; we can not be gagged in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not required to rise.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAGLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the river and harbor bill had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to continue the consideration of the river and harbor bill, and upon that motion I move that all debate on the pending bill and amendments thereto be limited to one minute.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky (at 3 o'clock p. m.) moved the House adjourn.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to limit debate to one hour.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I demand a division on my motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 114.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move the House take a recess until 4 o'clock this afternoon. If we are to continue this bill we should have some kind of discussion.

Mr. KING. Regular order.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 130.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of the following bills:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BAGLEY in the chair). The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WHITE, and the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is ready to call up one of the regular appropriation bills; and, if so, I am ready to withdraw the point of order for that purpose. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will take their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 2, noes 167.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I now call up again my motion to limit debate upon the section under consideration to one minute.

Mr. ANDERSON. And I insist upon the amendment to make it one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. When the gentleman from Kentucky made his motion to limit debate to one minute I immediately offered an amendment to limit debate to one hour. My point of order is that the vote must first be taken upon my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at that time. The Chair is informed that a motion to adjourn was pending, however, at the time the gentleman from Kansas interposed his motion, which, of course, would exclude the motion.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. The motion to adjourn was pending.

Mr. ANDERSON. I now renew the motion to limit debate to one hour.

Mr. WILLIS. That can not be done, for I have demanded the previous question.

Mr. ANDERSON. The previous question has not been demanded yet.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky rose in his place, and, as the Chair understood, stated that he renewed his motion to limit debate to one minute.

Mr. WILLIS. And on that I demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear that demand.

Mr. ANDERSON. I made my motion when the gentleman made his first motion to limit debate and before any demand for the previous question was made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that if he made any demand for the previous question it was not heard by the Chair or the Journal Clerk or by the Official Reporters.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that by unanimous consent earlier in the consideration of this bill three minutes were allowed to explain any amendment that might be offered.

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of order now.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to know whether this motion can be made if that agreement was entered into, allowing three minutes? This proposes to cut off all debate within a limited time.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to determine under the order of the House heretofore made and which the Speaker has not examined.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to limit debate to one hour.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand from statements made by gentlemen around me that thirty minutes will be acceptable to those opposing this bill; and with a view to settling the matter harmoniously I will accept that, and modify my motion accordingly.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is satisfactory to me.

The motion to limit debate to thirty minutes on the section was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I now renew the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2327) for the relief of James Bedell, sr.; and

A bill (H. R. 2551) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes."

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Under instructions of the House all debate on the second section is limited to thirty minutes. The Chair will allot fifteen minutes to each side of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa is so perfectly fair on its face and so directly within the line of economy and good government, that there should be no hesitation on the part of this committee in adopting it. At a very large expenditure annually this Government is educating, in the best possible method and to the highest point of efficiency, these officers at West Point and at Annapolis. The proposition that these gentlemen are not competent to supervise the improvement of rivers and harbors is to my mind simply preposterous. The reverse of that proposition, that civilians are more competent, is the severest criticism which can be made upon our military educational institutions. Now, it has been the boast of the Democratic party from time immemorial that it was in favor of avoiding extravagance. This river and harbor bill is one always large and in which there are items always extravagant. The simple proposition is here presented: instead of expending half a million a year in employing civilian engineers to utilize the Army officers, and saving thereby the expenditure of this half million dollars; and the question is what, upon the principles advocated by the Democratic party, is there on the face of the amendment that does not warrant its adoption?

Why will you expend half a million for civilians when you have Army officers more competent, to-day practically without employment, and you can use them? That is the whole question presented here. It has become a custom that we shall employ as many men as possible, so it seems, under this Mississippi River Commission and otherwise, for the prosecution of this work; and yet here stand a body of men, than whom none are better educated or better qualified, whom you are paying year by year, whom you have educated, and whom you refuse to detail to perform this duty, being the more willing to increase the bulk of your river and harbor bill not for the purpose of developing channels, not for giving increased facilities for commerce, but simply to provide for outsiders. It seems to me that that is about the proposition submitted here.

When it comes, Mr. Chairman, to the question of developing our great channels, the rivers which shall become highways of commerce, there is no one who will go further in right appropriations than will I. But I am not, because of the earnestness of my belief in that proposition, willing that it shall be used as a veil under which to carry other things to which I am opposed.

There has been eliminated from this bill a measure which had it been included in it might have been the beginning of a water way over which the grain of the West might have obtained cheaper rates than by the present method of transportation by rail; and in eliminating that—in virtually depriving us in the West of any possibility of any further water communications with the East—you simply relegate us to the merciless, iron, granitic cupidity of the railroad corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] how much of the time he proposes to occupy himself.

Mr. ANDERSON. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already spoken five and a half minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. The Mississippi River Commission furnishes, it seems to me, a very fair illustration of the necessity of some such measure as this. I have already stated the large number of civil engineers that were employed on the work of that commission. One of the objections to the improvement of our rivers and harbors is the wanton extravagance that is indulged in. If economy were used, if we utilized cheaply the force that we have, the people of this country would not object to these burdensome river and harbor bills. That commission I was able to show on a previous occasion had upon its rolls such a number of servants as required the expenditure of more than half a million dollars each year. They had been so lavish in their expenditures in their efforts to provide themselves with plant that they had expended of the appropriation nearly one and a half million dollars simply in purchasing the tools with which they were to carry on the improvement.

I venture the assertion that of all the immense sums that have been appropriated for the improvement of that river since the organization of that commission nearly one-half have been expended in plant and in salaries—nearly one-half of it. Now this ought not to be. If we can save with reference to that improvement alone $115,000 we certainly ought to do it. If we can save in connection with the other improvements $385,000 a year we certainly ought to do it. It will not do to say that these gentlemen that are named in the amendment I have offered have not the education to fit them for this work. That is to denounce as a failure the Military Academy and all of the efforts of this nation to properly educate our engineers. After the appropriations we make each year for the maintenance of that institution it will not do for us to stultify ourselves by declaring that all of our efforts are non-effective. I have here a partial list of some of the distinguished engineers that have been educated at that institution. I find on it the names of Beauregard, Foster, Franklin, Gillmore, Halleck, and Humphreys. These men we have educated at West Point and they have graduated there as engineers and served in that capacity. The list is long. And I want to call attention to the fact that there is no difference in the line of the studies pursued by these gentlemen who have graduated as engineers or been assigned to that corps and the others. They all study the same text-books.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa whether he desires to speak longer than five minutes?

Mr. HEPBURN. Five minutes were yielded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. And that time has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. I am in favor of this amendment. I think it ought to be adopted. If there be a service in this country which has the confidence of the people so far as its integrity is concerned it is the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army. They are above reproach. And if they be employed to superintend this work and to disburse the moneys the people of the country will have confidence that, though they may sometimes be mistaken in their judgments and opinions, yet the money will be honestly disbursed.

I think it is a dangerous thing to employ civilian engineers in this work; to take them from their particular localities, to bring influences to bear in favor of particular localities, and thus to have recommendations to Congress influenced to some extent by considerations that should not enter into the conclusions arrived at. And I think that if the engineer service were devoted wholly to the improvement of our rivers and harbors in this country this would free it from perhaps some suspicions that attach to the management of that service, and it would be a guarantee at once to the people and to the Government that the moneys expended for these improvements would be honorably and honestly expended for the purposes to which they were applied.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] has three minutes.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is evidently in the interest of retrenching expenditures. It is more: it is a compliment to the United States Military Academy. After having expended $500 per annum upon each of the cadets who go at the Government's expense to same point of order. I expected that, but I wanted to lay before the committee—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submits if the gentleman concedes the ruling against him is correct that no further time should be occupied in debate on the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I did not say it was correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the gentleman conceded it would be pronounced out of order by the committee, and it would be an unnecessary consumption of the time to debate it further. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I beg the Chair to indulge me in stating my opinions on this matter. If it is a waste of time or not is for me to decide and not for the Chair. If he decides I am not entitled to the floor then I will yield, but if the Chair says I am entitled to the floor I will not allow the Chair to tell me that it is a waste of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair took the gentleman's own remark that he was not arguing the question before the committee. The question is whether the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the committee.

The decision of the Chair was sustained; and the amendment was ruled out.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have an amendment to offer to section 2.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I will move it to section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 3 will now be read, and then the amendment can be offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to secure a judicious and economical expenditure of said sums, and shall cause to be made and submitted to Congress annual reports, including the report of the Mississippi River Commission, on or before December 1, giving detailed statements of the work done, contracts made, and expenditures thereunder or otherwise up to November 1, and the effect of such work, together with such recommendations as he may deem it proper to lay before Congress. He shall also, at the same time, report to Congress at its next session all the instances in the United States in which piers, breakwaters, or other structures or works built or made by the United States in aid of commerce or navigation are used, occupied, or injured by a corporation or an individual, and the extent and mode of such use, occupation, or injury, and the facts touching the same. He shall report annually, at the same time, whether any bridges, causeways, or structures now erected or in process of erection do or will interfere with free and safe navigation.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That jurisdiction is hereby given to the circuits courts of the United States to condemn any such real estate or material needed in any improvement, and in all such proceedings for such condemnation the practice of said court shall be as near as may be to that prescribed by the law of the State in which the improvement and material is situated.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that amendment will be accepted; it seems to be perfectly proper.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply the money herein appropriated—

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Before passing to section 4, I wish to offer an amendment to this section.

Mr. DUNN. I make the point of order that the reading can not be arrested in that way after being deliberately commenced, and I insist that the Clerk proceed with the reading. The rule is clear on the subject, and I hope it will be strictly enforced hereafter.

Mr. HEPBURN. Allow me to make this suggestion, that there is very extraordinary rapidity indulged in, and perhaps properly so, by the Clerk in reading this bill. But it occurs frequently that the last word from the chairman's mouth has scarcely escaped his lips directing the reading when the Clerk is at work on the instant speeding through the bill; and it seems in that manner the Clerk has succeeded in reading several lines of this section before any one rose to make an amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It has been the custom, Mr. Chairman, for the Clerk to read amendments on the desk which had been sent up; and I did not know until he had read a short distance in this section that he was not going to read an amendment to the preceding section. As soon as I found out what he was reading I immediately rose to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not be governed by anything else than the regular rules of the House, which provide that when a section has been passed over and the reading of another has been begun it is then too late to go back to make an amendment to the section which has been passed.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But, Mr. Chairman, when a member of the House announces that it was his intention to offer an amendment, and rose promptly for that purpose, he certainly can not be precluded from offering it by the mere reading of the Clerk, or because the Clerk may have begun the reading of the section before the amendment was offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to state himself his impression that somebody else had an amendment at the desk which the Clerk was proceeding to read, and that he waited to see if somebody else did not want to offer an amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. No, Mr. Chairman; but that he thought the Clerk was reading an amendment which was at the desk. As soon as he discovered that the Clerk was reading the bill, or another section of the bill, the gentleman immediately rose, as he claims, to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state exactly what the Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky to have said.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Evidently the Chair misunderstood me, from the statement just made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to say he supposed there were other amendments on the desk, and that the Clerk would read them, and that therefore he waited, and did not offer his amendment at once.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I said that I was waiting for the Clerk to read. The Chair will remember that it has been the custom during the past week to read amendments which had been sent to the Clerk's desk, and which were read properly in their order.

Mr. KING. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Kentucky is too late to offer an amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to be heard on the appeal.

Mr. HOUK. I insist the gentleman from Kentucky should be heard, since he has not been heard here this session. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will leave the House to judge as to the pertinence of that remark.

Mr. HOUK. The House can certainly judge as to the propriety of it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The whole business here in connection with this bill is an impropriety.

I have appealed from the decision of the Chair because I believe it is our right to offer amendments as the paragraphs are being read. It would have been almost impossible to have taken the floor sooner than I did—almost impossible. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa was accepted so suddenly, and the Clerk was directed to read so suddenly, and proceeded with the reading of paragraph 4 of the bill so suddenly, that it was almost impossible for any man to offer an amendment sooner than I did. And I ask that the reporter may give to the Clerk a memorandum showing how far he had proceeded with the reading when I rose. I know there is a disposition here to hurry the bill through. I know there is a disposition on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to help this bill through.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The gentleman from Kentucky is not discussing the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point is well taken.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I hope the Chair will enforce the rule.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I did not hear at first what the gentleman from Alabama rose for; but what he has said leads me to remark that it is very difficult to tell what his point of order will cover. It is difficult to tell how any gentleman can address himself to a point of order so that it will be understood by the intellect of the gentleman from Alabama. I am not surprised that he raises the question of order.

But the question, coming back to this committee again, is, can a member of this House be cheated—not cheated; I will say deprived of his right to offer an amendment because forsooth the Clerk may read too rapidly? I do not make any charge against the Clerk. He was doing his duty as he understands it. I was doing mine as I understand it. I rose to ask the adoption of an amendment. My amendment is material. It is one affecting the levees of the Mississippi River. In this bill the word "levee" does not occur.

want to put it in the bill that we shall have a report on the separate item of levees; because if the decision of the Chair made on Friday on the Hennepin Canal stands good, and if the decision of the Chair on the canal from the Kentucky River to Savannah, Ga., stands good, then when the chairman of the committee or a member of the committee undertakes to put the Mississippi River back into the bill whether with Eads or without Eads, I propose to raise the point of order on the Mississippi River, and I want to put it right here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the gentleman from Kentucky to confine himself to the subject under debate.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think I am doing so. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, here turned and walked up the aisle toward his desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. The "ayes" have it, and the decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, you can not take me off the floor in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to go back to his desk.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I went to get my copy of the bill to read from it. That will not do. I have not been heard.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DUNN. I make the same point of order, that the reading of the section must be completed before any motion to amend can be made. The reading of the section has not been completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks nothing is in order but reading the balance of the section.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I appealed from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. And the committee has sustained the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The committee can not vote while I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee voted while the gentleman had not the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have not yielded the floor, as the whole House knows. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I want to know if in the argument of a question of order a member can occupy the floor any longer than at the pleasure of the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair he can not. There is no settled rule in regard to debate on appeals.

Mr. COX, of New York. The rule is invariable. No member can speak except during the pleasure of the Chair on a point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. This is not a point of order; it is an appeal.

Mr. COX, of New York. Or an appeal. That is in the same category.

Mr. HEPBURN. If that doctrine be correct, the Chair can in every case of appeal prevent the exposition of his own errors.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to do what is exactly right. The Chair can have no interest in doing otherwise. The Chair knows of no rule that forbids debate on an appeal; but the gentleman from Kentucky was not arguing the question of order, but was discussing the question of the Mississippi levees at the time the Chair put the question, even if it be considered that he was on the floor at that time.

But he had removed himself from the position where he was speaking and had gone back to his desk. The Chair thereupon put the question and the committee voted. The Chair thinks he has been exceedingly liberal to that gentleman and all others in this committee, and he has no disposition to cut off any one. But the rule must be observed that when a particular question is under discussion debate must be confined to that; otherwise there will be no end to our work at all.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I am sorry the Chair should have made the mistake; but I had not yielded the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire, with the permission of the Chair, to make a single suggestion. I do not want to antagonize the decision of the Chair as made on this question, but I make this inquiry: When a member has been recognized to speak, is not the only limitation of time he is entitled to the hour under the rule, whether the subject-matter be an appeal on points of order or whatever it is?

Mr. HENLEY. I rise to a question of order. I demand the regular order.

A MEMBER. What is it?

Mr. HENLEY. Whatever it is we shall have it. I want to stop this filibustering.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the gentleman from Kentucky whether his proposed amendment can be as well offered to the next section—the reading of which had begun?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It can not; and that was what I proposed to show when the Chair thought I was going to my seat. I was going to my desk to get my copy of the bill and to call the attention of the Chair to the very line where I had intended my amendment should come in.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman having made that statement, the Chair will hear him on the point of order only.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. In section 3, which has been read by the Clerk—

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON. The Chair has submitted the question on the appeal to the vote of the House, and the House has voted upon it by an aye-and-no vote.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. GIBSON. And the result of that vote has been announced by the Chair. Now, I do not know by what right when the judgment of the Chair has been sustained on an appeal that question can be reopened.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states that the announcement of the result of the vote was predicated on the fact that the gentleman from Kentucky had ceased speaking and had gone back to his desk. He asserts now he had not yielded the floor, but had simply gone to his desk to get a copy of the bill, intending further to illustrate that his proposition was in order.

Mr. GIBSON. Then is the Chair bound to show equities of decision to a member who is openly and apparently consuming time in a debate that does not apply to the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not pronounce that judgment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] will be heard further upon the question of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as I have already stated, I had gone to take up my bill (which was not in my hand at the time I was speaking) to show the Chair how the word "levees" inserted in this bill would be of considerable consequence, and it was my intention to offer that amendment. In section 3 of the bill it is provided that the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to secure a judicious and economical expenditure of said sums—

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman to order, and I make this distinct statement: The point of order I made was that the committee had concluded the consideration of section 3 and had passed from it—

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not yield the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DUNN (continuing). And the Clerk had commenced the reading of section 4 when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] offered or proposed to offer his amendment to section 3. Upon that I made the point that it was out of order because the reading of the next section, section 4, had been commenced, and that point of order the Chair sustained. From the ruling sustaining that point of order the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] appeals, and that is the question he rose to debate. There can be no controversy as to the fact that the reading of the next section had commenced. Now, the rule is the only thing that can govern that question, and the gentleman is not discussing the rules. Therefore I call him to order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] I will repeat again what I said before. Perhaps he was in the cloak-room when I made my statement and did not hear it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman is mistaken; I was in my seat, and heard him.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, he seems to be here now, and I desire to say again that the Clerk had barely commenced the reading of section 4, and had commenced it, so far as I was concerned, under a misapprehension, and as soon as I discovered that he had left section 3, I rose to offer my amendment, and the reporter's notes will show that although I spoke several times before I caught the Speaker's eye—

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman to order. What the gentleman is saying relates to a fact and is not the discussion of the point of order. Now, if the Chair will entertain a controversy as to a fact upon this appeal it can not be helped.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Arkansas will permit me, I will state again that, in good faith, I had risen to offer what I understood to be a substantial amendment—

Mr. DUNN. But the good faith does not relieve the gentleman from the operation of the rule.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] has the floor upon the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield the floor to these gentlemen, and the Chair will oblige me very much by keeping them quiet. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman if he desires to discuss the question of order on the appeal; if he does not, the Chair must put the question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as I have already stated, I believe I had the right, as any member would have the right, to offer an amendment to section 3 of this bill under the circumstances. It has been customary for the Clerk to read amendments from his desk; but a gentleman can offer an amendment from his seat. When the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] offered his amendment it was almost instantly accepted, and the Clerk was directed to read, and as soon as I perceived that the Clerk was reading a different section I said that I desired to offer an amendment to section 3. And now, to satisfy the Chair, I will tell the Chair what the amendment was.

The CHAIRMAN. It is wholly immaterial what it was.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Does the Chair now rule that I have not the right to offer an amendment in line 66?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so ruled; and the pending question is on the appeal taken from that decision.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Well, I am willing to submit it to a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to finish the reading of the section.

The Clerk read the fourth section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply the money herein appropriated for improvements other than surveys and estimates in carrying on the various works, by contract or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government. Where said works are done by contract, such contract shall be made after sufficient public advertisement for proposals, in such manner and form as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and such contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidders, accompanied by such securities as the Secretary of War shall require, conditioned for the faithful prosecution and completion of the work according to such contract, and for the prompt payment of all liabilities incurred in the prosecution thereof for labor and material.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 4, line 7, after the word "proposals," by inserting "and shall fully describe the work to be done."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will be accepted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the section the following:

"Provided, however, That the Secretary of War may decline to expend any portion of the money appropriated by this bill if, in his judgment, the improvement for which such appropriation is made will not be a public benefit."

Mr. WILLIS. That is the existing law, and I see no objection to it.

Mr. ROWELL. Then, if there is no objection to it, let it be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, at the close of the text and immediately preceding the provision just adopted I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "material," in line 14, insert the following:

"Provided, however, That any money appropriated by this act for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo, except so much thereof as it shall be necessary to expend in preventing the works in progress on other portions of the river from waste and injury, shall be expended in the continuation and completion of the works on the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches of the river, now in progress of improvement as established by the commission, to the end that the proposed improvement of said two reaches of the river on which works are in progress shall be completed at an early day and the plan of said commission for the improvement of the navigation of the river fully tested."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that portion of the bill has been stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard upon the point of order. The bill contains at this time no appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo. That is conceded. Of course it is not for the Chair to anticipate whether or no the bill will contain such a provision.

The proposition is simply that, if any appropriation be made by this bill for the purpose designated, it shall be applied in a specific manner. Such a provision, it seems to me, can not possibly be subject to a point of order upon the mere ground that the bill in its present form contains no such appropriation; for I submit that it is not for the Chair to anticipate what may ultimately be the provisions of this bill. The amendment simply provides that if there should be in this bill any provision for the expenditure of money on the Mississippi River below Cairo such money shall be expended in a specific manner.

It can not be said that this is subject to the point of order commonly made upon propositions to amend a general appropriation bill; and I believe the Chair has so decided. This is simply a provision limiting appropriations in the bill, if such shall be made, for a particular improvement which is within the scope of the bill. It must be conceded that appropriations may be made by the bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo; and a provision that an appropriation of a given character shall be expended in a specific mode is clearly in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I wish to make a point of order upon the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is stating a point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Well, I will make a parliamentary inquiry. Can the gentleman offer an amendment having reference to legislation which he thinks may be introduced into the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly that is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. It is admitted that such legislation as that upon which the amendment is designed to be a limit may possibly be introduced into this bill. It is not to be assumed that the bill will not contain such legislation. I think the gentleman from Kentucky makes a mistake in attempting to make a point of order upon such a proposition. This bill stands on a very different footing from a general appropriation bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I suggest to the Chair that there are still left in the bill appropriations for the Mississippi River. There is one for the harbor of New Orleans, which is only a part of the Mississippi River. I think there is also one for Memphis Harbor, although I am not sure about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment which the gentleman from Indiana presents would be a mere modification, applicable in case the appropriation for the Mississippi River should be voted back into the bill. The Chair therefore suggests that perhaps an arrangement may be made to have a vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana if the other proposition should be voted upon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I modify my amendment so as to read "That no appropriation made or which shall be made for the improvement of the Mississippi River," &c.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana does not take the idea of the Chair.

Mr. KING. I make the point of order that this proposition in substance was voted upon several days ago and voted down.

Mr. HOLMAN. No such proposition has been voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana will please cite the proposition of which he speaks, with the action thereon. It is impossible for the Chair to remember everything done in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. I feel confident that there was such action.

Mr. WILLIS. The point of order has been made, first, that there is no matter now in the bill to which this amendment has any application, and to place in the bill a restriction upon legislation which the bill does not contain is an absurdity. In the second place, the point is made that this identical proposition was presented a few days ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and voted down.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The fact that the amendment if adopted would make the bill absurd is no reason it should be ruled out on a point of order. It may be the very purpose of the gentleman from Indiana to make the bill absurd. Whether the amendment shall have that effect is a question for the Committee of the Whole to vote upon. But the Chair was endeavoring to suggest, in order to avoid difficulty, that the committee might agree that if by a vote the Mississippi River provision should be brought back into the bill there should also be a vote in the House upon the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should be perfectly satisfied with that arrangement. I hope gentlemen will agree to that fair proposition. Otherwise those who are anxious to limit this expenditure must press this amendment.

Mr. DUNN. I hope the proposition will not be agreed to. There has never been anything fair coming from the opponents of this bill during this contest, and it is with poor grace that they ask for excessive fairness on our side. If we pass this bill we must do it against all the efforts of its enemies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directs the Clerk to read a paragraph from Jefferson's Manual, page 124.

The Clerk read as follows:

If an amendment be proposed inconsistent with one already agreed to, it is a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress as if it were against order; for were he permitted to draw questions of consistency within the vortex of order, he might usurp a negative on important modifications, and suppress instead of subserving the legislative will.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the Chair desires to state that by amendment the Mississippi River Commission has been stricken out. The only point of order would be that this amendment would be inconsistent with that amendment. The Chair thinks that is not a good reason for refusing to submit to the committee the proposed amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a single remark in behalf of this proposition.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire to make an additional point of order against the gentleman's amendment, and that is that the amendment is not germane to the section upon which we are engaged.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why it is especially so by its very provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no rule requiring an amendment shall be germane to the section provided it is germane to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is certainly the opinion of some of our engineers as well as of a large body of our people that the plan of improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo is purely experimental, and up to this time a large portion of the money appropriated from time to time has been employed in repairs of work already done. I am not able to say what percentage, but if gentlemen will examine carefully the reports of the Mississippi River Commission and their subordinates it will be found a large percentage of the money you are appropriating year after year is employed in a great number of repairs.

The two important reaches of the Mississippi River are Plum Point and Lake Providence, one forty and the other sixty miles in length, which require every dollar of the $2,800,000 to complete them. Let us have them completed. Let us see what is to be the effect of this experiment. If successful, then of course the House can with safety proceed to make further appropriation. If, on the contrary, the plan be radically defective, then Congress should have the information upon which to act with intelligence. I trust therefore in the interest of common fairness to the country; in the interest of the integrity of our affairs and good administration in the expenditure of public money, those two great reaches of that river shall be completed, to the end that Congress shall not appropriate money year after year for a plan which may prove in the end an utter failure.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to speak on this amendment, and for the reason—

Mr. KING. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's objection?

Mr. KING. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. I understand the rule under which we are acting requires only three minutes of debate on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. That was applicable entirely to the first section of the bill.

Mr. KING. Under what rule are we now acting?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the general rules of the House. The special rule to which the gentleman refers was applicable only by common consent to the first section of this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. It has been claimed as one of the chief reasons why this river and harbor bill should pass that the improvement of the Mississippi River does have such an influence on present and future competitive freight-rates that any bill embracing it should receive the approval of this House. When you analyze the proposition of developing water ways you mean by it simply to provide a channel through which vessels can safely pass. If I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, he proposes that the shoals shall be improved, and he proposes in that part of the river where navigation is to-day impeded the channel shall be opened. Then he proposes as to the rest of it that a brake shall be put upon the expenditure of public money.

There has not been for one hundred years any lack of water for vessels in the lower Mississippi. There is none to-day. You can take any steamer you please and run it through those channels where the snags have been removed and where possibly an occasional bar has been cleaned out. In my judgment, the proposition to expend one, two, three, four, five, or one hundred millions of dollars for deepening a channel already dug is simply pouring water into a rat-hole, which seems to be a type of Democratic economy.

For that reason I wish a remedy that will give us a free channel for practical navigation of that river, and will stop the expenditure of public money for the protection of private property in the lower region.

It seems to me if you look into the amount of money which must be expended in the future, if you maintain the present policy, it will run into hundreds of thousands of millions of dollars. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana proposes you shall to-day, as to that part of the Mississippi River which needs improvement, improve it. But as to that part which does not need it you shall cease to throw the people's money away. That precisely, in my opinion, is what is being done in part of this bill, and especially in reference to the Mississippi River.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if this proposition is not pressed at this moment whether he will permit a vote on it in the House if the Mississippi River Commission be admitted?

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. With that understanding, that an opportunity will be offered before the previous question is called in the House, I shall withdraw it for the present.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana assumes to withdraw the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana as simply stating that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] will help to get a vote on his amendment in the House if the other amendment is put in the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. How would such an arrangement be possible when one single objection would prevent such action in the House?

The CHAIRMAN. If it be an amendment, it would have to be carried here so as to make it in order in the House. It would have to be reported, in other words, from the committee to the House.

Mr. DUNN. But if the gentleman from Kentucky allows it to be offered in the House, would not that meet the difficulty?

Mr. HISCOCK. Here is the difficulty: Suppose we go into the House, and whether the proposition in reference to the Mississippi River which was stricken out is voted in or out, a single objection prevents a vote on this proposition of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. On what ground?

Mr. HISCOCK. Because it is not offered by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. But if it is offered before the previous question is called upon the bill, why is it not in order?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Let us have a vote on it now; that is the way to settle it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HISCOCK. I shall insist upon a vote now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana—

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I prefer a vote in the House, and I understand that I have the right, under the consent given by the chairman of the committee, to offer this amendment before the previous question is called. The committee agree that it shall be admitted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Not that it shall be admitted.

Mr. HOLMAN. That it shall be admitted to a vote, I mean, as an amendment. It is to be offered as an amendment and voted upon in the House.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But I do not want it to be understood that the committee accept it. I do not want any misunderstanding about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not that the committee accept it, but that they agree that a vote may be taken in the House upon it. With that understanding I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then I renew it. We had just as well settle this question here and now. This proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is so clearly just and proper that there is no use in waiting to see whether the Mississippi part of this bill, which on my motion some days ago was stricken out and agreed to by the chairman of the committee, is to go in or not. It is unnecessary to wait to see what is to be done with that before the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is voted upon to this bill. It ought to be in the bill whether the chairman of the committee accepts it or not.

Mr. BAYNE. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. Would it not be far better to have the proposition voted on by a yeas-and-nays vote in the House than to allow it to undergo peril here in the committee?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It does not undergo peril.

Mr. BAYNE. I think it is better to have a vote in the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. That is a question of opinion.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to make this suggestion, and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to it. Suppose we get through the bill, and a motion is made that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out, and suppose that motion is carried. As the bill stands now I would probably vote for that motion. If Judge HOLMAN's amendment is incorporated in the bill it would very decidedly change my opinion as to whether it should become a law or not, or whether that motion should be carried or not.

I think it quite likely that this bill may be passed through here in such form that a motion to strike out the enacting clause would carry. I desire the bill to be bettered, so that I can support it. I am very much in favor of a river and harbor bill and a liberal bill, if properly prepared. But I want this bill very much amended, so that I can support it. This amendment I regard as very important.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has not expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I thought it had.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I want to get this idea before the committee: that one very important part of the bill is in the background for a purpose—

Mr. KING. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the right of the gentleman from Kentucky to finish his remarks.

Mr. KING. How long will you allow him?

The CHAIRMAN. One minute.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not wish my time occupied in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time thus occupied will not be deducted from the time of the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Now, I want the committee to bear in mind that the most outrageous proposition in this bill is yet in the background; and the committee can well afford to say to the gentleman from Indiana, "You just wait," "Wait for the proper time, and you shall have a vote on your proposition." In response to that I say we will not wait. We will settle it here and now. If you want to bring back here a proposition in this abominable Mississippi appropriation to drive a peg in which will allow you to expend a hundred or two hundred millions of dollars and throw it away to destruction, I shall not help to drive that peg in. Let us settle the question now. Let us have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask that it be reported.

Mr. WILLIS and other members objected.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think the objection comes too late. This is a new amendment, and has not been read. It is an amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky said he renewed the amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does not that entitle us to a rereading of it?

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last clause of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is recognized.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now I ask to have that amendment read in my time.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from New York asks to have the amendment read in his time. How did he get the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York obtained the floor by moving to strike out the last clause of the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. But the committee was dividing. The Chair had put the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it will save time to have the amendment read. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I renew the amendment.

I want to remind the House before we vote on this question that up to this time there has been no settled plan that any one is now at work upon; that there was a scheme for the improvement of the Mississippi River which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] the other day told us had been departed from to such an extent as to destroy the possibility of good results following appropriations.

I want to further remind the House that these improvements by every engineer so far as I know, and at least in every report of the commission, have been declared to be experimental; that no man has yet said that satisfactory results will follow their efforts. We are constantly reminded that they are experimenting. We are constantly told that there are doubts of success. We know that the commission itself has no power, or at least has not exercised it, of informing the country and Congress what sums would indeed be expended.

The first estimates for the initial work told us that one million and a quarter dollars would be needed to complete two of the reaches in their initial work. Finally they told us that two and a half million dollars would be needed to accomplish the work entirely. Now one of the commission (Colonel Comstock) tells the country that three times that sum would be needed. And the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] told us the other day that although there had been these large expenditures more than the original estimates, still there had been nothing satisfactorily accomplished, and there was no hope of ultimate success if the policy of the commission should be continued.

Now, in view of these facts, in view of the absence of earnest declaration that good results shall certainly follow, and in view of the repeated declarations that the efforts of the commission are simply in the nature of experiments, is it not wiser to confine expenditures to 63 miles of the river than to make them extend over 1,085 miles of the river?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I shall make no formal reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. But I want to put on record that the reason I do not is to economize time. I want to get through this bill. The gentleman's statements are full of errors as far as I have been able to hear them, but it would take a great deal of time to reply to them.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope the gentleman will point out the errors he refers to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. They have already been pointed out.

Mr. HEPBURN. I beg to say that I have made no misstatements as to this matter. I have simply quoted the reports of the commission and declarations of members of the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is out of order. His time has expired. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire a vote on his amendment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is recognized.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I had the recognition of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs pardon.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I make the motion that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman had not the floor for that motion. I was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas had the floor, and stated he did not wish to debate the amendment. He states now he moved that the committee rise.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman did not have the floor for that purpose, but for the purpose of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Arkansas desires to make that motion the Chair recognizes him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I make that motion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not think that that is a wise course.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] not to insist on that. I have endeavored to take charge of the bill and I ask him now, upon the understanding that after the speech of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] we shall have a vote, to withdraw the motion that the committee rise. After that let us have a vote. The House understands that the vote was actually being taken when the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] took the floor and had the amendment read in his time. There have been two speeches on that side, which with that of the gentleman from Maine should be considered enough; and I ask that at the conclusion of his remarks we shall have a vote as a matter of fair play.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. There is no fair play extended to the bill, and I do not want the Chair to put the request suggested by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas insist on his motion being put?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do.

The question being put on the motion that the committee rise, it was decided in the negative.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I renew the amendment.

I hope the House fully understands that this amendment which is now pending is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. It seems to be a plain business proposition, which this House ought to concur in.

The great point of my opposition, as an individual, to this bill has been that it was still further involving this country in expenditure upon an experiment the nature of which we have not been permitted to prove. I have objected to it because we were going on to spend an immense sum of money, to wit, the sum of $150,000,000, for an improvement which may turn out to be no improvement at all. I have always believed that we ought to confine the expenditure in the first instance to an experiment; and surely the experiment proposed here is large enough, for it embraces a length of river the equal of sixty-three miles, which is a large proportion of the entire length of the Mississippi River.

Now, if gentlemen really desire to pass this river and harbor bill, the course that will give it the most strength will be to show to the House and to the country that we are governed by sound business principles, looking to the navigation of a river and not to a wholesale expenditure of a wholesale appropriation. Of the parts of the river and harbor bill to which alone I have had objection (if I may be allowed to give my own personal views on the subject) one has been already stricken out, the others were lower Mississippi improvement and the proposed Galveston expenditure. With those out I think the bill would have met the approval of the House long ago.

I think it is not too late for us now to take the right course with regard to this measure. It is a plain proposition I repeat again, not a proposition to launch this country into boundless expenditure, but a proposition to fairly try the claim which has been made by engineers that they can harness this mighty river. There are a great many people who believe that it can not be done, who believe that all these experiments will result in failure. Is it right, then, to go ahead in defiance of sound sense, in defiance of reasonable skepticism, and commit ourselves year after year more and more to expenditures which even the conservative member of the committee [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] says will be $150,000,000? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WILLIS. I hope we shall now have a vote.

Mr. THOMAS rose and addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I will yield only for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] claim the floor to reply?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have the floor, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will yield the floor for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] can not cut off other gentlemen from debate by yielding the floor for a vote. If he desires to speak the Chair will hear him for five minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine would perform the operation, of which I have sometimes heard mention, of extracting from a body its spinal column and all its bones, and then letting it march through this House in mucilaginous majesty. [Laughter.] That is the condition into which he proposes to put this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the statements repeatedly made on this floor that the works of improvement on the Mississippi River are simply and purely experimental, I want to say, after a most thorough investigation of the matter, not only by means of the reports of the commission, but by personal investigation, by traveling from Cairo to the Gulf and examining the works of the commission, that those statements are unfounded. I want to deny most emphatically the assertions which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] have made here, that those works are merely experimental.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will you allow me to interrupt you for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. No; not when I have only five minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I simply want to suggest—

Mr. THOMAS. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. Chairman, the work at Plum Point has changed the channel of the river from five feet deep at low water to fifteen feet of water throughout the whole length of thirty-two miles, and what was a broad and almost barren bar when this work began has been brought down to the legitimate width of the river, with water of sufficient depth for the passage of the largest boats from one end of that reach to the other. With reference to the Lake Providence reach, the report of the commission shows that the work there is well-nigh done, and that instead of six feet throughout that thirty miles, there are to-day from fifteen to seventeen feet of water; that the works are stable, that they have not been destroyed, and that they are proving a complete success. Instead of having only six feet of water, the largest steamer that floats from New Orleans to Cairo or Saint Louis can pass unobstructed through the whole length of that reach. Yet, in the face of these facts, which the report of the commission shows, in the face of the facts which the current newspapers of the day show, in the face of the facts which the commerce of the country shows, gentlemen stand up here and persistently and repeatedly assert that these works have been a failure, although every fact before us shows that they have been a success wherever the original plan of the Mississippi River Commission has been adhered to. At Plum Point, at Lake Providence reach, at Horsetail bar, and at several other places along the river, the original plan has been adhered to, and the most perfect success has followed. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out the last word. I do that simply to call attention to the disagreement between the doctors. I have a great deal of confidence in the opinions of my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]. I know that he has devoted his attention to the science of hydraulic navigation as well as to the construction of a navy. I know that he has been all over the country filling his mind with valuable information upon these varied subjects [laughter], but I undertake to say that he can not find one report of the commission in which they themselves do not declare their work to be experimental. And, as bearing upon that question, let me call attention to the language of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], uttered only a half dozen days ago in this House. He says:

At the very inception of the great marine works of America, some ten years ago, the gentlemen in charge of those works, instead of sitting like Paul at the feet of Gamaliel to learn of those who had made a special study of this business, got into an unfortunate wrangle—our military engineers upon the one hand, and the civil and hydraulic engineers and the balance of mankind and the laws of Almighty God upon the other hand. The result has never been shrouded in a particle of doubt.

There is not on earth, with all the magnificent sea-works that exist, some of them over a century old, a single one embracing any one of the essential features of these submerged facade works in salt water, where there is no mud or silt-bearing stream. There is nothing to countenance such a system. I have seen it mentioned but once in the annals of high foreign authority, and then with ridicule. Having gone into this line of experiments, they have brought the work on the Mississippi River to-day to a point where, as I can show by turning to their reports and as I briefly outlined in my remarks the other day, and as I will show in my printed remarks, as promised, by clear citations of the text, they propose and practice a plan of work which is a complete and radical abandonment of the original plan for improving that great river, and their wretched experiments are attended only with failure. They forced an eminent civil engineer off the commission; and they have now a plan of operations sketched out to spend, as stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], $150,000,000. The calculation is a very plain one; and there is not in any of their work a guarantee that it will last twelve months.

This incubus of untrained engineers—
Mr. REED, of Maine. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that. I hope his statement will receive the attention of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Your statement is correct.
A MEMBER. In what?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will show you in what. They have put the cart before the horse, and brought it to a point where they propose to carry on a systematic course of revetment to prevent caving, instead of contracting, as a condition precedent, the shoal places in order to bring about uniformity of width, uniformity of depth, uniformity of velocity, thereby minimizing excessive depth and excessive velocity, the causes of the caving. And their calculations are, in round numbers, that the system will cost $150,000 a mile, and there are nearly a thousand miles of the Mississippi River in this condition, and it has two sides to it, and one side is always caving in where the other is forming a bar: you have, I say, a thousand miles at $150,000 a mile, making an aggregate of $150,000,000; and yet they can not point us to any experiment in this departure from the original plan and from reason showing that it will stand twelve months after a single rise.

Therefore I have agreed with those who have urged that this incubus of mediocrity of untrained engineering talent in this line be taken off that river, or in some way subordinated, and it be put back to the original plan adopted by Congress which Captain Eads formulated, and which, clear in reason and sustained in practice, has never failed. That is in strict accordance with the safe, ascertained laws of hydraulics throughout the world, as indorsed by the most eminent hydraulic engineers, as both in harmony with science and common sense. In no place where it has been carried on has it been a failure, while in no locality where these experiments have been carried on have they been a success. They have brought that grand river and its improvements to the verge of collapse. We have got to that point at which this school of untrained men in this specialty, who in this and other important works have abandoned the beaten track in this regard, have shown, that in their wretched quarrels pique has been stronger than reason, and they have brought the public interest into this direful state of suffering.

That is the language of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]. That is his opinion in regard to these experimental works. Now, who is to decide? Here is one gentleman of the committee urging that there is no experiment about it, urging that the works are a success, urging that all the improvement needed in certain places has been accomplished. Then, on the other hand, here is another member of the committee, a gentleman living in a State bordering upon the Mississippi River, who tells us that the operations of the commission have resulted in wretched failure. Whom are we to believe? And yet, with this evidence before the House, to say nothing of the reports of the commission themselves, these gentlemen are not willing that one of these experiments shall be tried to its conclusion before this vast expenditure is incurred. Why does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] demand that along the whole course of this great river the efforts of the commission shall be spread out? Why not concentrate them at some one point? If success attend the effort there, then all the House will be glad to join hands in voting appropriations to carry the whole work to a conclusion. But let us not go on in this way. There was an attempt made in the last Congress to limit this work to the two reaches. The opinion of many gentlemen was given—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. WILLIS. I appeal to the friends of the bill—

Mr. THOMAS. I take the floor simply to call attention to the fact—

Mr. WILLIS. We want to finish this bill this evening, and I appeal to the friends to let us vote.

Mr. THOMAS. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the floor and will not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. THOMAS. I take the floor simply for the purpose of saying that instead of there being a disagreement between "the doctors," as the gentleman ironically called the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, there is no disagreement between the gentleman from Arkansas and myself. His remarks applied to other sections of the river than Plum Point reach and Providence reach. He has so stated time and again. I confined my remarks to the improvements which have been made at Plum Point reach, Providence reach, and another point on the upper Mississippi where the same plan has been pursued with similar success. As to other points on the river, I did not discuss the policy pursued at present by the Mississippi River Commission, but agreed that at many points they had made mistakes. Therefore it was that I urged the amendment providing that the work done on the Mississippi River should be confined to the original plan of the Mississippi River Commission, which was to remove the bars instead of revetting the banks.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do you not advocate in your minority report the building of the levees—

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. HEPBURN. And everything that the extremists have insisted upon?

Mr. THOMAS. I advocate the building of the levees, if necessary to improve the low-water navigation; and if it reclaims as a consequence the 45,000 square miles of alluvial lands in the Mississippi Valley I shall not object on that account; for I am willing to take a double blessing, if it brings us free navigation of the Mississippi River and at the same time reclaims a section of country which has capacities for supporting an empire—the most magnificent stretch of country in the world. But primarily I am in favor of this improvement for the purpose of improving the navigation and benefiting the commerce of the Mississippi River.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If this was a success, why did you call in Captain Eads?

Mr. THOMAS. I did not call him in.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The committee did.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. Does he desire a vote on that proposition?

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, there were—ayes 131, noes 64.

Mr. KING. Tellers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Oh no; we will take a vote in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. There need be no reservation for that purpose. Does the gentleman from Louisiana insist on tellers?

Mr. KING. I withdraw the demand, with the understanding that a separate vote be taken on this amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be had in the House without the necessity of any reservation. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have another amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Now I hope my friend will let us pass this bill at once.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask that my amendment be read by the Clerk. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following, preceding the amendment just adopted: "And the Secretary of War shall withhold such portion of the contract price as will pay all sums due for the labor performed on any improvement until it be satisfactorily shown that all laborers are fully paid."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. There ought to be no objection to that. The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to, there being—ayes 126, noes 11.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and Mr. BEACH, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 8030) making appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk began the reading of section 5.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Section 4 has not yet been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken. Section 4 was read and three amendments to it were adopted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I sent my amendment to the Clerk's desk—

Mr. REAGAN. I protest against the rules being violated all the time. The reading of a new section had commenced—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will understand that the Clerk had possession of an amendment from the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The identical amendment—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the matter. The gentleman from Kentucky placed in the hands of the Clerk an amendment—

Mr. REAGAN. He now places it in the hands of the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. He had done so before.

Mr. REAGAN. Where is it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has it in his hand.

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to a point of order. I submit that placing an amendment in the hands of the Clerk is not the offering of an amendment under the rules. The modified rule authorizing the sending of amendments to the Clerk's desk applied only to section 1. As to these other sections the ordinary rules apply. An amendment must be offered while the section to which it applies is before the committee. I submit that, this amendment not having been offered until the Clerk was proceeding to read the subsequent section, it comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is simply trying to arrive at the facts.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to say I sent up an amendment when the fourth section was read, but the Clerk, mistaking, said that section had not been read, and I have been waiting to have it read so I may offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The fourth section was read long ago. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana was offered and discussed, and there was finally an agreement about it, when it was withdrawn. The gentleman from Kentucky renewed it, when it was adopted. Other amendments were also added to the section. The Chair is informed the gentleman from Kentucky merely told the Clerk he had an amendment to offer at the right time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I sent it to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that the mere sending to the desk of amendments is not controlled by the prior order of the House as to section 1.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I offer it now as a new amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that section 5 be finished.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That a board, to be called the United States harbor board, is hereby temporarily created, to consist of seven members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Two members of said board shall be appointed from the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast Survey, and four from civil life, all of which latter number shall be civil engineers, eminent in their profession; and the President shall designate one of said board to act as its president; and the Chief of Engineers is hereby recommended as one of the two members to be selected from the Engineer Corps, if consistent with the discharge of his present duties. It shall be the duty of the said board to visit all works now being constructed by the Government for the improvement of outlets to the sea by means of what is known as the jetty system, and it shall thoroughly examine into all such plans now being prosecuted at said works, and it shall report upon the same to the Secretary of War, which report shall be transmitted to Congress at its next regular meeting in December; and it shall embrace such remarks and recommendations relative to the correctness of the plans and methods by which said improvements are being prosecuted, together with such plans, modifications, and estimates for the proper improvement of said outlets and harbors, as said board may deem necessary to secure permanent and substantial relief to commerce.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has the section been read?

The CHAIRMAN. Only the first paragraph has been read.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike it out.

Mr. HISCOCK. Having reached this section, are we not proceeding under the general practice of considering the bill by paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well; then I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. WILLIS. This whole section relates to one single subject, and I suggest it be read, and then you can make amendments to it.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is understood points of order are reserved to each paragraph?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. And each paragraph can be considered after the section has been read through?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Mr. BAYNE. Amendments are to be offered to each paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole section is to be read, and then amendments to each paragraph or any part of it, and all points of order to the whole section or any part of it will be in order. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object. I find this section not only relates to the Mississippi River, but to Galveston Harbor.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is understood we can go back to any paragraph when we get through the section, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask the Chair to state what the understanding is.

The CHAIRMAN. It is that the whole section shall be read, and then all points of order or amendments which would be in order to either paragraph shall be in order to the whole section or to either paragraph.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read the remaining part of the section, as follows:

The members of said board shall be paid at the rate of $5,000 per annum, except that those members appointed from the permanent service of the Government shall receive no other salary or compensation than is now allowed by law; and the existence of this board shall expire at the end of one year from the date of its appointment and organization.

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and instructed to detail an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army to act as secretary of said board, upon being requested by it so to do, and likewise to extend to it all facilities in the way of maps, charts, instruments, books, reports, &c., that it may require and that may be at his disposal; and said board shall complete all necessary examinations, observations, and inquiries upon which to base plans for the proper and permanent improvement of said river and harbor outlets.

The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which shall be expended by said board under the direction and control of the Secretary of War.

Nothing in this act shall be construed to relate to the harbor at Galveston, in the State of Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear gentlemen on the points of order.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask the gentleman to let me move an amendment to have three from civil life and three from the Army.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to correct a misprint. That is, to strike out lines 47 and 48, which are in the bill by mistake.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is also pending, I understand, a motion to strike out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. There is.

Mr. HOLMAN. While that amendment is pending I move to strike out all after the word "members," in the third line, down to the word "provision," in the eighth line.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to be heard a moment on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order has yet been made.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understood one to be made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the situation. Several gentlemen said they wished to make points of order upon the section. Then the agreement was entered into, but no gentleman has stated a point of order.

Mr. DUNN. But points of order were reserved.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir; distinctly reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows that fact, and desires now if anybody has a point of order that it may be stated.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will make the point of order, then, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have no jurisdiction of this legislation.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask if the point of order can now be made? Had we not passed to the consideration of the section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks so. By unanimous consent lines 47 and 48 were stricken out, not by way of amendment, but because they had been improperly printed in the bill. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 8 of Rule XI:

To the improvement of rivers and harbors: to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Now, sir, I suppose that means such appropriations as are to be expended according to and under the ordinary machinery of the Government. If it does not mean that what does it mean?

Mr. DUNN. If the gentleman will read the first part of the rule he will see what it means.

Mr. HISCOCK. But here we have formulated a code of laws, permanent legislation, looking to the creation of a new board, and all that sort of thing, by this provision of the bill.

Hence it seems to me to be clear that legislation upon those subjects is not contemplated by this rule, and is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear from any gentleman who thinks that this is proper on the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. We submit to the Chair without discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. That point of order extends, I presume, to line 46?

The CHAIRMAN. It strikes out all of section 5.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I now offer the amendment which I have tried twice before to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to give a detailed statement of how much money has heretofore during each of the fiscal years been expended by the Government for the repair or construction of any levees on the Mississippi River, either directly or indirectly, from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River.

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order on that amendment, and ask a ruling of the Chair upon it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I wish to say that already in section 3 and in section 4 of this bill I have found places where I think the amendment would have been proper, and where I tried to offer it. It is the same amendment, with a verbal change, that I tried to offer at section 3 and also section 4 of the bill.

In the third section, in line 7, you will see that it is the duty of the Secretary of War to give a detailed statement of the work done, which is very general in its terms. He shall also report the contracts made, the expenditure incurred, &c. Now, my amendment, if I could have offered it there, would have made it requisite for him to furnish a detailed statement of how much money was expended for levees. I could show by reports that a reference is made to the money expended for levees, but no detailed statements are furnished, it being connected with other matters. This amendment, therefore, proposes that he shall show just how much has been spent or may be expended on the levees in future.

Again, in the fourth section I could have offered the same amendment, and I am sure no point of order could have been sustained against it. It is in the same spirit that the third section is placed in the bill that I offer this. The reason I offer it as an additional section is because I failed to get the floor to offer it as a verbal amendment to these paragraphs. I think it is in order. If the third or fourth sections of the bill are in order, this is undoubtedly so.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed amendment has no relation to the expenditure of money for the improvement of the rivers and harbors, but simply seeks information as to what has been expended in past years. It is out of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Not only past years, Mr. Chairman, but what may be expended under the application of this bill in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The further seeking for information is out of order on this bill. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the proviso contained in section 4 of the act of July 5, 1884, in regard to the improvement of the Yadkin River, North Carolina, and the acquiring of the right of way, &c., is hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. That whenever the Secretary of War shall have good reason to believe that any railroad or other bridge now or hereafter to be constructed over any of the navigable waters of the United States, under authority of the United States or of any State or Territory, is an obstruction to the free navigation of such waters, by reason of insufficient height, width of span, or otherwise, or of difficulty in passing the draw-opening or the raft-span of said bridge by rafts, steamboats, or other water craft, it shall be the duty of the said Secretary, on the presentation to him of a complaint, under oath, by any citizen of the United States, in such form as he may prescribe, to report the case to the United States district attorney for the district in which said bridge or other obstruction is situated; and it shall be the duty of said district attorney immediately to require the party responsible for such obstruction, or his agent, to remove it within a reasonable time, and in the event of the continuance of said obstruction to institute proceedings at once, by information or complaint, in the United States district or circuit court for such district, for the condemnation of such bridge or other obstruction to navigation, jurisdiction in the premises being hereby expressly given to such United States district or circuit courts; and if said court shall find and adjudge said bridge to be an obstruction, said judgment shall be certified at once to the Secretary of War, who shall, without delay, order the same to be altered or rebuilt of sufficient height and to have sufficient width of span so as not to obstruct free navigation, with such aids to the passage of said draw-opening, or of said raft-span, or of both, to be constructed, placed, and maintained, at the cost and expense of the owner of such bridge or other obstruction, in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for the guiding of said rafts, steamboats, and other water craft safely through said opening or span, or both said opening or span, as shall be specified in his order in that behalf; and on completion of said work he shall refer the matter without delay to the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute a suit for indemnity in the name of the United States, in any circuit or district court of the United States in which such bridge, or any part thereof, is located, against the party in default, who shall be liable for double the damages and costs recovered therein, for the recovery of the cost thereof; and all moneys accruing from such proceedings shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That such sum of money as may be necessary to execute the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on the requisition of the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no greater sum than $15,000 shall be required to be expended upon any one bridge in a single year.

Mr. KEAN. I desire to make a point of order on this section 7. My point of order is that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have no jurisdiction of this subject. It is a subject that has been already referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the Committee on Commerce have reported a bill in the same terms as this section, which bill is on the Calendar. I therefore make the further point of order that this is the substance of a pending bill.

Mr. WOODWARD. I wish to make one remark on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WOODWARD. The bill to which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] has alluded was referred to the Committee on Commerce at the last session of Congress and was reported to this House by that committee favorably. But subsequently, when the river and harbor bill went to the Senate, the Senate placed that bill, or the substance of that bill, which had previously been passed by that body, on the river and harbor bill as an amendment, and it is now section 8 of the river and harbor bill of last session. The gentleman from New Jersey is mistaken in referring to the bill as being now on one of the Calendars of this House. It was enacted into law as section 8 of the river and harbor bill at the last session. This is a modification of that section as now proposed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. There can be no doubt that this section is not in order, and that it should be ruled out on the point of order made by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire of some gentleman who knows all about it—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] holds the floor. The gentleman from New York can make his inquiry after the gentleman from Pennsylvania shall have yielded the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The jurisdiction over the subject embraced in this section belongs to the Committee on Commerce, and always has belonged to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce, as stated in clause 7 of Rule XI, applies—

To commerce, life-saving service, and light-houses, other than appropriations for life-saving service and light-houses.

Is the subject embraced in this section included in that jurisdiction?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Whatever may be included in the language which the Chair has just read, I beg to state that legislation with regard to bridges has always been referred during this session to the Committee on Commerce; and it was the same during last session. And that committee has reported one bill and has other bills before it now in which the very same provisions as are embraced in this section are included—almost word for word.

Mr. KEAN. I hold in my hand a bill which is the substance of the pending section. It is almost identical in language.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is that no bill or resolution shall be amended by incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending. But this is not an amendment; it is a part of the bill.

Mr. STONE. I wish to say a word on the point of order. I submit that the fact that the Committee on Commerce has jurisdiction of this same subject is in no sense decisive of the point of order; inasmuch as there are very many matters under the jurisdiction of two committees. And I submit that if it be competent for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to deal with rivers and harbors, it is competent for them to deal with legislation which provides for the proper administration of rivers and harbors.

Mr. GIBSON. If you look at the first line of the rule which has been referred to you will find it says:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committee named in the preceding rule as follows.

Then it says:

Subjects relating—

And then follows in clause 8 the words:

To the improvement of rivers and harbors: to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Now I submit if this is legislation relative to the improvement of the navigation of rivers or the navigation of harbors either by increasing their depth or by removing any obstruction, it is referable under the rule to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks it would be in order for the committee to report in a river and harbor bill a provision for cutting down an overhanging tree or to remove any structure over a river which was navigable. And it appears to the Chair this simply provides a legal means of getting rid of the bridge which is a permanent obstruction to navigation. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Will the Chair permit me to say this: That there is involved here a question of law, and the Judiciary Committee ought to have charge of this legislation. It is not a question of the navigation or the improvement of rivers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled upon the question.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to strike out the section.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in the last river and harbor bill there was placed section 8, which as I supposed carried precisely the same idea as this section 7 of the present bill. But I find on examination that it is entirely different, and the application of what is here proposed would, I am satisfied, be very disastrous to certain sections of the country. I can not see that there is any necessity for any legislation on this subject. If there be none, this section 8 will remain permanent law, and that is precisely as it should be.

The question being taken on Mr. DUNHAM's motion to strike out the section, it was agreed to—ayes 104, noes 38.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer an independent section to come in at this point.

The Clerk read the proposed section, as follows:

The money which shall be appropriated by this act for the improvement of the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio River shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and in accordance with plans approved by him.

Mr. REAGAN. I make the point that that is not in order. It changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. This is not a general appropriation bill, as was shown by the opinion of the present Speaker of the House, quoted in the decision delivered the other day; which opinion was pronounced after an argument by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and Mr. Robtson, of New Jersey, urging that view.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me of the highest importance, Mr. Chairman, that these large sums of money should be expended under the control of a responsible Department of the Government. This board is not responsible in any proper sense of the word. It is a body that is not responsible to any Department of the Government; and I repeat, that where we are expending these vast sums in my judgment the expenditure ought to be made in such a manner that some regular Department of the Government should be responsible for both the expenditure and for the work. I think one of the principal objections, perhaps the leading objection, to the system of expenditure adopted of late years is that nobody has been responsible.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Is not that the main proposition that strengthens the bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. All I desire is that some regular Department of the Government shall be responsible for the expenditure of this money. It is anomalous and without precedent in your Government, the creation of these irresponsible boards and giving them control of these vast sums of money; and I assure gentlemen who are interested in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River—and I am sure that no one can be more interested in it than the district I represent—that they will strengthen this measure if they will consent to place this work under the supervision of a responsible head. I trust gentlemen will bear in mind that the Mississippi River is not being improved for any particular locality. I think my own constituency is as much interested in that work as any district bordering upon the great river.

Vast interests on the Ohio are involved in this improvement. All I ask of you is that when you determine to spend these great sums upon the work of improvement you shall have some Department of the Government that you can hold responsible; and I defy you, gentlemen, to point out any body of men more competent to take charge of this work and administer it wisely, prudently, economically, and safely for the Government, or capable of securing more of the public confidence than your Corps of Engineers, a body of men whose integrity and capacity, as I have had occasion to say once before upon this floor, no gentleman has ever called in question. That is all I desire to say. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLANCHARD, Mr. HUNT, and Mr. KING addressed the Chair. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, is recognized. The Chair will recognize other gentlemen later.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I call the House to witness that the proposition which he has submitted virtually repeals the act of Congress creating the Mississippi River Commission. That act was passed after years of arduous effort and labor on the part of the friends of the river. It was passed some seven years ago; and under it a commission was organized consisting of three members of the Engineer Corps of the Army, one member of the Geodetic Survey, two civil engineers, and one civilian not an engineer. They have had in charge the improvement of the river since their organization. They have adopted and matured a systematic plan for its improvement, and for years they have been engaged in the prosecution of that work. Now this commission has charge of the improvement of the river, not merely from the mouth of the Ohio River to the Gulf, but, by an amendment adopted a few days ago, from the mouth of the Illinois River to the Gulf. In the bill of last year their jurisdiction extended as high up as the Des Moines Rapids, the commission having nothing to do with handling the money appropriated by Congress for the improvement of the river. That is in the hands of the Secretary of War. The disbursements are made under the direction of that functionary. The duties of the commission are confined to preparing the plans for the improvement of the river and prosecuting the work.

This amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] provides that from the mouth of the Ohio to the Gulf the river shall be improved under the direction of the Secretary of the War—that is to say, pursuant to plans to be approved by him—thus striking down the commission so far as that reach of the river is concerned, but leaving the commission entirely unfettered as to that portion of the river between the mouth of the Illinois and the mouth of the Ohio. That shows the consistency of the gentleman from Indiana. He would leave this commission with all its machinery and all its annual expenses in existence to prosecute the work on one reach of the river, to wit, between the mouth of the Illinois and the mouth of the Ohio, but he would handicap it, emasculate it, so far as the reach from the mouth of the Ohio to the Gulf is concerned. That is what his amendment proposes. I do not think that this House is prepared to adopt any such amendment, even though it be offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] a while ago that if he had a motion to make the Chair would hear him next, and he now has the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is to undo all of this great work which Congress has performed in the last seven years. For fifty years the Mississippi River was in charge of the Engineer Corps of the Army. At the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress a law was passed creating a commission to devise a plan for the improvement of that great river—not to levee it, not to carry out or serve any particular interest, not for the purpose of protecting private property or anything of that kind, but to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River. That commission was appointed by the President of the United States. Its appointment was advocated on this floor with matchless eloquence by Garfield and by the other great lights of that Congress; and it is left for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to come in at this late hour and propose the annihilation of this commission.

I hear the charge on all sides that the work of this commission is a failure. I state here on my responsibility as a member of this House that these allegations are not true. The work of that commission has been a success. It is shown by their reports that not 10 per cent. of their works have failed. I call the attention of the House to a report made by a committee of the Senate, sent down that river to examine this work. The report is signed by Senator LOGAN, of Illinois, and it recommends that every dollar asked for by the commission be granted by Congress. While it says it is not competent to judge of the plan so far, yet it adds:

In view, however, of the good work already done by them (the commission) and the manifest results achieved and the reasonable hope of further benefits to the general navigation, commerce, and trade to be derived, it is recommended that the sum, &c.

Then the report goes on to recommend that the whole sum asked by the commission be appropriated. If you follow the lead of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] you will not only destroy the commission, but you will set back this great work a century.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope now we shall have a vote.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], to strike out the words "below the mouth of the Ohio River."

Mr. HOLMAN. I accept that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am in favor of placing the responsibility of the expenditure of this money somewhere. Whenever a commission is created by law to do a particular work, there is a want of responsibility. This Mississippi River Commission is without any responsibility.

Mr. WILLIS. Under the existing law creating the Mississippi River Commission the money appropriated is expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HISCOCK. But I like this amendment much better. I say to my friends on the other side, if you joined in the creation of one of these commissions because the Republican party was in power, a Democratic administration is now about to come in; you will have the Secretary of War; and you should let these improvements be matters for which an administration shall be responsible. Then, in my judgment, the people will be satisfied with the expenditure of the money. You can not afford to deny to your own administration power over this question; you can not afford to take from it responsibility upon this question. When an estimate or a report comes in here in reference to a work of this kind the President of the United States or the Secretary of War should be responsible for it.

I congratulate the gentleman from Indiana that he has taken this step in the direction of fixing upon a branch of the Government chosen by the people the responsibility for the expenditures of these large sums of money.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the gentleman— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that my amendment has been accepted by the gentleman from Indiana, and his proposition modified accordingly.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will yield for a question—

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I want to ask him if he is not aware of the fact that the law now places the expenditure of every dollar of these appropriations under the Secretary of War?

Mr. HISCOCK. Then why object to this proposition?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, the consistency of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is well exhibited in the condition of the bill now under consideration and as sought to be further amended by them. It was first of all urged upon the Committee of the Whole that nothing was so desirable to be tried as a business-like experiment upon the two great reaches of the river known as Plum Point and Providence reaches; and the first amendment of the gentleman from Indiana was introduced accordingly into the bill confining experiments upon those two reaches.

But no sooner had the gentlemen and those acting with them succeeded in fixing the experiments only upon the reaches of the river referred to, than the sole means by which the consistent scientific work now going on upon those reaches can be proceeded with correctly is sought to be taken away. This, then, is what the friendship of the gentlemen to the bill amounts to. They wish in good faith, as is protested, to confine all work and experiments to the two reaches; but they have no sooner succeeded in arresting the operations elsewhere and in settling them upon the reaches than they would proceed to remove the skilled professional direction and control under which the improvements ought to be, and have hitherto been, conducted!

So much for that point. "But," says the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] who has taken such a stalwart part against the Mississippi in the debate upon this measure, "I defy anybody to show this improvement has resulted in any success or passed beyond the experimental stage." How dares the gentleman to defy the truth?

Let me read from the report of the Mississippi River Commission:

The marked improvement of low-water depth where works are being carried on, alluded to in the last year's report, was again exemplified at the recent low water. Wherever the contraction works had been even approximately completed, the depths were nearly double those found on the unimproved portions of the river in their vicinity. It seems as if this fact should settle all doubts as to the possibility of so improving the navigation of the river by the methods adopted by the commission as to meet any reasonable requirement. The minor difficulties incident to the inception of any new work are fast disappearing as experience is acquired, and all that now seems necessary to make the work successful is that funds shall be supplied liberally and promptly.

Here then, I say, is the best evidence to show that contraction works are fully and decidedly successful wherever they have gone forward.

Now, Mr. Chairman, allow me one word in conclusion to show gentlemen the necessity of prosecuting work beyond these two reaches. The evidence is already before you that it has been successful in the reaches. Now both above and below Plum Point reach lie unimproved parts of the river, and to make real progress in this great national undertaking that which is at present unimproved ought to be added as speedily as practicable to the improved. Let me read further from the report of the Mississippi River Commission:

During the low-water season of 1883 not more than six feet of water was found through the New Madrid and Memphis reaches, which lie, respectively, above and below that of Plum Point. The case this year was but little better. It would seem, therefore, advisable to extend the work to these reaches as soon as possible, as such a course would open to an improved navigation about two hundred and fifty miles of river from Cairo down, or about one-fourth of the distance to New Orleans, and nearly one-half the total distance which requires extensive improvement. That such a result would be of great value to navigation can not be doubted. The commission have prepared plans for beginning work on these reaches and will take them in hand as soon as the funds placed at their disposal will justify such action.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana withdraw his formal amendment?

Mr. HUNT. I do.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply not so much to the words of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] as to the idea which he has expressed to this House. The House has taken one step in the right direction, that of limiting this improvement to this experimental stage and not spreading it all over the river. There is one other step the House ought to take, and that is the one suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. It is to put the responsibility upon the proper Department of the Government to carry out that experiment. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] says that it is removing the "intelligent direction." How "dares he defy truth," and above all of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors? [Laughter.]

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have divulged the facts about that "intelligent direction," and they told us it was necessary to enact an amendment to make that commission conform to the original plan. That is the intelligent direction that submits itself, and has to, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House.

Why, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has given us facts and figures enough to refute everything that can be said about intelligent direction on the part of this commission. They were throwing away, according to him, $150,000,000.

And again, the whole system of having commissions to do this kind of work is necessarily wrong, because a commission that comes in and admits its experiment is a failure admits itself out of a job.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It does not do that at all.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And human nature is too weak and frail in a world as sinful as this yet is. [Laughter.]

Now, we ought to have this done by responsible officers of the Government, and if it turns out to be a failure I want an honest report to that effect. We want to know it, and we want to know it at the hands of unprejudiced men. This commission has been dallying with the business. The report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shows that. They felt it necessary to confine them to the original plan, from which it seems their "intelligent direction" had vibrated. Surely this House can not hesitate to go on with the good work to give us not only a good business proposition but also a wise supervision and sound responsibility. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to call the attention— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Mr. Chairman, I hope this will not come out of my time. [Laughter.] I desire to call the attention of the other gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING], who stated in reference to the appropriation of $4,000,000 that they did not wish this money for the improvement of levees—that it was not for the improvement of levees—

Mr. KING. I say so emphatically, that this appropriation is asked for no other purpose than for the improvement of that river.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not wish this to come out of my time. I call attention of the committee to the fact that of the $4,000,000 voted by the act of Congress in 1882 $1,350,000 was expended for building levees. Here it is:

Without stopping to discuss the merits of this theory about which there is much conflict of opinion and no certainty of beneficial results, your committee do not believe that the advantages to navigation to be derived from the construction of levees will be at all commensurate with their enormous cost. The probable expense of a system of levees of sufficient strength to hold the flood-waters of the river within a channel, as is proposed by the commission, of 5,000 feet is variously estimated from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000; while many witnesses are not presumptuous enough to even venture upon an estimate of their ultimate expense. If the results sought to be reached could be attained by the repair only of existing levees, of course the cost would be very much below this estimate, but the plan of the commission contemplates, ultimately, the erection of a continuous line of levees conformable to, and substantially upon, the crest of the natural banks. The estimated cost of such works your committee submit is not extravagant.

It may be suggested, too, in this connection, as an additional reason why such new levee works should not be undertaken at present, that their permanency depends entirely upon the ability to hold the caving banks, and until it is demonstrated beyond all controversy that the banks can be held such work should not be entered upon. But further than this, it seems to your committee that before such an undertaking is entered upon, involving such an enormous expenditure, it should be made to appear beyond all controversy that such works are absolutely essential to the improvement of the low-water navigation. So far from this being established, there is not only great diversity of opinion among those who have made the improvement of the Mississippi a study, but even the members of the Mississippi River Commission do not agree upon this portion of the plan. General Comstock, president of the commission, testified before your committee as follows:

Q. Your view as to the building of levees on banks is, that it is not essential to mere low-water navigation of the river?

A. No, sir.

Q. You think they are of a great deal more service for protection of land than for the improvement of the channel for navigation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you were the sole member of the commission would you have expended the money in that way?

A. No, sir.

No portion of the first appropriation of $1,000,000 was used for the repair or construction of levees, but out of the four millions one hundred and twenty-three thousand appropriated August 2, 1882, for the improvement of the Mississippi, under the direction of the commission, $1,550,000 were allotted for the construction and repair of levees, one million of which had been expended on the 1st of October, 1882. In the allotment by the commission out of the current appropriation for levee work a considerable sum was set apart for the rebuilding of levees below the mouth of the Red River.

Mr. KING. That may be so, but—

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not yield.

Mr. KING. That may be so—

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I decline to yield. Now, the gentleman will find this information in report 1985, Forty-seventh Congress, second session, pages viii and ix, Roman letters. [Laughter.]

Now, a word more. I want to call the attention of the committee to the original plan, the plan as it was adopted by Gillmore, by Suter, by Mitchell, by your immaculate James B. Eads, and by B. W. Harrod, your commission, as shown by Executive Document No. 58, second session Forty-sixth Congress:

A levee system aids and facilitates the postal service by protecting from injury and destruction by freshets and floods the various common roads and railways upon which that service is conducted to and from the river bank, and generally within that portion of the alluvial region subject to overflow.

I want to remind the gentleman from Louisiana that the work done at the Bonnet Carré crevasse was more for the benefit of the railroad which crosses the outlet at that point than for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River; just as the improvement of the Potomac flats here at Washington is more for the benefit of the Virginia Midland Railroad than to prevent malaria in the District of Columbia.

In so far as this appropriation is for the Mississippi River, under that harbor commission without responsibility, which calls on the Secretary of War to perform the duty of signing checks and giving them the money, but he has no responsibility devolving upon him as Secretary of War, I say it is simply a continuance of the same old plan by which already more than two millions of money that has been appropriated for the Mississippi River has gone for the improvement of the levees, and more than two millions of the amount appropriated for the river has gone to the repair of your fruitless works.

No, sir. I claim that we ought not to do anything in this bill for the Mississippi River until they can show at the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches the grand success claimed, and not what has been shown by the argument of the gentleman from Arkansas is a mere experimental work that may lead to the expenditure, and the wasteful expenditure, of $150,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do.

Mr. KING. I renew it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WILLIS. Let us have a vote.

Mr. KING. I wish to respond for a moment to the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. WILLIS. I ask my friend from Louisiana not to occupy further time, but let us have a vote.

Mr. KING. I will respond to him, and will not be stopped. I do not wish the inference he makes to go unquestioned.

Mr. WILLIS. I appeal to the gentleman from Louisiana to let us have a vote.

Mr. KING. I want to call his attention to one fact. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KING. I wish to say, and the gentleman from Kentucky knows it, that no one work of any character whatever has been put upon the Mississippi River by the commission except under the law creating that commission. That law strictly confines them to the improvement of the river. If it be by dikes, by spur-dams, by the protection of its banks, or by levees, all well and good. There is nothing in the law confining them to the protection of private property. On the contrary, it strictly forbids their doing so.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of my friend from Louisiana— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. [Renewed cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I hope we will have order. We are only losing time. Let the gentleman speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I hope this will not come out of my time. I do not desire to speak unless we have order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not charge the time against the gentleman from Kentucky when he is so much interrupted that he can not be heard. After order is restored the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. In response to the gentleman from Louisiana who has just taken his seat, I desire to call his attention to page 19 of this same Executive Document No. 58, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, in which it says:

Works for contracting the channel and protecting the banks, $776,000 for New Madrid reach.

For Plum Point reach, works for contracting the channel and protecting the banks, $392,000; Memphis reach, works for contracting the channel and protecting the banks, $282,000.

For Helena reach, works for contracting the channel and protecting the banks, $613,000. For the Chocaw bend, works for contracting the channel and protecting the banks, $464,000; and for Lake Providence reach, works for contracting the channel and protecting the banks, $507,000.

And so on I could quote at length. Now the gentleman says that none of this is to be given for the levees. Is this protecting the banks or for the levees? I ask him the question. And I have shown already that of the $4,000,000 appropriated for this river in 1882 $1,350,000 went for the levees alone. I want to call his attention again to this report. On page ix, Roman letters, of the same report he will find this:

Your committee are satisfied, from the evidence, that the people along the banks of the Mississippi are chiefly and naturally interested in the building of levees not so much in the interest of navigation as to secure their lands from overflow, and thereby enhance their value. If the building of levees was essential to the improvement of navigation, the fact that they afforded protection to the riparian owners would be no reason for discontinuing them. On the contrary, such a result would be extremely gratifying. Your committee, however, do not believe that they are essential to the improvement of the low-water navigation of the Mississippi, and that their construction for such a purpose can not be justified. It may be further suggested that if the views of your committee are concurred in, and the work of channel improvement restricted to one or two reaches, a system of levees will hardly be necessary while this experimental work is being tested. Certainly the superstructure should not be constructed until the permanency of the foundation is established.

There is where the pork lies. There is where lie the backbone and ribs of this bill framed by this select committee to which the gentleman from Arkansas alluded. It is in your Mississippi River Commission, which has no responsibility but a limitless amount of cash at its fingers' ends to be spent for levees for the benefit of private property.

Do you not remember how it was when the appropriation for Algiers, just across the river from New Orleans, was about to be struck out? We then found that the vertebral column of this bill was about to be broken and the equanimity of the committee was only restored by keeping that in the bill. If you fail to put the Mississippi River Commission in this bill you will kill the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. KING. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 133, noes 57.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer what I send to the desk to be inserted in the bill as a new section.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will not insist on offering that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do. It is very important and very much urged.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. — That a board to be called the United States harbor board is hereby temporarily created, to consist of seven members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Three members of said board shall be appointed from the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast Survey, and three from civil life, all of which latter number shall be civil engineers, eminent in their profession. It shall be the duty of the said board to visit all works to be constructed by the Government for the improvement of outlets to the sea, as provided for in this bill, by means of what is known as the jetty system, and it shall thoroughly examine into all such plans to be prosecuted at said works, and it shall report upon the same to the Secretary of War, which report shall be transmitted to Congress at its next regular meeting in December; and it shall embrace such remarks and recommendations relative to the correctness of the plans and methods of said improvements prosecuted, together with estimates for the proper improvement of said outlets and harbors, as said board may deem necessary to secure permanent and substantial relief to commerce. The members of said board shall be paid at the rate of $5,000 per annum, except that those members appointed from the permanent service of the Government shall receive no other salary or compensation than is now allowed by law; and the existence of this board shall expire at the end of one year from the date of its appointment and organization.

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and instructed to detail an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army to act as secretary of said board, upon being requested by it so to do, and likewise to extend to it all facilities in the way of maps, charts, instruments, books, reports, and so forth, that it may require and that may be at his disposal; and said board shall complete all necessary examinations, observations, and inquiries upon which to base plans for the proper and permanent improvement of said river and harbor outlets.

"The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which shall be expended by said board under the direction and control of the Secretary of War."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute is not in order at this time, the point of order having been made on the amendment. The gentleman from New York will state the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is substantially the same provision which has been once ruled out of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon that. I think we can finish the bill in ten minutes. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not withdraw it.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the motion that the committee rise may be voted down.

The question being taken on Mr. CANNON's motion, there were—ayes 71, noes 117.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has the floor on the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. By request I withdraw the amendment, with the statement that I will introduce it again at the close of the last session.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to the amendment being withdrawn.

Mr. GIBSON. Let the point of order be decided now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order if no gentleman desires to be heard on it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say a word. This is substantially the same provision which has already been ruled upon. We have all the machinery now for the expenditure of this money. It is legislation as to which there should be no recommendation from this committee, and it is not germane to the bill. Further than that, this having once been ruled out of the bill, and the decision of the Chair in ruling it out not having been appealed from, I submit that the matter is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. There was very little argument upon the question of order made upon the section of the bill which was ruled out. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] was heard, but no gentlemen on the other side responded. The Chair, therefore, ruled on its own understanding of the point of order as presented by the gentleman from New York.

The point which attracted the attention of the Chair was this:

It shall be the duty of the said board to visit all works now being constructed by the Government * * * and it shall thoroughly examine into all such plans now being prosecuted at said works, &c.

The Chair did not see at the moment how money appropriated in this bill could apply to works being constructed under former bills, and therefore ruled as it did. The Chair understands the proposition now to be to create a board to dispose of the money to be appropriated by this bill and for the works named in the bill. The Chair thinks that is in order, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, one word. This board is now equally divided between civil engineers and military engineers, a point yielded by me at the solicitation of my friend from California [Mr. ROSECRANS], and entirely acceptable to him. One word more: This is one of the few propositions that met with the unanimous support of the River and Harbor Committee as being exceedingly necessary.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There are other objections to it besides that.

Mr. BAYNE. I objected to it, and insisted that if a board was to be created four of the members should be chosen from the Engineer Corps, and subsequently I proposed that three members should be chosen from that corps, but both propositions were voted down.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That was the substance of my amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania acquiesced in what we finally adopted and voted for it, although it went further than what is now proposed.

Mr. BAYNE. I dissent from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Well, we will not dispute about it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, we took a step in the right direction when we adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to place the responsibility for the expenditure of this money with the head of a Department. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

The question was taken by a risa voce vote, and the Chair stated in his judgment the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. As many as are in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas will rise and stand until counted. Pending the count,

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I withdraw that, and ask for a vote in the House.

Several members objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the demand can not be withdrawn.

The House divided; and there were ayes 57.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No further count is demanded.

Mr. ANDERSON. I demand a further count.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the demand to be withdrawn.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, go ahead.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. COOK. I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as an additional section the following:

"That the money which shall be appropriated by this act for the improvement of the Missouri River shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and in accordance with plans approved by him.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Chairman, this is in the same line as the amendment just adopted with reference to the Mississippi River. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that we have passed the section to which that is germane or to which it applies.

The CHAIRMAN. This is offered as an independent section, and the point of order is overruled.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 115, noes 30.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. COSGROVE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. COOK, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS, will take their places as tellers.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that the committee now rise.

Several MEMBERS. No, no!

Mr. COSGROVE. I withdraw the point as to no quorum voting.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I have not withdrawn it, and I do not intend to.

Mr. WILLIS. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] to withdraw the point.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. It is now after 6 o'clock, and you can not finish this bill to-night.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the committee now rise.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] in charge of this bill a question: If you get the previous question upon the bill do you propose to call a vote to-night?

Mr. WILLIS. No, sir; not at all.

Several MEMBERS. Let us finish it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] insist upon a division?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, sir.

The House divided on the motion of Mr. ANDERSON; and there were—ayes 19, noes 141.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COOK]. The tellers will take their places. Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. If there is an understanding that no vote by yeas and nays is to be taken to-night I will withdraw the point; but I want a definite understanding.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to the gentleman that my object is to have the previous question ordered this evening and then take an adjournment.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the point.

Mr. ANDERSON renewed the point; but before the count was concluded withdrew it.

So the amendment of Mr. COOK was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed, at his discretion, to cause examinations or surveys, or both, and estimates of cost of improvements proper to be made at the following points, namely:

Harbor at Portland, Me.: To ascertain and report what further work, if any, is necessary in that locality.

Harbor at Camden, Me.

Big Rapids of Saint John's River, Maine.

Harbor at Wellsfleet, Mass.

Taunton River, Massachusetts.

Vineyard Haven, Mass.

North River, in Salem, between Essex and North Bridges, Mass.

Duck Island Harbor, with a view to a harbor of refuge, Connecticut.

Susquehanna River between Owego and Binghamton, N. Y.

Channel between Jamaica Bay and Rockaway Inlet, Queens County, New York.

Harbor at Waddington, N. Y.

Mouth of the Patuxent River, New York.

Pond River, Kentucky.

The Secretary of War is directed to report to the next Congress whether or not the Government dry-dock at the Louisville and Portland Canal, Kentucky, is adequate for the purposes of commerce, and what alterations, if any, are necessary, and the cost of making the same.

Farm Creek, Illinois, with a view to changing its course.

Little River, Louisiana.

Bayou Rouge, Louisiana.

Harbor at Sandusky, Ohio, with a view to a straight channel from the north end of Cedar Point to the east end of the existing channel in front of the city.

Punta Rasa Harbor, Florida.

Biddle Point, at Mackinac Harbor, Michigan, with a view to a breakwater.

Pigeon River, Michigan.

Kaskaskia River, Illinois, from New Athens to mouth.

Julias Creek, California, off San Francisco Bay. A survey is directed to be made regardless of the fact of existing obstruction by the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the channel of said creek by the Protrero and Bay View Railroad Company.

Harbor of San Luis Obispo, California.

Before the reading of the section was concluded the following proceedings took place:

Mr. BOUTELLE. I offer the following amendment:

After line 6 insert the following:

"Penobscot Bay, from Bangor Bridge to Bucksport Narrows, to ascertain and report what further work is necessary for the removal of obstructions to navigation."

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 44 of section 8 insert the following:

"Holston River, Tennessee, from Kingsport, Tenn., to its junction with the French Broad River."

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that; but I suggest that the whole section be read before any of these amendments be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] suggests that before amendments be offered to this section the Clerk complete the reading.

There was no objection, and the reading of the section was concluded.

Many members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. To avoid confusion the Chair will state that opportunity will be given to every gentleman desiring to offer an amendment; and as there seem to be very many the Chair will alternate, recognizing first a gentleman on the left and then one on the right.

The amendment of Mr. PETTIBONE, having been again read, was adopted.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the committee now rise.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 10, noes 130.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. McMILLIN. No quorum is required on this vote.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum is necessary on a motion that the committee rise. The motion is not agreed to.

Mr. OATES. I move to amend by inserting the clause which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause a resurvey of the Choctawhatchie River from the town of Geneva to Newton, Ala., with a view to low-water navigation on said river.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to these surveys. The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 112, noes 8.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum. Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest that by unanimous consent all these surveys asked for be added to the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object. These propositions are the entering-wedges to this great system of distributing appropriations.

Mr. GIBSON. None of these surveys are made except with the approval and by the order of the Secretary of War. No appropriation is made for any of them. They will not cost a cent. They are "entering-wedges" to nothing in the world. I hope the gentleman from Kansas will not stand in the way of allowing members to secure that which their constituents ask. It facilitates the passage of the bill and hurts nobody. It enables us to bring the bill into such a position that in the morning we can take a vote on its passage and let other business go on.

Mr. ANDERSON. We all know that the initial step to an appropriation in a bill of this kind is a survey. We all know that gentlemen are anxious to have surveys made in their districts.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentleman will understand that this colloquy is proceeding by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON]?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object. The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 152, noes 11.

So the amendment of Mr. OATES was adopted.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that all amendments offered or to be offered by gentlemen to this section be printed in the RECORD and regarded as pending, and that the bill be considered as reported from the Committee of the Whole, with these amendments, for the action of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the committee. He asks unanimous consent that members having amendments simply suggesting surveys shall hand them to the Clerk, that they shall be printed in the RECORD, and considered as adopted and pending. Is there objection?

Mr. HISCOCK. Not to be considered as pending.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. We can not adopt amendments in that way or we will have a thousand streams to be surveyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition is modified by withdrawing the word "adopted."

Mr. ANDERSON. I shall not object to that, on condition the committee rise and the House shall then adjourn. It is 7 o'clock now.

The CHAIRMAN. It is understood these amendments are to section 8 of the bill. Section 9 has not been read.

Mr. WILLIS. In one moment I think I can settle this whole difficulty. If gentlemen offering amendments will withdraw them from the desk and hand them to me the committee will examine them, and such as are found to be all right, and I have no doubt they all will be, before the previous question is ordered they can be moved to the bill in the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not think we can afford to legislate in any such way.

Mr. WILLIS. There is a law covering this matter now. It is a mere matter of form. The law prescribes where a suggestion is made to the Secretary of War he shall have a preliminary examination made, those found to be worthy of improvement are reported to the House. It goes no further and costs no money.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This House has no right to put such responsibilities on the Secretary of War. You can not make up these thousand and one surveys without it costing something. It may cost millions.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask my suggestion be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. There is objection.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent, and the remark of the gentleman from Ohio is in the nature of objection.

Mr. WILLIS. My proposition is that gentlemen shall not offer them, but hand them to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The trouble about the motion is that the gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. WILLIS. There are no amendments pending before this committee, and there will be none if gentlemen cease to offer them.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Ohio objects to anything of the sort.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not asking unanimous consent, but that each member shall bring them to me and I will submit them to the committee, and those found all right will be moved in the House before the previous question is ordered. I only ask gentlemen to recognize the situation and bring their amendments to me and then let us pass on to the next section. I ask whether there is any question pending before the committee. [Cries of "Vote!"] If there is not, let the Clerk read the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. There are numerous amendments on the desk to be submitted. [Cries of "Read them!"] The Chair stated that one should be read from the left and one from the right. There are a great many remaining to be read. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Withdraw them!" "Read them!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HEPBURN. I move the committee rise.

Mr. DUNN. I move an amendment that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. DUNN. Why?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill can not be reported to the House while amendments are pending to it. Besides that there is one section which has not yet been read.

Mr. BAYNE. I renew my proposition. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 118.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment, offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 27 insert:

"The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause an examination and survey of the Saint Mary's Falls Canal and locks, with a view to obtaining an estimate of the cost of enlarging the same, or of the construction of an additional canal and locks to meet the increasing demands of commerce, as shown in Executive Document 102, House of Representatives, Forty-eighth Congress, second session."

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order that this is a canal and does not belong to this bill. It is not germane.

Mr. WASHBURN. This amendment is certainly in order. It is the amendment I offered to the main part of the bill, but at the request of the chairman of the committee postponed it until we got to this section.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not make the point of order upon it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I understand that.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order. I understand this canal is really a river.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is simply a lock in the river—

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a connection between the two parts of the same river?

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment, by Mr. GARRISON.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 28, page 48, by adding "Mattox Creek," a tributary of the Potomac, with a view to deepening its mouth.

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment (by Mr. MILLIKEN) was read, as follows:

Harbor at Belfast, Me.: Gilkey's harbor, in west side, with a view to ascertaining what buoys should be placed in said harbor.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend, in line 22, by adding what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after line 22, the words "Salt River."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I find in line 22 that there is to be a survey of "Pond River," Kentucky. I have interviewed two or three members of Congress from my State before I could find out where Pond River was, and I thought I was pretty well versed in the geography of Kentucky. I find that it is a tributary of the Green or Barren River above the locks or dams, which are owned by a private corporation in that State.

Now, the national Democratic platform has this to say with reference to these internal improvements, and I beg to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to it:

That the Federal Government should care for and improve the Mississippi River and the other great water ways of the Republic, so as to secure for the entire States easy and cheap transportation to tide water.

How are you going to get to tide water down this river over a lock and dam which has been placed under Democratic rule in Kentucky on that river, and is owned by a private corporation? You propose under this bill prepared in the secret chamber of this select committee—you propose to get a survey of a tributary of a river that is owned under the Democratic rule that afflicts Kentucky by a private corporation. That is worse than the appropriation for the improvement of the Suwannee or the Great Sunflower or the Great Pee Dee River. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to say that he does not know where Pond River is?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I told the gentleman precisely what I knew, and he must not occupy my time. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that life is too short to go into an investigation of what the gentleman does not know. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I hope this will not come out of my time. [Laughter.] I want to remind the Democratic party of the fact that they have an elephant on their hands in the form of internal improvements. I want the country to understand just how much that party believes in internal improvements. If you can get the Mississippi River as a backbone—if you can get the Missouri River and the levee system as the ribs to build your structure upon, with about two hundred millions of dollars at the disposal of your commission which is responsible to nobody, then you are willing to give a few catfish streams an appropriation and to cause a survey of Pond River. I want the country to understand that there is a discrimination in this select committee that is as unfair, that is as unjust and unmanly as only a Democratic House could be guilty of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall Salt River be improved for the use of the Republican party? [Laughter.]

The amendment was adopted. [Applause and laughter.]

The next amendment (by Mr. DINGLEY) was read, as follows:

Amend section 8 by adding: Kennebec River at Bath, Me.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment just read.

Now, the reason I wanted Salt River improved was for the benefit of the Democratic party four years from now. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] It is not navigable for ships or boats of any size, but it will be navigable for the Democratic party, which I hope will go up that river four years from now.

Mr. McMILLIN. We supposed the gentleman from Kentucky desired to improve that river for his own benefit.

The amendment offered by Mr. DINGLEY was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The "noes" have it. The motion is not agreed to. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk commenced to read the next amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced the result of the vote without any call being made for a division.

Mr. HEPBURN. I called for a division, I think, within five seconds of the announcement of the vote.

Mr. McMILLIN. The Clerk began to read before the gentleman from Iowa demanded a division.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This should not be a question of speed.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Iowa states that he intended to call for a division the division will be had.

Mr. HEPBURN. I made the demand as quickly as I could.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 107.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment (offered by Mr. McMILLIN), as follows:

Add at the end of line 4, section 8, as follows:

"Obad's River, Tennessee: Between the upper works heretofore done by the Government and the mouth of the West Fork of said river."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this amendment will be considered as adopted.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 11.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HEPBURN, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. McMILLIN.

Before the result of the vote by tellers was announced Mr. McMILLIN (one of the tellers) said: The gentleman appointed with me as teller is satisfied that a quorum favors the proposition. He withdraws the point as to a quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read the following amendment (offered by Mr. BELFORD):

Add to the pending section the following:

"That $250,000 is hereby appropriated to sink ten experimental artesian wells on the plains, five of which shall be east and five west of the Rocky Mountains, to be expended under the supervision of the Commissioner of Agriculture."

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BELFORD. I move to strike out the last word. I think we are legislating about water here, and I therefore supposed my amendment would have been considered germane. You gentlemen of the Democratic party have seventy-eight majority in the House of Representatives, and yet you can not get a quorum without the help of the Republican members. How do you expect to govern the country in the next four years when you can not control this House?

There is not one dollar in that bill that comes to my State. Ninety per cent. of all the appropriations made by the Congress of the United States since this Government was organized has gone to the benefit of New York and New England.

Mr. WELLER. That is so.

Mr. BELFORD. I refer to my distinguished friend from Michigan

[Mr. HORN], who made a like statement in his speech, that 90 per cent. of the appropriations made by Congress had gone to New York and New England.

Year after year my State passes into the Treasury of this Government hundreds of thousands of dollars. From two post-offices—one at Denver and one at Leadville—we pay more than is paid by the whole State of Florida, more than is paid by the State of West Virginia, and half as much as is paid by the State of Georgia. If you desire to controvert my statement look at the report of the Postmaster-General. I say that when Colorado comes forward and asks you to appropriate a small sum of money to reclaim the vast public domain that this nation owns, and which is to be the home of millions of people in the future, you will not vote her a dollar, and yet you expect us to stand by and help you.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back with the amendments.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask to have my amendment voted upon.

Mr. WILLIS. I have got it here. It will be admitted under the call for the previous question.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. WELLBORN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. WILLIS. Before demanding the previous question I desire to say there are several amendments that I ask permission to offer. There is one in regard to New York which I will ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky if all the amendments may not be considered as pending and let them all be printed in the RECORD, as they will not be voted on till to-morrow, and then let the previous question be considered as pending?

Mr. WILLIS. I agree to that suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that these amendments may now be offered; that they shall be printed in the RECORD of to-morrow, and that they shall be considered as pending under the operation of the previous question, if the House shall order it? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments are as follows:

End of section 8, amend after line —, after the word "city":

"Provided, That in each of the appropriations made under the provisions of this bill the Government of the United States shall not be deemed or in any case hold liable or responsible to any individual or corporation in expending the money appropriated and in carrying on the improvements named for or on account of the laches or negligence of any contractor or employé performing service or labor under and by authority of the Government of the United States."

By Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts:

Survey harbor of refuge at Falmouth, Mass.

By Mr. DAVIDSON:

Between lines 34 and 35, in section 8, page 48, insert:

"Survey Caloosahatchee River from its mouth up to Fort Thompson, Florida.

"Survey channel between the mainland and coast islands, extending from Little Clearwater Pass to John's Pass, Florida.

"Survey Anclote River, Florida."

By Mr. DUNHAM:

After line 28 insert: "Survey Calumet River from the Forks to Blue Island."

By Mr. HATCH, of Michigan:

At the end of line 37, in section 8, insert: "Survey the west channel of the Saginaw River, opposite West Bay City, Michigan."

By Mr. HENLEY:

At the end of section 8, amend by adding the following: "Survey Crescent City Harbor, California, with a view to its improvement, by filling in or building a wall from Battery Point to wharf rock."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, offers the following amendment, to come in at the close of the bill:

For removing the debris resulting from the explosion of Flood Rock, at Hell Gate, $100,000.

By Mr. JONES, of Texas:

Amend on page 48 as follows: After line 30 add "Sabine River, Texas and Louisiana."

By Mr. LORE:

Amend bill by adding after line 985: "Improving harbor at Wilmington, Delaware, $25,000, which shall include the $15,000 hereinbefore in this bill named for that purpose."

By Mr. LOWRY:

Survey for a water way from Lake Erie, at Toledo, by the Maumee Valley, to Fort Wayne, and thence up the Saint Joseph's River to Steuben County, and connecting with the Big Saint Joseph's at the most desirable point, and thence down the big Saint Joseph's to Lake Michigan by way of Bristol, Elkhart, and South Bend.

By Mr. MILLER, of Texas:

At the end of line 36 insert: "For survey of the Colorado River, in Texas. For survey of the Guadalupe River, in Texas."

By Mr. OATE:

Add to section 2: "Provided, That the same shall in no wise commit the Government of the United States to purchase or improve any of such locks and dams or other improvements."

By Mr. OCHILTREE:

Survey: "From Galveston, via Saint Louis Bay and Canal, to the Brazos River."

By Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri:

At end of section 8: "The Secretary of War is directed to report to the next Congress an estimate of the probable cost of completing the work between the Illinois and Ohio Rivers on the Mississippi River and what subdivisions of work are necessary to complete said work within five years."

By Mr. POLAND:

Insert at end of section 8: "Swanton Harbor, Vermont, with a view to determine whether the present breakwater is properly located, and what may be necessary for the proper improvement and protection of said harbor."

By Mr. PRICE:

Amend by adding at the end of section 8: "And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to detail an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army to make such surveys and examinations as will ascertain the causes of the extraordinary overflows of the Chippewa River in and below the city of Eau Claire, in the State of Wisconsin, in the years 1880 and 1881, and report the most practical means of preventing a recurrence of such overflows."

By Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina:

Insert at the end of section 8:

"Survey of Great Pee Dee River from the South Carolina line to the Narrows North Carolina.

"Survey of Alligator River, North Carolina.

"Survey of Wysocking Harbor, North Carolina.

"Survey of Eaglehead Harbor, North Carolina."

By Mr. SMALLS:

Insert in line 44, after "California: "

"Survey of Mosquito Creek, between the South Edisto and Ashepoo Rivers, and as to connecting Ashepoo and South Edisto Rivers at or near Fenwick's Island, South Carolina."

By Mr. SNYDER:

Insert after line 37:

"Survey of Gauley River, West Virginia."

By Mr. TILLMAN:

Little Salkehatchie River, South Carolina, from its mouth to Carter's Ford.

By Mr. WELLER:

Add to section 1, at the end of line 985, the following words:

"Sec. 2. That each particular appropriation in section 1 of this act contained or mentioned shall be paid, as nearly as may be, only in the following moneys and currency of the United States of America; and the same and no part thereof shall be paid in any representative of the currency or moneys in said sections mentioned, namely: One-third part of each particular sum of the aforesaid appropriation shall be paid only in standard silver dollars, one-third part in silver certificates, and one-third part in Treasury notes, and each sum of said appropriations shall be at the expense of the Government in said moneys and currency as herein mentioned actually transferred to and disbursed at the locality where the appropriation is to be expended."

By Mr. WILKINS:

After line 33:

"Survey the Muskingum River, Ohio, between Marietta and Dresden, with a view to the transfer of the improvements thereon to the United States."

By Mr. —:

Insert after line 44 of section 8 (page 49):

"Survey Vancouver Harbor, Washington Territory."

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion in relation to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under all usage the Chair recognizes the gentleman in charge of the bill. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. I understood that unanimous consent had been granted, and that the previous question had been ordered on the bill and the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I now move the previous question on the bill and all amendments, including those just sent to the desk, which are to be printed under unanimous consent.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order now. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the previous question be ordered on the bill and the pending amendments.

Mr. GIBSON. On all amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes: "pending amendments" includes all amendments.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURPHY. I wish to make a motion to recommit this bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with instructions to report in favor of the Hennepin Canal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order at this time, and will not be until the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MURPHY. I understand, then, that I can make the motion hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a time when that motion can be made, but not now.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIS to order the previous question on the bill and the pending amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I shall demand a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAGLEY: Petition of the New York State Cider and Cider Vinegar Makers' Association, asking the repeal of the so-called vaporizing law of March, 1879—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LACEY: Of Hiram N. Robinson and 63 others, of Battle Creek, Mich.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 25, 1885.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

Mr. ALLISON called the Senate to order, and the Chief Clerk read the following letter:

To the Senate:

Pursuant to the rules, I hereby name and designate Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, a Senator from the State of Iowa, to perform the duties of the Chair in my absence this day, 25th February.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
President pro tempore.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. ALLISON thereupon took the chair as presiding officer.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DISTRICT TAXES AND EXPENDITURES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLISON in the chair) laid before the Senate the following communication from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, by J. B. Edmonds, president; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 24, 1885.

SIR: The commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to acknowledge the receipt this morning of a resolution passed in the Senate of the United States on the 20th instant, by which they are directed "to immediately inform the Senate of the causes that have prevented them from complying with the resolution of the Senate, adopted on the 24th of June, 1881, relating to the taxes collected from 1875 to 1884, and to receipts and disbursements on account of the water department, or water fund, for each year from 1875 to 1884."

In reply the commissioners have to state that they have made every reasonable effort to comply with the onerous task imposed upon them by the resolution passed June 24, 1884, but it has been impossible with the regular office force to make such subdivision of collections and expenditures as was called for, because the records have never been classified with reference to the arbitrary sectional divisions named in the resolution. The law does not require nor can such a system be followed without keeping a separate set of books and records for each section at some considerable increased annual expenditure. It should also be observed that within the period covered by the resolution there have been two different forms of government for the District; some offices have been abolished, and the duties and responsibilities relating to others modified, and corresponding changes in the system of records made. In a word, the only reason why the commissioners have not as yet replied to the resolution in question is that the force at their disposal has not been able, in addition to their regular duties, to pick from the records the special information called for and which could not be obtained therefrom directly.

A vast amount of work has been done toward compiling the information called for, and the results will be tabulated so as to present at least a partial report to the Senate at its present session.

Very respectfully,

J. B. EDMONDS, President.

HON. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

INDIANS ON UMATILLA RESERVATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 66) providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. All the amendments of the House are verbal except one; and in that I wish to have the Senate concur with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will report the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The CHIEF CLERK. Page 2, line 16, after the word "approved," insert "by the Secretary of the Interior."

Page 3, line 4, after the word "reservation," insert the words "hereafter provided for them."

Page 3, line 24, after the word "money," strike out the words "or in other improvements upon his allotment as shall be determined by the Department."

Page 5, line 17, strike out all after the word "purchase" to and including line 20.

Page 5, line 29, after the word "established," insert:

Provided further, That the water right across a portion of said reservation through the town of Pendleton, granted by the Interior Department July 7, 1870, on the application of George A. La Dow, Lot Livermore, and other citizens of Pendleton, for manufacturing, irrigating, and other purposes, be confirmed and continued to W. S. Byers & Co., their successors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts recommend concurrence in all the formal amendments?

Mr. DAWES. I wish to have the Senate concur in all the amendments except one, to which I shall offer a slight amendment, and then I shall ask the Senate to concur in that. That will make an end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in all the amendments except the additional proviso to be added to section 2 of the bill.

Mr. DAWES. Before that motion is put I should like to have read what is proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter proposed to be stricken out by the House of Representatives will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Page 5, line 17, strike out all after the word "purchase" down to and including the word "thereof," in line 20, as follows:

Provided further, That after three years from the date when such lands shall be declared open for settlement and subject to sale, the lands which shall remain unsold may be purchased, without settlement, at the appraised value thereof.

Mr. DAWES. I move a concurrence in all the amendments but the one in relation to the water right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move a concurrence in the amendment just read?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves a concurrence in all the amendments of the House except the one indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendments are concurred in.

Mr. DAWES. I move a concurrence in the last amendment with the amendment which I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves a concurrence in the remaining amendment of the House of Representatives with an amendment. The question will be first upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts; which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall in no way impair or affect any existing right to a reasonable use of the water of said stream for agricultural purposes, nor shall confirm or grant any right to use the water thereof in any manner, nor to any extent, beyond or different from that to which it is now appropriated.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the Chief Clerk read the amendment of the House of Representatives as it will be when amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be done.

The CHIEF CLERK. Page 5, line 29, after the word "established," insert:

Provided further, That the water right across a portion of said reservation through the town of Pendleton, granted by the Interior Department July 7, 1870, on the application of George A. La Dow, Lot Livermore, and other citizens of Pendleton, for manufacturing, irrigating, and other purposes, be confirmed and continued to W. S. Byers & Co., their successors: Provided, That this act shall in no way impair or affect any existing right to a reasonable use of the water of said stream for agricultural purposes, nor shall confirm or grant any right to use the water thereof in any manner, nor to any extent, beyond or different from that to which it is now appropriated.

Mr. DAWES. I move to add the additional proviso. The object of it is to preserve any reasonable use of that stream for agricultural purposes, and also to prevent an absolute appropriation of it by these parties, confining them to the use they now have.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs that the language he uses, the word "now," would speak from the time of the passage of the bill, and whether it would not be better to make it relate to future time.

Mr. DAWES. It was my intention to have it relate to the future. I suppose the condition of things will not alter between now and the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. There is a possibility that it might.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think it will. If there is danger of that of course I would not object to a modification. I do not apprehend that it is possible to do that.

Mr. MORRILL. To put in "heretofore" instead of "now" would be just as well.

Mr. DAWES. I will adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, and modify my amendment by striking out the words "is now" and inserting "has been heretofore;" so as to read:

In any manner nor to any extent beyond or different from that to which it has been heretofore appropriated.

I will explain this to the Senate, if there is any desire to have an explanation.

Mr. MORRILL and others. It is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to move that the Senate concur in an amendment made by the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2009) granting a pension to Isabella Turner. It is simply for the purpose of preventing collection under the bill of any arrears. The bill as passed by the Senate covered about two years of arrears, and the amendment takes that off.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent at this time to call up the bill indicated by him.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is the morning business concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is not concluded.

Mr. BLAIR. By this course the Senate can concur in an amendment that will save money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I think we had better get through with the morning business and take up that bill immediately after.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask leave at this time to make a privileged report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports are not yet in order.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is a privileged report. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill 3108.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill to which the report refers is not before the Senate. The Senator will withhold the report until the original bill is brought in.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the bill and papers must be in the possession of the Senate. They are not on the Secretary's table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALDRICH presented the petition of Anthony Bauer, of Washington, D. C., praying compensation for damages to his property by reason of public improvements in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Hannah Cottrell, widow of Jesse Cottrell, late private Capt. Hazard Knowles's Company of Rhode Island Militia, in the war of 1812, praying allowance of service pension under the act of March 9, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I present a petition of residents of New Jersey praying the passage of the bill authorizing the construction of bridges across Staten Island Sound. As the bill is on the Calendar, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a memorial of citizens of New York, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PENDLETON presented petitions of six publishing-houses of Ohio, praying for a reduction of postage on second-class mail matter, and that all papers shall be sent at the same rate of postage; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the petition of Thomas Folkes and others, laborers on the session-roll of the Senate, praying that there be paid to each of them out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $41.10, in payment for labor done in November, 1884, for which they have received no pay, accompanied by a proposed amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill, and I desire to call the attention of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to it, to which committee I move its reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER presented resolutions of the Produce Exchange of Toledo, Ohio, in favor of the bill providing for the purchase by the Government of the two canals across Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, State of Michigan; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of George W. Morrison, William Herbert, and other citizens of New Castle, Del., praying an increase of appropriation to improve the harbor of that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the passage of the Mexican pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Lawrence, Kans., praying an appropriation for the construction of a wagon-road from Caldwell, Kans., to Wichita Falls, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report favorably the bill (H. R. 48) providing for the erection of a building to contain the records of the library and museum of the Medical Department, United States Army.

I desire to say that if the committee had deemed it necessary to amend the bill they would have amended it by specifically providing for the location of the site, which as they believe should be at the corner of B street and Seventh street southwest, for the reason that the regents of the Smithsonian Institution have a title to the land round about the Smithsonian to the extent of thirty acres; and unquestionably within a very short time, probably less than half a dozen years, the museum there now will have to be doubled in order to contain even the amount of articles that are ready to go into it at the present time. I have conferred with two members of the commission, and I find that they would be both in favor of the location on the site mentioned by me—that is, on the corner of B and Seventh streets southwest. Therefore we do not make any amendment. As the bill is very short, I will ask to have it read for the purpose of asking its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the bill reported by him from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be now considered.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the morning business through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6407) to regulate the letting of mail contracts, reported it with amendments.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4686) for the relief of Fendall Carpenter, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report an amendment to the sundry civil bill for an appropriation to carry out the treaty between the United States and Mexico for the establishment of a boundary. I move that it be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Without previous notice I offer an amendment to the naval appropriation bill, an important one, providing for the increase of the Navy, which I desire to have printed at once and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey presents an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill. It will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LAPHAM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the commission organized under a joint resolution approved May 13, 1884, in relation to ceremonies to be authorized for the completion of the Washington Monument, to submit a brief report, accompanied by the various proceedings and ceremonies provided for under that joint resolution. I ask that the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio, from the special committee appointed on the subject of the Washington Monument ceremonies, submits a report, with the accompanying papers. The report will be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. In this connection I report from the same commission a concurrent resolution in regard to printing the report; which I ask to have acted on now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That 10,000 extra copies of the report and proceedings of the commission to provide suitable ceremonies for the dedication of the Washington Monument, together with the engraved card attached thereto, be printed in memorial form under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing; 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate; 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; 500 copies for distribution by Lieut. Gen. P. H. Sheridan, United States Army, to the civil and military organizations which participated in the procession; 400 copies for the Washington National Monument Association for distribution among its members, and 100 copies for Col. Thomas L. Casey, engineer, for distribution among the mechanics and workmen employed in the erection of the monument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the resolution be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to a reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing if it is desired. I do not know whether any Senator desires a reference. It may as well be acted upon, as it is so late in the session.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to confer with the Senator about the numbers in one or two cases. If he will agree to a formal reference of the resolution, it will be reported very promptly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to a reference if the Senator desires it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the joint commission on the dedication of the Washington Monument, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the thanks of Congress are hereby tendered to Col. Thomas Lincoln Casey, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and to his assistants, and to the workmen, for the admirable manner in which he and they have performed their respective duties in the completion of the monument to the name and fame of George Washington.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 2949) for the erection of a public building at Port Townsend, Wash.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2084) to amend chapter 464 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, entitled "An act to provide for a public building at the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana;"

A bill (S. 2327) for the relief of James Bedell, sr.; and

A bill (S. 2375) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report; which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3120) "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 11, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "And employed as train-masters, and in opening roads, and building wharves;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$675,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: On amendment numbered 23 the committee are unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,
P. R. PLUMB,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. H. FORNEY,
R. W. TOWNSHEND,
J. WARREN KEIFER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. As will be seen from the reading of the report, the conferees have agreed upon all the differences between the two Houses except on amendment numbered 23. That is the last amendment in the bill, found on the sixteenth page of the printed bill, and relates to a change of existing law respecting the methods of trial by courts-martial. The House conferees insisted upon retaining that provision and the Senate conferees were not willing to accede to their request, it being important legislation in no way affecting appropriations for the Army.

Mr. INGALLS. General legislation?

Mr. ALLISON. General legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the amendment upon which the committees disagree read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the last amendment in the bill, section 2.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amendment No. 23 is to strike out section 2, in the following words:

(23) Sec. 2. That article 94 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and amended so as to read as follows:

"Article 94. Proceedings of trials shall be carried on during such hours as the court-martial shall determine."

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator from Iowa inform us how that changes the existing regulation on that subject?

Mr. ALLISON. I can.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear it.

Mr. ALLISON. Article 94 of the articles of war provides that courts-martial shall be conducted between the hours of 8 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon. This section proposes to leave those hours wholly to the court-martial itself, and the conferees on the part of the Senate are opposed to the provision, believing it is an unwise one.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations advise us further what is the alleged necessity for changing the articles of war in this particular?

Mr. ALLISON. So far as I know, it grows out of what is known as the Swaim court-martial, where I believe the court convened at 11 o'clock and under this article of war they were required to adjourn at 3, which only gave them four hours each day.

Mr. INGALLS. It concerns then the convenience of the court.

Mr. SEWELL. The ninety-fourth article of war leaves the discretion also in the officer ordering the court to change the hours if he pleases. If you do away with that article of war and allow the court-martial to be the judge of the time in which they shall sit, you will have junior officers doing as they please, and take it entirely out of the power of their own superior officer who ordered the court.

Mr. ALLISON. So the conferees on the part of the Senate believed, and therefore insisted upon its amendment striking out the section.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is another reason for the existing law. There has been some gossip in newspapers and in military papers alleging that this came down to us from an old English custom because the dinner hour came about the time named for adjournment, and officers were not fit for serious business after dinner. I am assured by an old veteran that the reason for it was that officers in many cases were put on courts-martial where the service could not spare them from other duties during a portion of the twenty-four hours, and after 3 they could attend to certain other duties; the dress-parade I might mention, and various other things; so that it was in accordance with the convenience of the service that that rule was made. Besides that, this veteran officer assured me himself he had many times spent the night preparing the record of proceedings, from 8 or 9 until the hour of adjournment, so that it might be ready for the next day. Further he said it was due to the defense in many cases that the court-martial should not be allowed to hurry through the matter. I think the law ought to be allowed to stay as it is.

Mr. INGALLS. Has the Committee on Military Affairs considered this question?

Mr. HAWLEY. No, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Connecticut I believe is a member of that committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate some time ago directed the Committee on the Judiciary to consider what changes ought to be made in the law in regard to the matter of courts-martial, including the time of meeting, and that committee made a report, prepared by its chairman who now occupies the chair, which has been printed for the information of the Senate, but I believe it has not been read, in which it was declared as the judgment of the committee that there was no reason for maintaining in time of peace several of the distinctive practices which prevail in the matter of courts-martial, whether they may or may not be necessary in time of war.

A court-martial of course very often determines questions more important to the person tried than the question of life itself, affecting the reputation, the fortune, the career, and sometimes of course the life of the officer who is tried. Those trials are held by officers who are unacquainted with the rules of evidence and the rules of law except in the most imperfect manner. The committee suggested that wherever it is possible there ought to be associated with a court-martial held in time of peace some experienced judicial officer.

In the next place, a court-martial is composed of not less than thirteen persons, unless there be some grave reason which renders it impracticable to have so large a number; and while the President is directed to compose the court-martial of officers equal or superior in rank to the person accused, where that is practicable, he is also authorized, where he does not find that convenient, to call juniors in the service into the court. The result is that a man is tried in that most jealous and ambitious of all professions, the military or the naval profession, by persons who have an interest in gaining a step or in vacating an office held by a senior. That enters unconsciously, perhaps sometimes consciously, into the determination, both in the matter of conviction and the matter of sentence.

Then the defendant is at another great disadvantage. The judge-advocate in theory is impartial between the two sides—that is, the Government and the accused; but in practice everybody knows the effect on the mind of a capable lawyer or advocate of having the duty of prosecution upon his hands. He becomes zealous for conviction. He regards the acquittal of the accused as a defeat for himself, and the conviction of the accused as a victory for himself; and he gets all the spirit of the advocate and the prosecutor, and he has the great advantage over the defense of being present at all the secret deliberations of the court. He knows how to shape his evidence; he knows how to shape his argument after having learned just the state of mind as the case is going on of each of the members of the tribunal who are ultimately to determine the case—an advantage which is denied to the advocate of the accused or to the accused himself.

I make these remarks for the information of the public and of the Senate, not claiming, of course, that the Appropriations Committee err in not entering into an important field of legislation on this appropriation bill, but to express the hope that very early in the next Congress some measure will be adopted to cure these evils, as far as possible.

Mr. MAXEY. Our attention has been very sharply directed recently to proceedings by courts-martial. My judgment is from experience in matters of that kind that there should be a revision of the law regulating proceedings by court-martial, either by the Judiciary Committee or by the Committee on Military Affairs. If done by the Judiciary Committee, it ought to be submitted by them to the Committee on Military Affairs, or, at all events, that committee ought to have an opportunity of examining it carefully before action by the Senate. It is impracticable to do that at this session, and I suggest to the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of this bill, that the reasons assigned by the Senator from Massachusetts and those that I have given heretofore should be conclusive against the proposed legislation at this time. For one, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I am not willing to take up and act upon amendments to the Articles of War, affecting the service, in this appropriation bill. I think we ought to have an opportunity to look at them carefully. I am willing to have the Committee on the Judiciary report a bill, but I want to see that bill, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, considered by that committee carefully, in order that we may act wisely, and say whether or not, in our judgment, the laws regulating the proceedings of courts-martial should be amended. There are many other things besides the time that should be looked into. I trust that there will be no action changing the laws regulating proceedings by courts-martial on a bill of this kind.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have read the amendment now in controversy, the proposed article of war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section that the Senate has proposed to the House to strike out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read section 2 of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only change that is made in article 94 is that under the existing article courts-martial can only be held between the hours of 8 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon. It seems to me that this is too small a matter to delay the passage of this appropriation bill. I believe that the House is right in the section proposed by it. Our attention has been called pretty sharply to the fact that a board of officers composed of some of the leading officers of the Army were detained here more than a month in the trial of a single case by the fact that they were compelled to adjourn at 3 o'clock each day and could not sit longer. As a matter of course they can not meet at 8 o'clock, unless they live at hotels where they can get breakfast at 6 or 7, by candle-light in the winter time. They can not meet, in the ordinary course of business here in Washington, before about 11 o'clock, or 10 o'clock at the earliest. They were compelled to adjourn at 3 o'clock, and the trial was prolonged on that account.

There is no danger in leaving to a court-martial the discretion as to its hour of adjournment. It is left to every justice of the peace, to every tribunal great and small, to determine the time when it shall adjourn; and every court will at times hold longer or shorter sessions according to the exigencies of the case. A court-martial is already by the preceding article of war armed with the power to adjourn from day to day with almost unlimited control over the trial. Now, why should they not be intrusted with fixing the time during which they shall sit?

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me a moment, I think the present hours fixed in our law were adopted from the proceedings of courts-martial in England, as fixed probably more than a century ago. I agree that the Senator is right in wanting a change, but I do not see any use in chopping up the law when we ought to revise the whole of it; and there is no immediate necessity for taking up this particular item when the whole law ought to be revised.

Mr. SHERMAN. But now as the subject is before us, and as this proposition delays the passage of the Army bill, I think the better way is for us to recede from our amendment if we substantially agree to the wisdom of the proposition contained in the bill. It has got beyond the stage at which we can raise a question of order, or even a question of propriety or appropriateness; but here it delays the passage of the Army appropriation bill, and I think the simpler mode therefore is to recede. I will move that the Senate recede from this amendment, whatever its number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not yet in order. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report, after which the question will be on the twenty-third amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do the conference report a disagreement?

Mr. ALLISON. We report an agreement on every question except the last amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I respectfully suggest to the Chair that now would be the time to submit a motion to recede.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under the rules the first question is on agreeing to what the conference committee has recommended, after which the residue of the bill will be before the Senate for action.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right. I will submit the motion then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the report of the conference committee be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is now before the Senate the action of the Senate in disagreeing to the last section of the bill which has been read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment disagreeing to the section referred to. That would pass the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 23.

Mr. SEWELL. The present ninety-fourth article of war reads thus: ART. 94. Proceedings of trials shall be carried on only between the hours of 8 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon, excepting in cases which, in the opinion of the officer appointing the court, require immediate example.

Mr. SHERMAN. The reason given for that is that a man might be caught in the act of committing crime, when a prompt and immediate example would be required.

Mr. SEWELL. It leaves it entirely in the hands of the officer ordering the court whether they shall sit without regard to hours or not. If we were to change that article of war it would place the commanding officer of a post or garrison in a very unpleasant position. With only a few officers under his command all of them might be required to hold a court, and he would be practically without any officers under his orders whom he could control while that court was sitting. They might sit without regard to his orders.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will look at the preceding article of war, article 93, he will see that—

A court-martial shall, for reasonable cause, grant a continuance to either party for such time, and as often, as may appear to be just.

So that they have practically the power to continue their existence if they choose, but at the same time a superior officer can disband a court-martial at any time.

Mr. SEWELL. Yes, he can disband it. Another suggestion occurs to me. At the Military Academy, for instance, it has been customary to hold these courts. They are held very often there, so as not to interfere with the academic studies. It seems to me that an article of war which has passed the ordeal of a great many years and has never been criticised in the Army before to-day, should not be changed in this manner.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Ohio, before asking us to agree to this legislation as it comes from the House of Representatives, will inform us how this article of war can at the same time be repealed and amended. Let me read the language of the bill as it came from the House:

SEC. 2. That article 94 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and amended so as to read as follows.

Mr. MILLER, of California. We had that under discussion when the bill was before the Senate, and it was supposed that was a misprint. There is a mistake evidently.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the Senator from Ohio wants us to agree to a misprint, an admitted and confessed misprint, a solecism, something admitted to be insensible, simply because we should not delay the passage of the bill? Mr. President, this can not be a misprint.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is no misprint. The engrossed House bill reads as the print does.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is proper and right as it is.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Ohio, if he considers this as correct phraseology and a proper method in dealing with legislation, I am sure does not agree with the majority of his associates. In any event, the only objection that he makes to still further insisting upon the amendment made by the Senate is that it will delay action upon this bill.

Mr. President, I believe I am warranted in saying that the Committee on Military Affairs of this body, to which this subject would properly be referred, though they have taken no formal action, are unanimously opposed to this modification of the rules of war. I see no reason why the modification should be made. The discretion, as the Senator from New Jersey has just advised us by reading the article, is absolute in the authorities by which a court-martial may be ordered. And for the purpose of accommodating the habits of certain high officials of the Army who do not find it convenient in consequence of the lateness of the hour at which they breakfast to assemble before 11 o'clock, we are to be requested to assent to this crude, absurd, and ridiculous legislation, against the judgment of the Committee on Military Affairs and against the express rule of the Senate which declares that there shall be no general legislation upon appropriation bills.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will at least in a case as plain as this, where there is no necessity, where the form in which it appears is preposterous, not be called upon to stultify itself simply because we may possibly delay for a few hours the passage of this bill.

I may add here that I am not willing to deal with the subject of courts-martial and the rules of war in this fragmentary way. If the published proceedings of a recent very notable and conspicuous court-martial are correct, there are some things that need amendment about these tribunals far more than the hours at which they shall assemble in the morning and disperse in the afternoon. I refer, sir, to the trial of General Swaim, the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army of the United States, whose case was tried by a court-martial consisting of thirteen general officers, I believe, who examined with great care, minuteness, and patience, for many days, the serious allegations preferred against him; and after protracted investigation reported their findings and sentence to the President of the United States.

If the published statements are correct the subsequent proceedings were a disgrace to civilization. It is a shame that any tribunal independent, intelligent, competent to act, after having for days and weeks in pursuance of the authority of law investigated a charge, should be governed by such regulations that it may be twice subjected to such pressure, to such violent interference as appears to have been brought to bear in this case, not in the interest of justice apparently, but to extort and compel a more violent, severe, and degrading verdict against the accused than the court was willing to inflict.

But, sir, it seems that even twice would not suffice; that when the verdict had been sent back, it was returned a second time to this reluctant tribunal; they modified their sentence; it was again returned for the purpose of still further revision; and when at last in the exercise of their constitutional authority they submitted their third sentence, it was approved, with the addition of the most offensive and humiliating epithets and inferences against the court and the accused, to the effect that the result of their verdict was to make General Swaim a pensioner upon the Army Register while unfit to perform the duties of the office, and enabling him to draw one-half the compensation, to none of which he was entitled.

Sir, if we are to deal with the subject of courts-martial and the articles of war, I desire to begin with some more serious paragraph than that which says they shall meet at 8 o'clock in the morning and disperse at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Let us not pay tithes of anise, mint, and cummin and omit the weightier matters of the law.

Therefore, sir, I hope that the Senate will not depart from the observation of its rule; that it will insist that this, being general and improper legislation, shall not be placed upon this appropriation bill, but that we may be permitted, if we are ever to deal with this anomaly in judicial procedure, to so deal with it that a tribunal properly appointed and constituted, having passed in a legal way upon matters subject to its jurisdiction, shall not be exposed to external compulsion that would not be tolerated in any other system upon the face of this earth.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the criticism of the Senator from Kansas upon the form in which this is sent to us it seems to me is hypercritical; at any rate, I do not choose to regard it as a matter of serious import. The substance of the proposition made by the House is that in place of the ninety-fourth article of war, which is repealed by their section, another article shall be inserted. That is the effect of it. As a matter of course, if this section is agreed to and the Senate recedes from its amendment, the language of the ninety-fourth article of war will be as contained in this proposed section, instead of the language now contained in the Revised Statutes. That is the substance of it; it makes no difference what the form is. It would probably have been better to use the word "substituted" instead of "amended;" that would have been more correct; but it is a very small matter. Here is an acknowledged evil, an acknowledged error in the Revised Statutes, brought prominently before us. The passage of the Army bill is delayed because of resistance to a proposition to correct it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not like to disturb the Senator, but this is not an acknowledged evil as I understand it, but it is a question of severe dispute between people who understand the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Kansas says the Committee on Military Affairs are unanimous on this subject. That surprises me.

Mr. INGALLS. I had no right to say that, but I was informed that was the case in current conversation about me. Of course I had no right to say that, but it was simply one argument that was proper to be advanced in case it were true.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Committee on Military Affairs have had this matter before them and have considered it, I should feel inclined to follow their judgment, not that their judgment would be final on us, but on the whole I should prefer to yield to their judgment. The subject has never been referred to the Military Committee, and I understand the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], who is a member of that committee, to say that he thinks the change should be made; that this old article of war came to us more than a century ago from the British army, and that he thinks in addition to this or more important than this are many other changes which ought to be made in the Rules and Articles of War.

Mr. MAXEY. Of very much more importance.

Mr. SHERMAN. So I understood the Senator. That does not place the Senator from Texas against the idea suggested by the House of Representatives, nor do I understand that the Committee on Military Affairs has acted on it at all.

I do not want to enlarge upon the discussion opened up by the Senator from Kansas, although I sometimes for the last month or two have felt strongly inclined to do so. There is one thing connected with military courts-martial that seems to me very wrong, and it ought to be corrected by the proper authorities. We have an officer called a judge-advocate in each court-martial. His proper name according to the recent experience we have seen is that of a prosecuting attorney of the most vigilant and pushing kind. When he is a prosecuting attorney appearing only for the Government, met on the other side by attorneys on the part of the defendant, I think it is a gross shame and outrage that that prosecuting attorney should appear before the court-martial, participate in their secret deliberations, be present at all their conferences there to aid and represent one side while the other side is silent and unheard. He knows precisely the decision of the court-martial upon every question of evidence; he knows how to meet any difficulty on that point that may be in the mind of the court-martial, while the attorney for the defense has no such opportunity. Sir, the first change in the articles of war I would make is that when the judge-advocate is no longer a judge-advocate but is a prosecuting attorney, he shall not be present when the court-martial excludes the public to confer upon any question of evidence or upon the final decision. Yet it appears in this case according to the public prints that the prosecuting attorney, contesting the point against the defense, went with the court-martial into secret session and there aided them by his advice, his countenance, his opinion, his authority in the decision of the very questions that he had argued as an attorney. If that is the law of courts-martial, God help me from ever falling under the law of courts-martial. That ought to be corrected; but I do not choose to discuss that now.

I think now we have one error in these articles of war presented by the House of Representatives very forcibly, and it ought to be corrected. To do so does not infringe on any authority, because now nobody has a right to change this arbitrary rule as to the time of meeting unless in a case demanding immediate action. The Secretary of War can not do it, nor can the President do it. The law is so. I should be perfectly willing that instead of the court-martial fixing the time of adjournment, the Secretary of War, if he is within reach, should do it; but he is not within reach in many cases, and so he can not do it. Somebody ought to have the power to extend the sessions of a court-martial beyond 3 o'clock, so that the proceedings may be summary.

Mr. SEWELL. In time of war I remember that almost every order that was issued constituting courts-martial authorized them to sit "without regard to hours."

Mr. SHERMAN. There ought to be some such power as that in time of peace. That is all I ask, and the court-martial can safely be invested with that power. That is the proposition made to us in the bill. In aid of public business, in aid of the rapid discharge and disposition of the business of courts-martial, in the interest of economy, the courts-martial should be permitted to extend their sessions beyond 3 o'clock in the afternoon if they choose to do it. If they do not choose, they need not do it.

Mr. DAWES. It does seem to me that this whole discussion is like picking up a bird-seed. I can not conceive of anything about a court-martial so unimportant and so trifling as to engage the Congress of the United States in determining at what time the members of it shall get up in the morning; for that is all. In the presence of the announcement in the public papers this morning of that which will be a reproach to the administration of justice in all time, we are told that an appropriation for the support of the Army shall not pass Congress unless the Senate of the United States will consent to a change of the law to the extent of determining when a court-martial shall adjourn. Let us do it at some other time if we are to do it at all, and not at this time when every one of us should have our minds turned to another more grievous and important question, whether the rights of accused men on trial have been trampled down under the forms of law or not.

Let us not trifle in this manner, and say that here to-day all we have got to complain of is that a court-martial can not be convened in accordance with the convenience of its members early enough to sit four hours in a day. Sir, more consequence attaches to what courts-martial of late have done than to what time they convene or what time it is necessary for them to adjourn. Better would it have been for the name of justice had they not convened at all, or if they had adjourned much earlier in the day than they have done, rather than to spread before this country, as has been done this morning, such proceedings as ought to shock every man's sense of justice.

I am tired of being told that the regular appropriation bills for carrying on this Government are not to pass unless some change in the existing law shall go along with them. Sir, the laws ought to be changed when the two Houses of Congress upon fair deliberation shall determine that they ought to be changed, and when this branch or any other branch of the legislative department of this Government shall say that the appropriation bills necessary for carrying on this Government shall not pass unless there shall also be changes in existing law along with them, then we cease to be free and deliberative bodies.

This is the condition of things to-day, sir. One or the other branch is told that the wheels of Government shall stop until changes in laws not pertaining to the administration of the Government and the expenditures of money shall be made law at the same time.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to ask whence the Senator got that specific and valuable piece of information that has heretofore been imparted to him. I should be glad to know when that statement has been made and where.

Mr. DAWES. Why, Mr. President, we are not deaf or blind, unless when we will not see or hear. Every day, within the last week or ten days, we have been brought—one branch or the other—into a position that admits of no other interpretation than that. There is no other alternative. We are told—the Senator from Kansas knows to what I specifically allude—this morning that we can not have passed appropriation bills absolutely necessary for the carrying on of the Government; the Government must stop or an extra session of Congress be called before July, unless one body or the other will consent to have such changes in existing and established law as the other body shall determine are wise; and we are told to-day that our failure to recede from an amendment to the Army bill is delaying the passage of the Army bill. Now, the Army bill is a necessity, and all we ask is for an appropriation bill to carry on the Army; but we are told somewhere that unless we change existing laws we shall not have that; and we are told that we are delaying the passage of the Army bill; not some other body that refuses to take an Army bill. It will take no longer time for that body to recede from its proposition to change the law than it will for this body to concur in its action.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Massaachusetts if he states publicly on the floor of the Senate that it has been said that unless we consent to the legislation proposed the Army bill shall fail, and there will be an extra session? I should like to know who said that. Did any member of Congress say it?

Mr. DAWES. I have not said any such thing. I said that it had been stated here that the Army bill has been delayed in its passage because we would not recede from our amendment. I have said further that there are other bills on which we are told that there shall be an extra session of Congress unless we shall change existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if I made such a declaration as that. I do not know any one else who is referred to unless it be myself. Did I make the declaration that unless we should recede from our amendment that would prevent the House from acting?

Mr. DAWES. No, Mr. President, the Senator did not say any such thing; but the Senator said just this, that the Army bill was being delayed, and it was being delayed because we insisted on this amendment; and insisting on this amendment is insisting on an Army bill pure and simple. As I said, it would not take any longer for another branch to recede than it would for us to concur, and when they recede we shall have an Army bill. When we concur we are forced to change existing law in order to get an Army bill. That is the difference.

Mr. PLUMB. The statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts, I regret to say, he did not fortify as well as I think he ought to have done, having made it with some degree of sonorousness and a good deal of emphasis and in a manner calculated, I think, to alarm all the people who do not think there ought to be an extra session. I was very glad, however, to see that he turned his whole batteries finally on the Senator from Ohio, because I do not know any one who is better qualified to resist solid shot than that Senator; and finally, when it came down to specifications it resolved itself into the very harmless remark the Senator from Ohio had made about the few minutes' delay there might be (and which there would not be if nobody had spoken) in regard to the passage of the Army appropriation bill.

But I want to say that so far as I know anything about the temper of the House, which I suppose to have been referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, there is nothing which indicates that they want to force an extra session of Congress on this question of legislation. I think all there is or can be in it is this: Undoubtedly some sentiment exists in regard to the position the Senate has taken concerning the action of the House in putting legislation on appropriation bills which was in order under the rules of the House; but beyond that I know of no feeling existing which is liable to produce any kind of delay in the consideration of appropriation bills. That such a feeling as that should exist is not only inevitable, but it is proper. I have no doubt that if any member of this body were a member of the other House he would say that anything which was proper under the rules of that body to be put upon appropriation bills ought to receive some consideration here. The Senate has adopted another rule and has resolved to strike it out absolutely without reference to its merits simply because it is legislation; but that that difference will be composed I have no doubt, because I do not believe that any considerable number of men in either House desire an extra session of Congress. I think that there is no use of creating alarm on so slight a foundation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARRISON. As some reference has been made to the views of the Military Committee on this subject, which is one that in the ordinary course of legislation would go to that committee for consideration, and as I at this time happen to be acting chairman of that committee, I desire to say a word or two.

The subject has never been considered by the Military Committee. No bill involving this proposition has been sent to the Military Committee for consideration. Therefore no one is authorized to express the opinion of that committee upon this subject. We can only arrive at that by the expressions which have fallen from members of that committee on the floor of the Senate.

For one, I am opposed to the proposed legislation in the shape in which it comes to us. I think if a proposition were submitted to the Military Committee to modify the law by extending the duration of the possible sessions of courts-martial, it would be acted upon favorably. If it were proposed, for instance, that they might sit from 9 until 4 or from 9 until 5, I think that such a proposition would likely meet the concurrence of a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs. But this proposition is not that. It is to give a court-martial liberty to sit during such hours as it pleases, to extend its sessions twelve hours a day if it chooses. It seems to me there are reasons why some limit should be fixed by law, giving the court abundant time for a reasonable day's work in the investigation of a judicial question, and there are other reasons why the discretion of the court-martial should not be absolute as to the hours during which it would sit. In the case to which reference has been made in this debate, I recollect an application for delay put I believe upon the ground of indisposition or sickness of the accused, and if I am not mistaken it was met by some suggestion that it was simply for delay.

Now, Mr. President, in the line of what we have seen of courts-martial, for one I am not willing to give a court-martial unlimited discretion as to the hours during which it should sit. If there should be in any case a disposition to persecute an officer, if there should be in any case a disposition to deny to him a fair opportunity of presenting his case, this unlimited discretion as to the hours of sitting would put into the hands of the court-martial a power of executing their purpose, if such a purpose could be imputed to a court-martial, to prevent the accused from having that time which was necessary for the proper presentation of his case.

The Military Committee are constantly called upon to review the proceedings of courts-martial. Officers of the Army who have been dismissed or upon whom penalties have been imposed by the judgment of courts-martial are continually coming to Congress and to the Military Committee for relief against sentences which have been pronounced. In some of these cases the Military Committee have given careful attention to the record as presented, and while they have not believed that it was in their power to reverse the sentence of a court-martial which had received the approval of the reviewing authority, they have been impressed in more than one case with the injustice and cruelty of some of these tribunals, but have found themselves without the power to redress.

For one I would favor a proposition that would make the hours more reasonable, and that would extend the period through which a court-martial might sit; but I am not willing to accept the legislation proposed by the House which gives a court-martial absolute power over the question as to how many hours a day it shall sit.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the debate has wandered pretty wide from the question which was originally raised, not by any means the first time here, as to legislation put by the House of Representatives upon appropriation bills, and it has led to very serious reflections upon the methods and results of what is known as the Swaim court-martial. I have read the decision as finally reached by that court. It seems to me to be a severe decision, but I am not for one prepared to say that the officers who constituted that court and gave laborious service to the investigation intrusted to them have been actuated either by a desire or a willingness to do injustice to any one, or that they have been unduly impressed by superior authority. The court that tried the officer was an eminently distinguished one, presided over by one of the greatest of the generals and commanders in the Army of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator pardon a momentary interruption?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. I trust the Senator did not understand me by even the remotest indirection as casting any imputation upon that court, or any member thereof, of any desire to do injustice. The intention that I had was absolutely the reverse of that.

Mr. HALE. I am glad to get the Senator's disclaimer, so far as it goes. Not only was the court distinguished in its head, but the officers selected for the important trial committed to that court were all evidently selected with the greatest care, in the exercise of the highest judgment, showing that the supreme authority in the War Department meant that this investigation should be clean and thorough and exhaustive and conclusive, so that when the court was made up it was a testimonial not only as to its own fairness in its construction, but as to the desire to do justice on the part of the authority that selected the court. With that remark I leave the court.

Now, so far as concerns there having been any intrusion upon the deliberations and the results of that court-martial, I am not prepared to believe that any superior authority in the War Department desired to do injustice or to have injustice done. There is nothing whatever about the life and the record and the attitude of the Secretary of War that for a moment will justify any Senator in casting any imputation upon him. That Secretary has an inherited integrity. He has a position that he has gained in the four years of his administration which shows that while he is impatient of irresponsibility and incompetency, and while he is sensitive as to the good name of the War Department from the beginning to the close of his service he has been actuated by motives only commensurate with the good of the service, and with the desire to see that the service shall be built up and increased in the regard of the American people, and not diminished. I am not prepared to sit here and allow any aspersion to be left upon him or upon the court. I may believe its sentence to be a severe one, but I have not given my days and my nights to the investigation as have the good men who conducted it. I have not the knowledge that the Secretary of War has upon the subject, and I am prepared to believe that a severe sentence may sometimes be justified by facts which I have not had the time to investigate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Maine makes a remark as if somebody had assailed the Secretary of War.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that anybody here has meant to refer in any terms or in any way to the Secretary of War. I shall be glad if every Senator who has taken part in this debate disclaims that, and that will end it. But certainly when we are told that these proceedings are the sum of human outrage and that there has been an intrusion by superior authority, it must mean some person high in authority and above the court, and I supposed it referred to the Secretary of War.

Mr. SHERMAN. In this debate I have not heard a single person make the slightest reference to the Secretary of War. I certainly did not. I heard no remark made in regard to the Secretary of War. What I said was—and I always say what I think, so that nobody need misunderstand me—

Mr. HALE. I did not understand that the Senator made such a reference. I was not referring to him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had not the Secretary of War in my mind. I said that a judge-advocate, calling himself a judge-advocate, who acts as a prosecuting attorney, and, according to the public prints—and I have no information on this except what I have seen in the public prints—conducts his case with great skill as a prosecuting attorney, should not be with the court in its secret deliberations. I did not even comment on him with severity. I merely said that he was a prosecuting attorney, and in any court would be considered an efficient one, prosecuting his case with great animation and with a determination, as he said himself, to press it to the utmost.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Where there are counsel for the defense the judge-advocate becomes prosecutor, as a matter of course; he can not avoid it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, for that judge-advocate to go into the secret councils of the court-martial, to be allowed to use arguments there when he has nobody to reply to him, and to be present when the court-martial are deliberating upon their verdict, is an outrage upon justice, I do not care by whom it is committed, and that prosecuting attorney, no longer judge-advocate, violates the first elements, the first principles of substantial justice, the fair trial of a man defending his reputation or his life.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to prolong this debate, but the Senate has been led into the discussion of a system. The case is an example; the system is the thing which some time or other we must reform. Now, without putting any imputation upon any officer of the Government who has done his duty in executing the existing law as he finds it, I am sure that every Senator, I am especially sure that the Senator from Maine, representing a community famous for the intelligent and impartial and humane and just administration of the law from its earliest settlement, will agree that this thing is an abuse which nothing but the exigencies of war certainly could justify in the system, not in the particular instance, because every officer must carry out the law as he finds it. The thing complained of is that after a court has decided upon a case, having heard both parties and has fixed its judgment, there should be communicated to that court an opinion of the Attorney-General criticising it, calling for a change in its judgment, and the pressure of that great authority (and the abler, the better, the stronger the Attorney-General the worse the injustice) put upon the court to revise its judgment and come to a more severe conclusion upon the facts or a more severe sentence, when the accused has no opportunity to reply.

Just suppose the case of the poorest man or woman in our community charged with a petty larceny, and after the trial, after the argument, after the verdict, after the sentence the attorney-general of the Commonwealth or of the United States should be permitted to make a communication to that tribunal, urging a different verdict or a severer sentence, to which that person should have no opportunity by him or her or counsel to reply!

Mr. MILLER, of California. When was that done?

Mr. HOAR. That is the regular course of things in regard to courts-martial.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not think it is.

Mr. HOAR. I have here before me the return to the court-martial of its finding and its sentence, accompanied by a discussion of that finding and sentence by the Attorney-General of the United States full of severity, full almost of sarcasm, and indorsed by the President of the United States. Those officers did exactly what according to the law of the land, which they were sworn to carry out, it was their duty to do. I am not criticising the President; I am not criticising the Attorney-General; but does not my honorable friend from Maine agree with me that there can be no necessity for putting, in time of peace at least, the naval or military officers of this country under the operation of such pressure in a matter which involves fortune and may involve life?

Mr. HALE. Now, will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I did not in any way go into the general question of reforming the conduct and fashion of courts-martial. Quite likely legislation may be needed in the direction suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. All that I said was drawn from me by what seemed to have been reflections upon the superior officers of the courts-martial, and I only wish now to emphasize the point I made that whatever was done there by any superior officer, the Secretary of War, or the Attorney-General, is in accordance with practice and with custom and with law, as courts-martial are now conducted. I do not believe that anybody has infringed in that direction.

Mr. HOAR. I so understood the Senator from Maine, but it seemed to me proper to call the attention of the Senate, as the subject has been discussed, and has been discussed to some degree on its general merits, to this most extraordinary anomaly in the administration of the law in a country famous for the safeguards which it puts about the life or the property or the honor of its citizens.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will state to the Senator that if a court-martial makes a mistake in the law, makes a sentence which is impossible of execution, it is perfectly proper for the reviewing officer to call its attention to it, and have it reformed.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from California maintain that it is proper for any person to be at liberty to attack the correctness of the sentence, and demand a more severe sentence or a different finding on the facts, without giving opportunity to the accused to reply?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not see that anybody has ever done it; I do not know of a single case.

Mr. HOAR. In this very case, what opportunity did the accused have?

Mr. MILLER, of California. In this case the sentence was to reduce the officer to the rank of major, which was an impossible thing; it could not be done, as there was no vacancy in that grade.

Mr. HOAR. That was the second sentence, and not the first.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not know what the first was.

Mr. HOAR. I do; and that is what I am referring to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The reviewing officer may request the court to reform its findings.

Mr. HOAR. It is not an uncommon practice in courts-martial.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have never heard of a case, and I served eight months on courts-martial myself.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator made the sentence so severe that it was not necessary, or perhaps it was so eminently just that no review was required.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I speak of my own experience.

Mr. HOAR. I have no doubt it was an eminently just sentence which was pronounced by any court of which the Senator was a member.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Maine appear to call for some additional observation. In my remarks I intended to convey no imputation whatever upon the court-martial that tried General Swain. They were actuated by a sentiment of justice; they endeavored to be just, and they rendered judgment that they believed to be just. Their verdict or decision was sent to the President of the United States, sentencing the accused to be suspended from rank, duty, and pay for the period of three years. President Arthur—and here let me interpolate by saying that I assume that the President had no personal connection whatever with this transaction; he was the executive officer to whom the proceedings were transmitted, and through whom they were officially announced—I exonerate President Arthur from any participation in this transaction, because those who are familiar with executive business know that such matters are not examined by him personally; they are referred to subordinate heads of Departments, by whom they are investigated, and their results submitted to him for promulgation—

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator please inform the Senate who it was—what officer acted upon this?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know anything about it.

President Arthur, after examining and considering the findings and sentence, returned the record of proceedings to the court for reconsideration as to the findings upon the first charge only and as to the sentence, neither of which is believed to be commensurate with the offenses as found by the court.

Sir, was it ever before known upon the face of the earth in any civilized tribunal that a new trial was ordered by an appellate judge because the verdict was not of sufficient severity? Was it ever before permitted to be said by any appellate authority or tribunal that the man ought to have been hanged instead of being sent to the penitentiary, and upon that ground to have the decision reversed? And this, too, without giving the accused a hearing; in secret; without the opportunity of a presentation of the case of the accused?

Sir, I repeat that never under any system with which I am familiar—Russian tyranny, Turkish despotism—was there ever any code that permitted so infamous an outrage upon the rights of a citizen as the system of so-called justice that allowed such an outrage upon the rights and the liberties of General Swain.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me interrupt him a moment?

Mr. INGALLS. With great pleasure.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask this question: Has the Senator any doubt that precisely what was done in this case, calling the attention of the court-martial anew to the facts in the case and in effect suggesting a severer sentence, is found repeatedly in the annals not only of our War Department, but of the war department of every other civilized government? I do not raise the question about the courts. Undoubtedly whatever may be the impatience, the sense of injustice that a civil magistrate may feel when an undoubted criminal goes clear, he can not reverse the judgment of the jury that has tried the man; he can not send it back to that tribunal. He may give instructions from time to time, he may give the law that will tend to make the verdict more severe in his judgment; he can not send it back; but in all military law, as I understand—and I think I shall be borne out by Senators who have a better knowledge of military law than I have—this is a thing constantly occurring. I ask the Senator if he knows about that himself.

Mr. INGALLS. I do know about it, and I say that constitutes the infamy and shame of the system. If there were but a single instance it would be enough to condemn it in the soul of every man who loved justice. But when the Senator from Maine arises and endeavors to support it and apologize for it and justify it because there have been repeated instances of such invasions of the rights of the citizen that would never be tolerated in any country that has risen above barbarism, it is merely an additional argument, a thousand-fold stronger than that which I have presented, why this system should not be permitted to stand longer without modification.

But, sir, the half has not been told. The most dangerous, the most suggestive, the most admonishing fact is the facility with which the court yielded to the suggestion of its superiors. Sir, there is some subtle magic, some mysterious influence, some incantation, it appears, by which, upon the mere suggestion of a desire for injustice from superior authority, the court receded, yielded to the suggestion, took up the testimony and the findings again for review, but were apparently unwilling materially to increase the severity of the judgment they had rendered. Their second finding after reconsideration was an adherence upon the first finding, with a modification of their sentence, as follows:

To be suspended from rank and duty for one year, with forfeiture of all pay for the same period, and at the end of that period to be reduced to the grade of judge-advocate with the rank of major in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department.

To that the President responded through the law officers of the Executive that it was an illegal sentence, impossible of execution, and once more the case went back for further review, upon the potent suggestion from the superior authority. It would be invidious to suggest that in the minds of any of the members of this court there could have been any impulse arising from the fact that if a vacancy could be created somebody would profit by it. I make no such intimation; but that is one of the incidents, the perilous incidents of the situation. Two attempts to secure the end that was desired having failed, the findings and sentence went back for a third time.

Mr. HOAR. Not for hearing?

Mr. INGALLS. Hearing by the Executive. The Senator from Massachusetts properly suggests "not for hearing" in the technical sense of that term, because there was no hearing. It was as secret as the Star Chamber or the Court of the Inquisition. The accused was confined by illness in his house. No person was admitted to the arguments made before the tribunal after its findings had been made, except it may be the officer mentioned by the Senator from Ohio, the judge-advocate, the prosecuting officer of the Government.

It is apparent—

The President says—

from the terms of the amended sentence that it was the intention of the court to award a punishment of greater severity—

As the Executive had suggested. The evidence had not been changed; no more witnesses had been examined; there had been no addition of argument before the tribunal; but in consequence of an admonition from some unknown power, the President says it is apparent that the tribunal "intended to award a punishment of greater severity"— and more nearly commensurate with the offenses of which the accused has been found guilty than was the penalty adjudged in the original proceedings; and if the terms of the amended sentence were such as could be legally carried out, the purpose of the court in that regard would have been accomplished. * * * The amended sentence, in effect, creates an office and fills it, thus at once embodying the exercise of legislative and executive functions and the approving power of the Senate.

And again it went back and was reviewed. Again the court endeavored to array themselves as a barrier against the encroachment of this hidden prerogative, and thereupon they revoked their former sentence and adjudged as follows:

To be suspended from rank and duty for twelve years, and to forfeit one-half his monthly pay every month for the same period.

But this, sir, was not sufficient. What was wanted was a vacancy. It was not enough that accused should be stigmatized, humiliated, branded so that like Cain from this time henceforth he wanders an outcast among his fellows, but in accepting this sentence what is the language employed? Most victors are magnanimous. It is not considered heroic to exult over a fallen adversary. The sentence was returned with the following comments:

The opinion of the President as to the proper consequence of the findings of fact made by the court in the within record has already been given, and no further comment will be made upon the final sentence than to say that it is difficult to understand how the court could be willing to have the officer tried retained as a pensioner upon the Army register, while it expressed its sense of his unfitness to perform the duties of his important office by the imposition of two different sentences, under either of which he would be deprived permanently of his functions. The idea that an office like that of Judge-Advocate-General should remain vacant in effect for twelve years merely to save a part of its emoluments to its incumbent under such circumstances would seem to come from an inversion of the proper relations of public offices and those holding them, and is an idea not suited to our institutions. While holding these views it is deemed to be for the public interest that the proceedings be not without result, and therefore the proceedings, &c., are approved, and the sentence will be duly executed.

Now, sir, I leave these facts to the candid judgment of an intelligent people. I make no accusation against any officer or Department of this Government; but no man can read the history of these proceedings without having a settled and established conviction that there was a deliberate purpose somewhere not to do justice but to accomplish vengeance against General Swaim.

Sir, I know something about the history of this officer since he was first appointed. He was a volunteer soldier. He had not the honor of having the oil of coronation poured on him at West Point; he was selected by President Garfield to the office that he now holds and which, so far as I know, he has filled with a reasonable degree of ability.

Several SENATORS. President Hayes.

Mr. INGALLS. He was not confirmed under Hayes's appointment, and was subsequently appointed by Garfield.

Mr. VOORHEES. He was appointed at the request of President Garfield before he was inaugurated. He was appointed by Hayes on President Garfield's request.

Mr. INGALLS. Was he not confirmed under the administration of Garfield?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. So I thought; but in either event the accuracy of my statement would not be essentially modified. But since the time of his appointment, for reasons that are known to many of his comrades, he has been pursued with a studied, persistent malignity that has no parallel so far as I am aware in the annals of revenge; and this is the crowning act of the injustice that our system of courts-martial—to the disgrace of civilization I say it—renders possible.

If the Senator from Maine desires any more specific information as to my belief of the source from which the spirit has emanated, I can give it to him. I shall not be deterred by any encomiums in general terms upon any official of this Government from expressing my convictions as to a transaction that I again characterize as being so infamous, so outrageous, and so unwarranted as that to which our attention has been called this morning.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, the discussion which has taken place in regard to this simple amendment to an appropriation bill, as I am very happy to believe, voices in some respects the sentiment of a large portion of the American people. I do not wish to prolong this discussion. I have no desire to make any charges or accusations against the court-martial or any of its officers or any of the officers of the Government. But, sir, I do say that for months and for years it has been whispered in the secret circles of Army officers that such a result as this by hook or by crook, by law or by influence, would be reached, and that that volunteer officer, the bosom friend of General Garfield, appointed by President Hayes on his special request to be Judge-Advocate-General because he was his most intimate friend during the war and his aid, would be crushed. It has been whispered in circles for years that the time was hastening on when Garfield's memory would be dimmed, when his opponents dared attack him and his friends and his judgment, when those he had favored, when those he had loved, when those whose interests he had tried to promote would be stricken down at the behest of opponents for one cause or another.

Sir, the result has come, and I venture to say that the good people of the United States throughout its length and breadth, the plain, honest, sensible, judicious men of this country will read the evidence, will read the course of this trial, will read the history of this examination and its references back and forth from one tribunal and from one authority to another, and will doubt whether it can be possible that in the United States there can be a court so constituted, there can be such a mode of trial, there can be such power as would hold that for the offense charged and on the proof that was presented in its support an honorable man should be subjected to such merciless indignity and infamy.

Sir, there is a secret history within a secret history there. There is a feeling against a volunteer officer of the Army who may have gained credit during the war and who may be promoted to high office, which he may retain in the midst of those who have gone through West Point, and that has long been known and felt by every man who has sat in Congress and who has endeavored to promote the interests or secure the promotion of a volunteer officer in the Army.

What kind of a trial and mode of trial has there been here? I am not speaking of individuals or of the court or of its officers; but what kind of justice is there when a subordinate officer who may be looking to the very place held by the man whom he is trying, himself the next in rank, is the inveterate and determinate prosecuting officer, in the councils of the court, in the secrets of the court, dealing with the proofs and making remarks disparaging of his superior officer—he a junior judge-advocate waiting to depose his superior and employing all the arts of eloquence and all the energies of his nature in bringing to trial and conviction his superior officer that he may be removed and a vacancy made which must be filled out of the seven or eight judge-advocates of the rank of major, of whom this prosecuting attorney is one. I have not either the honor or the pleasure of knowing this officer, but I do know the spirit that pervaded the Judge-Advocate's Corps among those majors who formed the judge-advocates in that corps under General Swaim; and I do know that one of these men was appointed judge-advocate.

What is a judge-advocate, and what is his duty, and what ought he to do? He stands there as the advocate of the accused. The Government is prosecuting; high military officers are making charges; a court-martial is appointed; and what is a judge-advocate appointed for?

Under the law and its spirit he is there to defend the accused, to advise the court of the rights of the accused, and see that no injustice is done, not to be the malignant prosecutor, not to appear against a person charged with wrong.

I will not say, however, that some were not unprepared for such a trial as this. Many of the people of the United States knew for years past, and I myself have told my friend, General Swaim, that it was necessary to be cautious, because all around him were those who had the power to seize the first opportunity to defame and destroy him. I am not alone in that. It has been the common remark of hundreds and thousands of friends of General Garfield that this victim would follow next. I am ashamed to say such things about my Government and about its officers; but this is not a thing that has been prepared and done in a corner, and I venture to say that when the information and the knowledge of this transaction is spread among the people there will be a quiet, solemn judgment of disapproval of courts-martial and of the power with which they can destroy men at will.

This case has gone beyond the control of the court and the President, and to the judgment of the people. I do not say who is to blame about it; but I do say, as the Senator from Kansas has said, that in the minds of many people of the United States it has been believed for the last two or three years that a pretext to accuse was all that was necessary to bring down upon the devoted head of Garfield's last remaining friend in office the indignation of those who were offended because he, a volunteer officer of the Army, was appointed over the regular West Point officers who might have desired promotion. I know that has been the belief among very many good men in this country, for I have heard it uttered time and time again.

But, sir, whatever virtue there may be in courts-martial—and I have nothing to say against the officers composing this court-martial, for I believe they are good men, and of course I have nothing to say against the Executive or his advisers—I say that a system which will permit such a course, a system which can be used like a star chamber, a system that can be used like the Vehm Gericht in Germany, a subterranean court to control the destinies of men, their punishment, their existence, their lives, needs revision; and I think this will be the means of calling attention to the question whether the rights of the citizen and the rights of the people do not demand some revision of a system of trial and of verdict and of punishment so dangerous to the rights and liberties of men that it may affect even the innocent as if they were guilty.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to ask the Senator from Michigan a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not hear all he said in regard to the judge-advocate of the Swaim court-martial, but I ask him whether he said or intimated that that officer transcended the duties of the office to which he was assigned in the conduct of this court-martial?

Mr. CONGER. I said I was not acquainted with this officer, had never seen him, had nothing to say about the discharge of his duty; but I did say that a judge-advocate in the spirit and object of our laws had to stand there as well the advocate of the accused as the adviser of the court on the law, and I did say that in this case he has been a part of the court, he has been the prosecutor, he has publicly, if the papers are to be believed, made sundry remarks against the man whom he was there not to advocate exactly but to see that he had justice done him. He has taken that part which a prosecuting attorney or which an advocate would take against an opponent, using all the influences which could be used against a person accused of crime or against a defendant in a suit, so much so that it has been the remark and the comment of the newspapers that he appeared even a stronger prosecutor than the ordinary prosecutor in a court of law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Where the accused appears by special counsel in his own defense, I do not believe that it is the special duty of the judge-advocate to defend the accused from the charges made against him; and I wish to say further that I do know the judge-advocate in this case, and I believe that a gross injustice has been done to a very deserving officer by any one who intimates or says that he has acted in this case other than according to the dictates of his duty and according to the duty to which he was assigned by his superior officers.

Mr. CONGER. There has been no law by which because a man has counsel the judge-advocate's duty is changed. How absurd would it be that the judge-advocate, the advocate and the defender of the prosecuted man, because he got other aid and other assistance and other advisers, should presume that the law was changed, and instead of being the defender as far as innocence and propriety was concerned he should turn to be his relentless persecutor! No, sir, there is no law which provides that because a man appears by counsel the duty of the judge-advocate is changed; and, without saying anything against this man, I assert that if there be a system by which the judge-advocate may look to a vacancy in the office above him, as he and the seven other judge-advocates of the rank of major may all do, it is a system which gives a strong inducement to a judge-advocate to forget his duty as the advocate of the accused and be his persecutor.

I do not say this judge-advocate did that, but all these other seven or eight judge-advocates are graduates of West Point, and there is no one of them but what, from the very nature of the case, would feel indignant and did feel indignant that a volunteer officer was promoted to the head of the Bureau of Military Justice in the War Department.

I am willing that Senators here should express their views; and there goes out from this Capitol to every fair-minded and honest-minded man in this land the conviction that Judge-Advocate-General Swaim has been the victim of a conspiracy to destroy him. I believe it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator from Connecticut give way a moment while I ask the Senator from Michigan a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I merely desired to ask a question of the Senator from Michigan, or any other Senator who can answer the question, and that is, whether or not the sentence of the court-martial as finally pronounced against General Swaim creates a vacancy in the office of Judge-Advocate-General?

Mr. CONGER. I do not see how it can. It can not create a vacancy. They leave the officer there. They do not recommend dismissal, but only suspension; they leave the officer with such a judgment, with such a finding, for twelve years on half-pay, to represent the majesty and bravery and dignity of the Army by an officer at the head of one of its most important departments—a finding utterly incommensurate with the testimony and the proven fault of General Swaim. Instead of having a judgment of one year's suspension without any loss of pay, by the interference of somebody—I do not care whether it was the President, or the Secretary of War, or the Attorney-General, or the judge-advocate reviewing the case, or all of them together—by some process the honest verdict of high officers of the Army which declared that the offense as far as proved was worthy only of a suspension of one year without loss of pay, by some inextricable hocus-pocus, some infernal inside machinery which never will be accounted for, that same body of high, talented officers came to the conclusion that on the same proof and on the same testimony, without a word being said for the accused and without any new hearing, they could suspend this officer twelve years.

They would take away from a man who had served his country in the Army and in the war long and faithfully half his salary in mere mockery of decency, in mere mockery of justice, in mere mockery of the rights of a volunteer officer who had rendered his country valuable service, and who was the chosen confidant of the man who, although these courts-martial care not for his memory, half the people of the United States reverence, and love, and admire, even after he has gone down to his long home beneath the assassin's stroke. These things will all come up among the people of the United States. I shall try to give them prominence myself, until a system which can produce such results as this shall receive the attention of Congress, and a system shall be produced which will render it impossible that such flagitious wrongs, such enormous wrongs, can be carried on under an approved system of administration of justice in the Army, or in the Navy, or in the country at large.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, it is very disagreeable to be led so far from the true issue in this case, but some things have been said which certainly require a little comment. I will try to do it as briefly as possible, for I know the impatience of the Senate.

I will begin by referring to the remarks our friend from Michigan has made concerning prejudice against volunteers in the Army. I was a volunteer myself, and I have many intimate and dear friends who were volunteers who are now in the regular service, and I protest against giving the impression to the public that there is a disposition in the Army to do injustice to volunteers, and that such disposition prevails among the regulars. It is the uniform testimony of my friends—and I am happy to say I have none who were volunteers who were not honorable men—it is the uniform testimony of those gentlemen to me in private conversation that they are treated with courtesy and on terms of equality.

Distinguished volunteer officers were summoned to this court. A volunteer officer who holds the highest position in the regular Army, General Terry, was one of the men summoned to this court. He was challenged off, to be sure, as the defense had a right to challenge him off, but there is no man of higher integrity or of more eminent ability both as a lawyer and soldier. There was no disposition shown in the making up of the court to hurt any man because of his having been a volunteer. The entire Corps of Judge-Advocates is composed of volunteers, and so of the predecessors of General Swaim. Judge-Advocate-General Dunn was a member of Congress from Indiana. In short, that corps is considered as a civilian corps, and men are selected because they are supposed to have some knowledge of law in general as well as military law. I leave that, therefore, with my protest that the Army in general can not be charged with a desire to do injustice to nearly half of its own number. They can not live except on terms of equality with volunteer officers.

Resulting from the resentments arising from this trial, the passions that have been evolved by it, there has been injustice done, in my opinion, to the court and to the general system of trial in the Army. Of course, courts-martial are more or less arbitrary, imperative, hasty in their proceedings. They bring down to us probably some anomalies and some practices that seem to us very harsh; but in this case there has been nothing unusual. I presume people who have never before thought on this subject think it is a great and gross outrage that the judge-advocate should have sat with the court all the while in its secret councils as well as appear before it as a prosecutor. That has always been the case. The court takes him for what he is worth. He does not vote upon the trial. He sits in the councils to answer questions and to assist. He is used as a sort of adviser to the court. You may say that ought to be changed. That is not the question to-day. That is the uniform law and has always been in courts-martial, and Judge-Advocate Gardner is no more to blame than any one of his honorable predecessors who have been engaged in courts-martial.

The judge-advocate defends the accused, our friend says. Yes, in ordinary hasty trials, especially in war times, when counsel can not be obtained, the judge-advocate is charged with the duty of looking out for the person accused as well as for the Army. It is hardly to be called a court; in one sense it may be called a board of inquiry. It requires some person with legal experience as much as can be obtained to advise in both directions. But in a case like the one here, eminent counsel were engaged for the defense of General Swain, and the judge-advocate was wholly released from that part of it. His appearance on behalf of the defense would have been resented as an impertinence. He was turned over to his duty on the part of the Government to prosecute what was alleged to be an abuse against military discipline. So there is no fault to be found with him in that respect.

Then again, the judgment of the court, or the opinion of the court, was sent back for further consideration and revision. That is done in thousands of cases. The court is only a sort of jury to find certain facts and to recommend a certain sentence and send it to the revising authority, the appointing authority. That is constantly done. It is in large case analogous to that which happens in our own civil courts every day. The judge rebukes a jury, he instructs it, he sends it back again and again. When a jury renders a judgment that the court is not satisfied with, but which it is compelled to accept, the court nevertheless deems itself entirely free to rebuke the jury in the severest possible terms.

Mr. HOAR. Is it not the law in nearly every State in the Union that the judge is prohibited from expressing an opinion in a matter of fact before the jury?

Mr. HAWLEY. The laws are entirely familiar. Yes, the judge can not decide the facts for the jury.

Mr. HOAR. That is not the question; the Senator does not answer.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator is perfectly familiar with the ordinary practice that the judge is not to give his opinion of the facts. He does not instruct the jury as to what the finding shall be in matters of fact, but when he applies his law to the facts there he is the master; that is his duty. It is the old theory that it is the duty of the jury to receive the law from the judge, but the jury take both law and fact in their hands whenever they choose to do so. I simply refer to this fact; it is a matter of constant practice that the judge rebukes a jury and sends it out, and that he upsets its judgment sometimes in civil matters. Of course there are gross cases. Not long since we had a famous trial in this city to recover damages for alleged false imprisonment under an order of the House of Representatives, in which the judgment of the jury was set aside by the court. I have not heard any extraordinary gush of sympathy for the jury because it was not allowed any fire or anything to eat. It has happened within a comparatively short time in this city that a jury was not allowed any of the luxuries of life, to say the least.

In this case the usual course, which is very common, has been repeated of sending back the judgment for revision. That is the manner and the legal manner in which courts-martial are constituted. I would not pretend to pass a judgment upon the court in this case. In my younger days as a lawyer I had some practice as a justice of the peace. I learned then, if I had not known it before, that there are two sides to every case. I have not read the vast pile of evidence given in this case. I do not know how near guilty or how near innocent General Swain is, but I do know that as a rule I would as lief trust my life and honor to such officers of the Army as to any court I ever heard of.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask my honorable friend from Connecticut a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. It is the practical question which has been before the Judiciary Committee and it will be before Congress pretty soon. No matter what has been the law from time immemorial or what has been done elsewhere, does the honorable Senator approve of having a communication made to a court-martial, after it had given its judgment, urging upon it a severer sentence or a different finding? Does the Senator approve that as a principle to be maintained in time of peace, without having the accused appear, or does he think we may wisely amend the law? That is the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. We are not called upon now to revise the laws which govern courts-martial, or to consider what the present laws are and to point out their defects. Those laws are not before the Senate. There is a simple question here as to whether we shall adhere to our deliberate judgment in striking out a certain provision. I will read section 923 of the Regulations of the Army:

When a court-martial appears to have erred in any respect, the reviewing authority may reconvene the court for a reconsideration of its action, with suggestions for its guidance. The court may thereupon, should it concur in the views submitted, proceed to remedy the errors pointed out, and may modify or completely change its findings.

I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would listen a moment to this—

The object of reconvening the court in such a case is to afford it an opportunity to reconsider the record, for the purpose of correcting or modifying any conclusion thereon, and, also, to make any amendments of the record necessary to perfect it. Anything like a reopening of the case, by calling new witnesses, or recalling those already examined, is wholly foreign to the proceeding.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, as he calls my attention to it, that is a provision undoubtedly necessary in time of war when a court-martial has the reputation and the official life of an officer in its hands as much as his physical life. Of course the judgment of a court-martial, which might continue in service an incompetent, or corrupt, or even a traitorous officer, must be submitted to the supreme executive for revision; but this is a question of proceeding in time of peace.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not the question before us now whether we shall modify the system; it is whether it is right to pour unlimited reproach upon a body of men composed of both volunteers and regulars who have been trying to do their best. The President is a volunteer soldier so far as he is commander of the Army; the Secretary of War is a volunteer. Some members of that court are distinguished soldiers of the highest rank, and they have acted according to the uniform laws of courts-martial. Whether they have decided right or not, I do not know, but I protest, with the imperfect statement before us, against this attempt to cast reproach upon that court.

Then I come down to the question that is before us, and that is whether we shall strike out the clause which repeals the old law as to hours of session, and says those hours of session shall be at the discretion of the court-martial. That would be a revolution in one sense in Army life, saying that subordinates shall have a right to issue orders which overrule the will of their superior officers. The question is simply whether we shall strike that section out of the bill and leave the old law ordering courts to sit between 8 and 3 o'clock.

I think that of itself is right; but if you wish to change it, do not, I beg you, change it to such a provision as this, because the reason of the existing law is found largely in the fact that in many cases in a post or garrison where a general court-martial is called it will take nearly all the officers at the post or the garrison to compose the court, and they must be relieved during a part of the day from the duties of the court, in order that the ordinary work of the post or garrison may go on. They are relieved of court duty after 3 o'clock, and then every one of them, excepting the judge-advocate, who is the only man relieved here, will have time in which to attend to the ordinary duties of the garrison. Suppose there are fifteen officers in the garrison and thirteen of them are on a court-martial. The young men may think it a very jolly thing to take a recess half the time, and leave the commanding officer to perform the duties of adjutant, quartermaster, and commissary at the post.

The provision, allow me to say, with due respect to those who made it, would put the law in a ridiculous shape. I hope we shall refuse to agree to it, and that we shall adhere to our position and ask for a further conference on this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 23.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment No. 23.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to submit a motion to take up House bill 7659.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business; but the Chair understands that the Senator from Iowa rises on the amendment to the Army appropriation bill to complete what he omitted.

Mr. ALLISON. I will do that in a moment, but I also ask the attention of the Chair in order that I may now move to proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. However, I will ask now that a committee of conference be appointed on the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment No. 23 of the Senate to the Army appropriation bill insisted upon by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

- A bill (H. R. 7952) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Hartley;
- A bill (H. R. 8033) granting an increase of pension to George W. Clark;
- A bill (H. R. 8038) granting a pension to Harriet A. B. Cortis;
- A bill (H. R. 8133) granting a pension to Thomas McGill; and
- Joint resolution (H. Res. 335) to print 2,000 additional copies of Lieut. P. H. Ray's report of the International Polar Expedition to Point Barrow, Alaska.

LIMITATION OF CLAIMS.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (H. R. 5849) limiting the time for the presentation and payment of claims against the United States. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside for a few moments informally, and I desire to make a statement. Yesterday while we were in the midst of the consideration of pension bills the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] asked that we lay them aside for ten minutes for the purpose of enabling him to get up, and the Senate to consider and pass, two bills. It was upon my own suggestion that that was acceded to. I hope that the Senate will now allow us to call up and have considered a very few of the contested pension bills, which I think will not be debated very much, but on which there are adverse reports. The motion that I present now is to take up the bill (H. R. 7659) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily L. Alvord. I hope that there will be no objection to the consideration of the pension bills for a little while.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Illinois—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not open to debate.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to say a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to be heard upon this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is now ready to be considered by the Senate, and it is a long bill. It will require of course a great deal of time for the clerks, after it is finally concluded, to engross the amendments. It seems to me it is wise for us, whenever appropriation bills are ready, to consider them. There will be ample opportunity, I will say to the Senator from Illinois, to bring forward these pension bills after we shall have considered the legislative appropriation bill. I hope to have the bill finished and sent to the House to-day, and I trust he will not interpose a motion now to interfere with the regular appropriation bills.

Mr. CULLOM. I am as anxious as the Senator is that the appropriation bill—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Illinois being heard on this question? ["No objection!"]

Mr. CULLOM. I only want to say one word. There are a few of these pension bills which are Senate bills and some of them are House bills. If any of the House bills should be amended by the Senate the chances are very great that they would not get through the other branch of Congress. They have been on the Calendar a good while, and I do not think it will take more than a few minutes' time to dispose of them. We have been waiting, and we could have gotten them through yesterday if the Senate had not determined to allow the consideration of the two bills to which I have referred.

I hope the Senator from Iowa, who is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will give way for the consideration of these bills for a short time. I make the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7659.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7659) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily L. Alvord. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to have the following order made:

Ordered, That Mrs. Adeline E. Chadbourne have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in her case, subject to the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present reception and consideration of this order?

Mr. ALLISON. Is it in order for me now to move to take up the legislative appropriation bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is whether there is unanimous consent to consider the order offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no objection to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The order will be entered if there be no objection.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent for the following orders:

Ordered, That Rose A. Braendle have leave to withdraw the papers accompanying Senate bill No. 1126, under the rules of the Senate.

Ordered, That Daniel Morris have leave to withdraw the papers accompanying Senate bill No. 244, under the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the orders will be received and entered. The Chair hears none.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. There seems to be a pretty universal disposition to consider the extensive appropriation bill which the Senator from Iowa has in charge, and I will withdraw my motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill that I referred to in the hope that when the appropriation bill is out of the way the Senate will allow us to take up the pension bills and pass them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I am much obliged to the Senator from Illinois. Now I ask unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside in order that I may report from the Committee on Appropriations House bill 8179, with sundry amendments, and ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations at this time.

Mr. ALLISON. And to proceed to the consideration of the report. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those are two separate questions. The Chair hears no objection to the reception of the report.

Mr. ALLISON. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside and that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

ISABELLA TURNER.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Iowa to do me the kindness, for it would be a real personal kindness, as the matter has troubled me for a long time, to allow me to ask unanimous consent that the Senate at this time may take up the bill (S. 2009) granting a pension to Isabella Turner, which is a private pension bill passed by the Senate, and by the House with an amendment. I wish to move a concurrence in the amendment of the House, which simply saves $192 to the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. If it takes no time and causes no debate, I shall not object, but this is the last time I can yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the bill on the Calendar?

Mr. BLAIR. It comes from the House with an amendment. I wish to move to concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands from the clerks at the desk that the bill is in possession of the Committee on Pensions. Does the Senator from New Hampshire now report it?

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from its further consideration. I did not know that it had been referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. JACKSON. May I inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire what bill it is?

Mr. BLAIR. It is a bill which passed the Senate giving arrears for two years. The House amended the bill by cutting off the arrears. I desire to have the Senate concur in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the consideration of the bill (S. 2009) granting a pension to Isabella Turner. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the bill with its amendment be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the amendment made by the House of Representatives to the Senate bill.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the word "pension-rolls," in line 6 of the bill, down to and including "1882," in line 8 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate concur in the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

SENATE ELECTION CASES.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me to introduce a resolution at this time. As he is anxious to go on with the appropriation bill, I shall not ask its passage, although I believe it will pass unanimously. I wish to submit it now, so that it will be before the Senate as of right to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to offer a resolution at this time. It will be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to cause to be prepared a compilation and digest of the contested-election cases which have arisen in the Senate since its organization, and to report the same to the Senate at the December session of Congress, and be authorized for that purpose to employ a clerk at the usual compensation until December 1, 1885, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know whether there will be any objection to passing the resolution at the present time.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator. Is there objection to the reception of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The rules require that the resolution shall be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. If there be no other suggestion the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, as it provides for a payment out of the contingent fund.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose by unanimous consent the resolution can be passed in its present form to-morrow. I do not ask that now; but I will call the attention of the Senate to it at some convenient time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution then goes over under objection.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I ask that the resolution introduced by me, which went over under objection, may be referred under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the resolution offered by him, and which went over under objection, be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will receive the report at this time. The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOLPH. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 470) for the relief of the State of New York, and to pay off certain certificates issued by that State to the soldiers of the war of 1812, to report a substitute therefor, which I ask may be read twice and placed on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 2853) to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of New York for expenses on account of volunteers and militia in said State called into the service of the United States during the war of 1812 was read the first time by its title.

Mr. LAPHAM. I should like to have the bill read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate bill reported adversely?

Mr. DOLPH. It is reported adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senate desire to have made of Senate bill 470?

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1810) for the erection of a public building at Sacramento, Cal.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 78) for the erection of a public building at La Crosse, Wis., with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LOSSES OF PROPERTY BY TROOPS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield until I make a little motion. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5713) to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States. I hope there will be no objection to the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill passed the Senate yesterday with amendments. The Senator from Missouri asks consent to move at this time that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection. How shall the conferees be appointed? ["By the Chair."] By the Chair, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: I discover, contrary to what I had a right, as I supposed to anticipate, that the bill which I thought a few moments ago was still in the possession of the Senate, has been returned to the House. I wish to accompany my motion for a conference with a request that the House return the bill to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). If there be no objection the order asking the House to return the bill to the Senate will be entered. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The bill having been received at a later stage from the House of Representatives, Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. SEWELL were appointed by the President pro tempore the conferees on the part of the Senate.

UMATILLA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES. I move that a committee of conference be requested with the House on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House on the bill (S. 66) providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the amendment of the Senate to the House amendment which was agreed to this morning. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DAWES, Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin, and Mr. SLATER were appointed.

CHRISTIAN BROTHERS' COLLEGE.

Mr. KENNA. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa, I desire to state that a report was made from the Committee on Claims yesterday of the bill (H. R. 6881) for the relief of the trustees of the Christian Brothers' College, of Saint Louis, Mo. The report was made as adverse, but as a matter of fact the minority report accompanying it contains the signatures of a majority of the committee. I make this statement in order that the matter may be properly treated on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it is a majority report.

Mr. KENNA. What appears as a minority report is in fact the majority report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia submit a motion?

Mr. KENNA. I presume that none is necessary; that a mere statement of the fact will cause the correction to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made accordingly.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the first or formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as the reading progresses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading at large be dispensed with, and that the reading proceed by paragraphs, and that the amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations be considered as the reading proceeds. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Senate," in line 14, to increase the total appropriation "for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate," from $282,195.10 to $348,082.70.

The next amendment was, in line 95, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One clerk in the post-office, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 97, after the word "each," to insert:

One laborer in the post-office, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 101, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "two assistants in document-room" from $1,440 each to $1,600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 103, to increase the appropriation for clerk to the superintendent of the document-room from $1,440 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 105, to increase the appropriation for compensation of one page in the document-room from $720 to $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 108, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "one assistant in the folding-room" from $1,200 to $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 113, before the word "messengers," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty-eight;" so as to read: Twenty-eight messengers, at $1,440 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "each," at the end of line 121, to insert:

Two firemen, at $1,080 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 128, before the word "skilled," to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Ten skilled laborers, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 129, before the word "laborers," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fourteen;" so as to read:

Fourteen laborers, at $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 130, to insert:

Two janitors, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 136, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for the "office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate" from $133,241.80 to $151,621.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 139, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty-five;" in line 140, after the word "session," to strike out "twenty-six thousand seven hundred and twelve" and insert "thirty-one thousand eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For twenty-five clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session, $31,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 142, to insert:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $6 per day during the session, $39,432.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Senate," in line 147, after the word "stationery," to insert "and newspapers;" so as to read:

For stationery and newspapers, including $6,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate, $15,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out after the word "dollars," in line 149, to line 159, inclusive, in the following words:

And section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884, be, and the same is hereby amended by inserting after the words "Smithsonian Institution," where they occur in said section, the words "the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and the Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, and Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 159, to insert:

For postage-stamps for the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $100; for the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, $100; in all, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 173, to increase the appropriation "for fuel and oil and cotton-waste for the heating apparatus" from $7,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 176, to increase the appropriation "for miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 182, to increase the total amount of the appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Senate" from $32,770 to $38,770.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "House of Representatives," in line 209, to decrease the total amount of appropriation—

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives from $384,630.22 to $386,175.10.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to modify that amendment, so as to make the sum $384,461.43 in lieu of the words already proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Secretary will make the modification suggested by the Senator from Iowa, if there be no objection. The amendment is agreed to, as modified.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 219, after the word "for," to strike out "Chaplin" and insert "Chaplain;" so as to read:

For Chaplain of the House, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 272.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 266 I move to strike out "March" and insert "April;" so as to read: "April 4," 1885.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In lines 272 and 273 I move to insert, in lieu of the words in italics, the words "seven thousand four hundred and seventy-seven dollars and ninety-eight cents;" and as modified I ask that the amendment may be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. The words "four thousand nine hundred and twelve seventy-seven" have already been stricken out, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not.

Mr. ALLISON. They should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair intended that the Secretary should report the recommendation to strike out those words and insert others. He will now report the whole amendment striking out the text.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 272 and 273 it is proposed to strike out "four thousand nine hundred and twelve dollars and seventy-seven" and insert "seven thousand four hundred and forty-seven dollars and ninety-eight;" so as to read:

For the following additional employes in the Clerk's office, who are to be paid from and including April 4, 1885, to June 30, 1886: Three clerks to index private claims, at $1,600 each per annum; one messenger-boy in chief clerk's room, at $300 per annum; and two laborers in the Clerk's document-room, at $900 per annum each; in all, $7,447.98.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "clerks and messengers to committees of the House of Representatives," in line 280, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "clerk to the Committee on Appropriations," from $2,500 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the following clause, from line 383 to 386, inclusive:

For two stenographers to committees, to be appointed by the Speaker on or after December 1, 1885, at $4,000 per annum each, $4,674.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish the chairman of the committee would advise the Senate why this item is to be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a new method of compensating stenographers of committees of the House. We had considerable discussion upon that question last year, and the two Houses agreed upon a general plan for committee reporting; and we thought perhaps the House might have inserted this provision through inadvertence. We wish to give them an opportunity of revising their decision upon the question if they desire to do so. We have provided for this reporting in another place, I will say to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. With that explanation I am content to have the amendment adopted; but I should not be willing to interfere in any way whatever with the service that the House of Representatives consider indispensable to the transaction of their business. I hope that if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations shall be on the conference committee he will feel himself instructed to recede from this amendment if the House asks for it. I should insist so far as the Senate is concerned that the House should not interfere with the Senate, and I would be willing to concede to them what we ask for ourselves.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Kansas and the Senate that that is the mode of procedure hitherto in regard to officers in the House and Senate, and that the committee had no intention to depart from the uniform rule. We think of course that the House is the better judge of the number and character of its employes and the amount of money necessary to conduct its business in a proper and energetic way, and we consider also that the Senate is the best judge of the method of conducting its business. The committee has no intention of interfering with the just rights of the House in this regard.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 404 and 405, as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, $30,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, including compensation, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee on Accounts, but not exceeding $1.50 per printed page, to stenographers to committees, to be appointed by the Speaker or the application of committees, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 416, to insert the following clause:

For postage-stamps for the officers of the House of Representatives, namely: For the Sergeant-at-Arms, $50; the Clerk, $50; and the Postmaster, $50; in all, $150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 441, after the word "library," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" in line 443, after the word "dollars," to strike out "including" and insert a semicolon, and after the semicolon to insert "for;" in line 447, after the words "Chief-Justice," to insert "$2,000;" and in line 451, after the word "all," to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of books for the library, $5,000; for purchase of law books for the library, $2,000; for the purchase, by the Librarian of Congress, of new books of reference for the Supreme Court, to be a part of the library of Congress, and purchased under the direction of the Chief-Justice, $2,000; for expenses of exchanging public documents for the publications of foreign governments, $1,000; for purchase of files of periodicals and newspapers, $2,500; in all, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 451, to insert:

For the purchase of works of art, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "one," at the end of line 497, to insert "clerk of class 4, who shall be a;" in line 499, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "one clerk of class 2;" in line 500, before the words "one messenger," to strike out "and;" in line 501, after the word "dollars," to insert "and one laborer," and in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "nineteen thousand one hundred and forty" and insert "twenty-one thousand four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

CIVIL-SERVICE COMMISSION.

For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; one clerk of class 4, who shall be a stenographer, $1,800; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one messenger, $840; and one laborer; in all, $21,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "expenses," in line 504, to insert "including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission;" so as to make the clause read:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 509, after the word "ice," to strike out "car-tickets;" so as to make the clause read:

For furniture and repairs of furniture, file-cases and file-boxes, books, stationery, printing, advertising, telegraphing, telephone service, type-writing, ice, and other absolutely necessary expenses, including heating, lighting, and altering rooms, and care of same, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Department of State," in line 519, after the word "four," to insert:

Stenographer to the Secretary, at $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 526, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Secretary of State, First-Assistant Secretary of State, and two Assistant Secretaries of State, and the clerks and employes in the Secretary's office, from $112,350 to $114,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations under the head of "Treasury Department," in the appropriations for "Secretary's office," in line 557, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of "Government actuary, under the control of the Treasury Department," from $2,250 to $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 558, after the word "copyist," to insert:

Eight skilled laborers, at $640 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 559, before the word "skilled," to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Eight skilled laborers, at $560 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 560, before the word "skilled," to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Eight skilled laborers, at $500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 562, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for the compensation of the "Secretary of the Treasury, two assistant secretaries, and the clerks and employes in the Secretary's office," from $35,080 to $43,660.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 578.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Iowa to line 578, which reads "fifty-eighth watchmen." The Chair supposes it was intended for "fifty-eight."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the last letter "h." That is a misprint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that modification will be made. The Chair hears none.

The Chair also calls the attention of the Senator from Iowa to lines 579 and 580. The language is: "Twenty-nine laborers;" and that is followed by, "ten laborers, at $500 each."

Mr. ALLISON. That is as it should be. The totals are all right. They are provided for in the totals.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the office of "Supervising Architect," in line 705, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

And the services of skilled draughtsmen, civil engineers, computers, accountants, modelers, assistants to the photographer, copyists, and such other services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order, may be employed in the office of the Supervising Architect to carry into effect the various appropriations for public buildings, to be paid for from such appropriations: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, shall not exceed $140,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons so employed and the amount paid to each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of the "Commissioner of Customs," to strike out the clause from line 746 to line 751, inclusive, in the following words:

And each of the cities of Tacoma and Seattle, in Washington Territory, shall be, and it is hereby, made a port of delivery; and the deputy collector who shall be stationed at each of them shall receive such compensation, not exceeding $1,200 per annum, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, there is objection. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

On the 3d of June, 1884, the Senate passed a bill, Senate bill 1741, making the cities of Tacoma and Seattle, in the Puget Sound customs district, Washington Territory, ports of delivery, and providing for a deputy collector of customs to be stationed at each of them, who should receive such compensation, not exceeding the sum of $1,800 per annum, as the Secretary of the Treasury should prescribe.

In March last I reported from the Committee on Commerce unanimously in favor of that bill, and it passed the Senate without a dissenting voice on the 3d of June. It is necessary legislation. It is important to the commerce of Puget Sound and the Northwest. It has been placed on this bill in accordance with the rules of the House, and the only objection which can be made to it is that it has been so placed in the bill by the House, and is a matter of general legislation.

I do hope that the amendment striking out the clause will not prevail. As this is a matter which has been thoroughly considered by the proper committee of the Senate, and passed heretofore without objection in the Senate, I trust that the clause may be permitted to remain.

I could go on and discuss the importance of this provision, but I do not suppose it is necessary from the fact, as I said before, that it has been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, and that it passed the Senate without objection, even in my absence.

Mr. ALLISON. This provision is simply legislation relating to a subject that has no connection whatever with appropriations. If we are to maintain our rules at all, it seems to me this provision ought to go out.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not understand that it is a question of maintaining our rules. Of course if the provision had been proposed to be put on the bill by a Senate committee and objection made to it, the rules of the Senate would come in question; but as I said, this provision has been placed in the bill strictly in accordance with the rules of the House, and it is legislation which has been amply and fully considered and passed upon by the Senate and is very important. This is the only way in which it can become a law; and I hope the Senate will reject the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to suggest that this provision would seem to be for the increase of the revenue of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. But this is not a tax bill, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota; it is the very reverse.

Mr. McMILLAN. But it is a bill regulating the appropriation for the collection of customs, establishing appropriation for the payment of the officers engaged in the collection of the customs, in the collection of the revenue. This is the machinery, and the clause in question would seem to only add efficiency to that service.

Mr. DOLPH. It decreases the expenditure because there are inspectors stationed now at both those points, I understand, whose salary is larger than that provided by this bill. The provision in the House bill decreases the salary of the deputy collectors from $1,800, as the Senate bill had it, to $1,200.

Mr. SLATER. On this question I have voted steadily against the ruling of the Chair, believing that not only was the ruling under the rule incorrect, but that by the ruling and the construction given the Senate abdicates its power under the Constitution. I do not believe we have the right in point of fact to do that. Of course, as a matter of experience it is done every day. In this case it is conceded that this is proper legislation. It has been reported from a proper committee in this body, received the sanction of this body, and the only point that is made against it is simply that under the rules of the House they have put it in the bill, and we now say that it shall go out under our rules. In other words, we say to the House that we will dictate to them the manner in which they shall present legislation to us. I do not think that is quite the way to transact the public business.

I hope the Senate will not strike out this provision; it is important legislation, very important to that section of the United States, and it ought to be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRYE. That this is general legislation under the Senate rule of course there is no question; and that the next clause of the bill is legislation there is equally no question; and under the rules of the Senate, if they were offered as amendments here, they would both be subject to the point of order. But the presiding officer of the Senate, within the last two or three days, has insisted upon leaving to the Senate all question of order touching legislation on appropriation bills, and the Senate has deliberately determined in at least four or five instances to keep on the Post-Office appropriation bill general legislation which seemed healthy in itself. So I do not see how any Senator now can urge upon the Senate a Senate rule to keep out from one of these bills general legislation which, in the opinion of a majority of the Senate, is healthy.

I am in favor of the Senate rule, and I believe in it; but I am in favor of this legislation, and believe in that. As a member of the Committee on Commerce, I regard it as very important to the Government and to this section of the country, and I feel entirely relieved under the action of the presiding officer of the Senate and of the Senate itself to vote my conviction on these items.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 10, noes 16—no quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Allison,	Coke,	Hawley,	Mitchell,
Butler,	Garland,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Call,	Groome,	Jackson,	Platt,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	Jones of Nevada,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Maxey,	Van Wyck.

NAYS—21.

Blair,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Vest,
Brown,	Jonas,	Pugh,	Walker,
Colquitt,	McMillan,	Sabin,	Wilson.
Conger,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Slater,
Frye,	Palmer,	Vance,

ABSENT—35.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,
Bayard,	Fair,	Keena,	Pike,
Beck,	Farley,	Lamar,	Ransom,
Bowen,	George,	Lapham,	Riddleberger,
Camden,	Gorman,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Mohrson,	Sherman,
Chace,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Callahan,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Williams.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morgan,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. I desire to move an amendment to the clause which has just been left by the vote of the Senate in the bill; but I suppose the proper time for that would be after the committee's amendments have been gone through with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And, as the Chair thinks, after the bill shall have been reported to the Senate, the Senate having by vote refused to strike out the clause.

Mr. HALE. It will then be open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. This being legislation, I do not wish the Chair to overrule former decisions which require us not to amend legislative provisions. I understand that no amendment to this provision is in order.

Mr. HALE. I can offer the amendment when the time comes, and let it take its fate. Presumably on what the Senate has just done now, it will be very glad to embrace other features of general legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. I presume it is the intention of the Senate now to admit all legislation on these bills, so that there may be no question about legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the Chair intended to rule by his answer to the Senator from Maine was that the committee having reported an amendment striking out this clause of the bill, and no amendment having been proposed to it pending that question, and the Senate having refused to strike it out while in Committee of the Whole, the Chair does not think it is amendable. As to whether the amendment would or would not be in order would, of course, depend necessarily on the nature of the amendment when offered.

Mr. HALE. I understood the Chair only to indicate the time and place when the amendment could be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That it would be in order to offer an amendment. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the clause from line 752 to line 760, in the following words:

That the customs-collection district of Duluth, Minn., shall comprise all the waters and shores of Lake Superior, and the rivers connected therewith, in the State of Minnesota, and the harbor and city of Superior, with the bays of Saint Louis and Superior, and the rivers connected therewith, within the State of Wisconsin, in which district Duluth shall be the port of entry; and there shall be a collector, who shall reside at Duluth, and a deputy collector, who shall reside at Superior.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Senate will not concur in this amendment. This legislation embraced in the bill, if it is legislation, conduces very largely to the public interest. The district of Duluth embraces the territory upon the north shore of Lake Superior, and Duluth is the point at which the custom-house is located. Superior is immediately across the bay from Duluth; it is in Wisconsin. At present it is embraced in the collection district of Marquette, which is three hundred miles down the lake, and vessels coming to the port of Superior and to Duluth must have clearances from each of these ports before they can go from one to the other. Vessels coming to Duluth and crossing to Superior go into a different collection district, and it is necessary for them to go through all the forms and take out all the papers that vessels are required to do in passing from one collection district to another. This is to avoid those serious inconveniences to commerce. It does not increase the number of officers; it does not change the relative position of the officers. There is now a collector at Duluth and a deputy collector at Superior; so that there is no increase of expense.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I would inquire of the Senator from Minnesota, who is the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and who has been chairman of that committee for a number of years past, whether the question of changing the collection districts, as is now proposed in this bill, has ever been brought to the attention of that committee and what recommendation came from the committee, if any?

Mr. McMILLAN. Not until this session. This was inserted in the House and fully considered there.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am aware it was inserted in the House; but has it been considered by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate?

Mr. McMILLAN. There has been no report from the committee. Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I did not ask that question. Has it been considered by that committee?

Mr. McMILLAN. It has not been considered because it has not been there for action.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I did not ask what the reason was. I simply asked the question whether the committee had considered it.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is a matter that addresses itself so clearly to the judgment of Senators that it would not be necessary to rely in such a case upon the report of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. With all respect to the Senator from Minnesota, I think he is equivocating.

Mr. McMILLAN. Certainly not. I certainly do not intend to equivocate. I have answered the Senator clearly and distinctly, and I was not aware that the Senator from Wisconsin was opposed to this provision. I understood that it met with the Senator's approval.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It does not meet with my approval. It does not meet with the approval of the people of Wisconsin or the people of Superior.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator has changed his views within a short time, then. This certainly is greatly to the public convenience, and it does not increase the expense of the Government in any degree, as I understand. The collection officers are at Duluth and the same officers at Superior, and vessels going to one port often go to the other. Vessels that go to Duluth on going to Superior, carrying goods to Superior, are compelled to go through all these forms and this expense. It seems to me it would interfere very much with the commerce of Superior and operate altogether to the advantage of the other port. I hope the Senate will retain the legislation. It is not a matter that I have any other than a public interest in in any way.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. As the Senator from Minnesota has stated, Duluth is in Minnesota and Superior is in Wisconsin. Superior now is in the Marquette collection district. It has been in that district, I think, from the time the present district was organized, and it is perfectly willing and desirous to remain there. The people of Superior and of Wisconsin are not of the opinion that it will conduce to the public interest to have this proposed change in the collection district made, and they are opposed to it. They are perfectly willing, as I have stated, to remain where they now are, and they are satisfied that the public interest will be conducted by remaining where they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations?

The question being put, a division was called; and the ayes were 22. Mr. McMILLAN. I will not insist on a further count.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the office of "Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department," before the word "chiefs," in line 822, to strike out "nine" and insert "ten," so as to read:

Ten chiefs of division, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 823, before the word "clerks," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "twenty," so as to read:

Twenty clerks of class 4, and additional to one clerk as disbursing clerk, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 826, before the word "clerks," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "sixty-two," so as to read:

Sixty-two clerks, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 829, before the the word "assorters," to strike out "four" and insert "ten," so as to read:

Ten assorters of money-orders, at $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 832, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for the office of "Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department" from $494,670 to $510,590.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Light-House Board," in line 908, after the word "Board," to strike out "who shall be paid from the appropriations for the Light-House Establishment," so as to read:

For the following additional employees in the office of the Light-House Board, namely: One clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; ten clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; one laborer, $600; one assistant civil engineer, $2,400; one draughtsman, $1,800; one draughtsman, $1,500; one draughtsman, $1,440; and one draughtsman, $1,200; in all, $21,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Bureau of Statistics," in line 931, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "seven," so as to make the clause read:

For collecting statistics relating to internal commerce: For the payment of experts, and for other necessary expenditures connected with the collection of facts relative to the internal and foreign commerce of the United States, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Bureau of Engraving and Printing," in line 936, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one clerk of class 3" and insert "two clerks of class 3, one of whom shall be disbursing clerk;" and in line 941, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-four thousand seven," and insert "twenty-six thousand three;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Engraving and Printing: For Chief of Bureau, $4,500; one assistant, $2,250; accountant, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,600; two clerks of class 3, one of whom shall be disbursing clerk; four clerks of class 1; one clerk, $1,000; additional to one clerk as disbursing clerk, $200; three copyists, at $600 each; two assistant messengers, and four laborers; in all, $26,330.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Office of Life-Saving Service," in line 952, before the words "of class 4," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" and in line 956, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-six thousand seven hundred" and insert "thirty-eight thousand four hundred and eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Life-Saving Service: For General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $4,000; assistant general superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $2,500; one topographer and hydrographer, $1,800; one civil engineer, $1,800; one draughtsman, $1,500; one principal clerk and accountant, $1,800; two clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; five clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; five clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger, and one laborer; in all, $38,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 966 to line 972, inclusive, in the following words:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to submit to Congress, at the opening of the next regular session, such modifications of the laws relating to commerce and navigation as will simplify and improve the same, and remove from American vessels, whether engaged in fishing or in domestic or foreign commerce, all unnecessary restrictions and burdens.

Mr. FRYE. That is a piece of general legislation; but it is an exceedingly small one. It costs no money, it does no harm, and it may be productive of great good.

In the shipping bill which formerly passed Congress there was a reduction of certain fees charged upon vessels, and there are certain other fees that need adjustment. In order to enable Congress to enact a law which shall readjust those fees, the readjustment of which will make it absolutely necessary to readjust the fees of certain collectors of the smaller districts, the information which is called for here is actually needed early in the session, and this simply directs the Secretary of the Treasury to make that report. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will let so small a general legislation as that go through without any objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Committee on Appropriations generally considered this to be a mere directory provision, and not legislation. I do not think it is, in the usual sense of the term, legislation. It is a directory provision. I think the Senator from Maine could tomorrow morning, if he chose, ask the Secretary of the Treasury by a resolution to furnish this information to the Senate and make such recommendations as he might choose to make on the subject. It is a directory provision; but the committee thought it was an entirely unnecessary provision that if the Secretary of the Treasury attended to his duties in his annual report, and especially the chief of the Bureau of Navigation, who is a new officer, if he attended to his duties at all, would call the attention of Congress to any revision or changes necessary in the public laws in reference to these subjects. I do not think the committee are very strenuous about it one way or the other, except that we consider the clause an entirely unnecessary provision to be inserted in the statutes.

Mr. FRYE. In reply to the Senator from Iowa, I simply desire to say that the gentleman in the other House who represents the district which I formerly had the honor of representing, Mr. DINGLEY, and who is as familiar with all these questions touching commerce and navigation as certainly any member of Congress of either branch, deemed this of very great importance, and as I understand the Special Committee on Commerce authorized it, and requested it to be put into this bill. It is only directory, I admit, but it can not do any possible harm, and I hope the Senate will let it stay in.

Mr. PLUMB. The Secretary of the Treasury is simply the adjutant of the President. If this has any force at all, it will be because it is of that representative character which the Secretary of the Treasury occupies. The President of the United States is already commanded to address to Congress such recommendations as he may see fit concerning the public welfare. Therefore we shall get nothing from this which we are not entitled to have, and which we shall not have in the ordinary course of events if the President believes that he is in possession of knowledge which Congress ought to be in possession of, or if he believes that he has some panacea which Congress is not otherwise advised of, or if advised of is likely to give the go-by to. But we are singling out the Secretary of the Treasury, who, as I said, is the mere clerk, so to speak, of the President, possessing no authority of himself to make reports to Congress, and dignifying his opinion in advance in a manner which I do not think is becoming to the dignity and responsibility of Congress.

This opens up a wide field in which we are supposed to be hungering for the knowledge that some man we do not know anything about knows more about than all the members of Congress and all other people, and that in a measure we shall be bound by it. Of course we are not literally to be bound by it, but at all events we give it an importance which will make it in a certain event a stumbling-block in whatever we may propose to do.

If the new President has anything to say to Congress let him propound it in the manner provided by the Constitution, and if his Secretary of the Treasury knows anything that he thinks Congress ought to know let him communicate that to his superior, his chief, and let his chief in turn give it to Congress, and I have no doubt he will if he thinks it of sufficient importance have it so done. But to call upon somebody to write an essay, somebody having no authority and an unknown person to deliver his opinion, we might as well go to the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York or to any well-known person in the country who may desire to spread out at large his views on this subject for our edification. I think it is at least a useless provision and one that may do a great deal of harm.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LA CROSSE, WIS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 78) for the erection of a public building at La Crosse, Wis., which were, in line 9 of the bill, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause plans and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plans and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building exceeding the portion of $100,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for. No plan shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum which remains after paying for the site of said building.

And at the end of the bill to add the following additional section:

Sec. 2. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have examined those amendments and move that the Senate concur with the House in the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate concur in the House amendments which have just been read.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 2949) for the erection of a public building at Port Townsend, Wash., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

OBSTRUCTION OF ARKANSAS RIVER.

Mr. GARLAND. I offer a resolution and ask its present consideration merely for the purpose of getting some information from the Secretary of War in reference to the river and harbor bill:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate at his earliest convenience information of what is advisable and necessary to prevent the obstruction of navigation through the draw of the railroad bridge at Rob Roy, on the Arkansas River, Arkansas, to remove the sand-bars and to prevent the future formation of sand-bars in said river between the Rob Roy railroad bridge and Bell's Ferry and to insure stability to the Government works in said reach of river and to the channel section of that river.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

RED CROSS OF GENEVA.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent at this time to make a report from the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska, from the Committee on Printing, asks unanimous consent to make a report at this time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be received.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the petition of Clara Barton, praying that Congress authorize the printing of additional copies of the History of the Red Cross of Geneva, with a concurrent resolution, and I am directed to ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object if it takes no time and does not lead to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of the History of the Red Cross, from the stereotype plates now at the Government Printing Office, for the use of the American Association of the Red Cross.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ASTRONOMICAL AND METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask consent to report another resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the report will be received.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably a concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the volumes of the Astronomical and Meteorological Observations of the Naval Observatory. It is in the usual form, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual volumes of Astronomical and Meteorological Observations of the Naval Observatory for the years 1881 and 1882 be printed, and that 2,000 additional copies of each volume be printed, of which 400 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 800 copies for the use of the House, and 800 copies for the use of the Navy Department, or for sale at the cost of paper and printing, in accordance with section 432 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 2659) for the relief of Ellen May Brown; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2660) granting a pension to George Warmaley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3108) to protect fish in the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, and to provide a spawning-ground for shad and herring in the said Potomac River.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BAYARD, Mr. GARLAND, and Mr. MAHONEY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. MILLER of New York, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. PLUMB submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL, Mr. MAXEY, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. VOORHEES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask leave to offer an amendment to the sundry civil, and also an amendment to the general deficiency appropriation bill. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope these amendments will be printed immediately, so that the committee can have them when they come to consider the bills.

Mr. SHERMAN (from the Committee on the Library). I report an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil bill. I ask that it be referred without printing, as I am told there is no time.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say that there will be time to print these amendments. I trust that all amendments submitted to-day will be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was told by a member of the committee that it had better go without printing, but I have no objection to the amendment being printed. I ask that it be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust all amendments submitted to-day will be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the office of "Commissioner of Internal Revenue," in line 1059, before the word "heads," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" and before the word "hundred," in line 1071, to strike out "eighty thousand six" and insert "eighty-two thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

Commissioner of Internal Revenue: For Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,000; one deputy commissioner, $3,200; two heads of division, at $2,500 each; five heads of division, $2,250 each; one superintendent of stamp-vault, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,800; twenty-four clerks of class 4; twenty-five clerks of class 3; thirty-four clerks of class 2; twenty-four clerks of class 1; fourteen clerks, at $1,000 each; sixty-six clerks, at $900 each, and hereafter no vacancies shall be filled in the grade of clerks at $900 each in this bureau until the number is reduced to fifty; two messengers; fourteen assistant messengers; and thirteen laborers; in all, $282,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 1072 to line 1075, inclusive, as follows:

For two stamp agents, at $1,600 each; and two counters, at $900 each; in all, $5,000, the same to be reimbursed by the stamp manufacturers.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For one stamp agent, at $1,600; and one counter, at $900; in all $2,500, the same to be reimbursed by the stamp manufacturers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1083, to increase the appropriation "for stationery for the Treasury Department and its several bureaus" from $30,000 to $32,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1092, after the word "publications," to insert "and not more than $250 in the purchase of books, serials, and apparatus for the use of the Government actuary;" and in line 1094, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of material for binding canceled marine papers, requisitions, and other important records; newspapers, books, hand-stamps, and repairs of the same (and of the amount appropriated not more than $500 may be used in the purchase of current publications, and not more than $250 in the purchase of books, serials, and apparatus for the use of the Government actuary), $2,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1095, to insert:

For purchase of law books and suitable books of reference for the library of the Treasury Department, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1102, after the word "telegrams," to insert the word "and;" and in line 1103, after the word "service," to strike out "and car tickets;" so as to make the clause read:

For freight, expressage, telegrams, and telephone service, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "collecting internal revenue, in line 1169, after the word "that," to strike out "hereafter;" in line 1170, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" and in line 1171, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That the compensation of the chief of the internal-revenue agents shall not exceed $10 per day, and of the other agents not exceeding $8 per day each; and for per diem in lieu of subsistence, while traveling on duty, said agents shall receive, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $3 per day.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "office of assistant treasurer at New Orleans," in line 1233, to reduce the appropriation for compensation of "porter" from $900 to $500; and in line 1235 to reduce the total amount of the appropriation from $14,090 to $13,690.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "assay-office at Boise City, Idaho Territory," in line 1438, to reduce the appropriation "for incidental and contingent expenses, including labor," from $5,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Territory of Dakota," in line 1485, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following clause:

And the Legislature of Dakota may divide said Territory into as many council and representative districts as they desire, which districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable, taking into consideration population (except Indians not taxed);

Provided, That the number of council districts shall not exceed twenty-four and the number of representative districts shall not exceed forty-eight.

Mr. McMILLAN. I rise to ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations from line 1485 to line 1491, inclusive. This clause provides that the Territorial Legislature of Dakota may apportion the council and representative districts of the Territory, and changes the limitation of the number, permitting the Territorial Legislature to increase the council districts to a number not exceeding twenty-four, and the representative districts to a number not exceeding forty-eight.

At present the number of districts is limited to just one-half that number—twelve council districts and twenty-four representative districts. By an act of Congress, passed on the 12th of June, 1884, it is provided:

That the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota shall hereafter consist of twenty-four members of the council and forty-eight members of the house of representatives, and that there shall be elected at the next general election in said Territory two members of the council and four members of the house of representatives in each of the twelve legislative districts provided for in chapter 7 of the Territorial statutes of 1884 of said Territory.

It will be perceived that the law already fixes the number of members of the council of the Territory at twenty-four, and the number of representatives at forty-eight, while existing statutes limit the number of districts for councilmen to twelve and representatives to twenty-four. This legislation is for the purpose of remedying that defect. The act of Congress increasing the number of representatives in the Territorial council and house of representatives was passed at a time when the Legislature was not in session and would not meet until after the next general election, so that the case now stands that the Legislature consists of twenty-four councilmen and forty-eight representatives, and yet there are but twelve council districts and twenty-four representative districts; so that there must be two members elected to each of these bodies from each of the districts. The territorial area there is 150,000 square miles, and the population of Dakota is a half million, so that these districts must be of immense size and the people can not be fairly represented by having such large legislative or council districts.

It is a great burden and a serious detriment to the public interest to retain the law as it at present exists. I hope the Committee on Appropriations will see the almost imperative necessity for this change, and no other opportunity presents itself of having this change made.

There can be no objection, I think, that this legislation is embraced in an appropriation bill, because I find in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for 1878, chapter 329 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 20, that all these provisions in regard to the Territories were embraced in that bill. On page 193 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 20, is the entire legislation affecting not only this Territory but all the Territories of the country, prescribing what the Territorial Legislatures should do with reference to apportioning the respective Territories forming council districts and representative districts in the Territories. It is all embraced in that bill. I hope there will be no objection made to retaining this legislation in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Legislature of Dakota, to which this provision would apply, will not sit until two years from this winter, and I hope before that time Dakota will be a State in the Union.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator will permit me to correct him. The Legislative Assembly of Dakota is in session now.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. There is no appropriation in this bill for the Legislature of Dakota, and the Legislature sits only once in two years. There will be ample time to make some provision at the next session of Congress for a redistricting and redivision of this Territory into legislative districts, if we shall not at an early period in the session admit Dakota as a State.

This legislation may be all right; I do not know that it is wrong; but certainly it has been considered by no committee of the Senate. We do not know and can not know in the nature of things whether this is wise legislation or unwise.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Iowa will permit me to explain. The statute before him has determined the propriety of having forty-eight representatives and twenty-four members of the council.

Mr. ALLISON. So it has, and provided a method of filling them.

Mr. McMILLAN. And the only reason why the further provision was not embraced in that statute was because the election occurred in the fall succeeding the passage of the law, the law having passed in June and the election transpiring in November, and there was no session of the Legislature intervening.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate will see that Congress dealt with this subject only last June, and made provision respecting it. If they intended that there should be a redivision and a relocation of the districts, why did they not provide for it in the act when they were dealing with the subject? It was just as easy to deal with it then as now.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have just stated to the Senator that there was no session of the Legislature intervening between the passage of that law and the election. The election must transpire, and the necessity for the increase of members of the Legislature was so imperative—the population having increased to so large an extent that the increase of the members of the Legislature was necessary, and Congress provided for it. Congress could not undertake to apportion the Territory into legislative districts, and they could not at that time prescribe that the Territory should be divided into legislative districts, because there could have been no election then.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems I failed utterly to make myself understood. Only last June we provided for this increase in the Territorial council and house of representatives of Dakota, and we provided that the additional number of members should be elected in the districts as they then stood. If Congress, after looking into this subject, had supposed it a wise thing to provide for a reapportionment, all that would have been required then would have been a simple additional section saying that this Legislature when convened should have authority to reapportion the Territory; and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] sotto voce says that is all they are going to say now, which I agree to.

We are confronted all the time with these legislative questions, and when they come from the House it seems to be an imperative necessity that they should pass without being considered by the proper committee of the Senate. I do not know but that this is wise legislation; I rather think it is; but why is it that the committee having charge of this subject only last June did not make provision for it, and if not last June why not this winter? Why did they leave it to the last moment to be inserted here in an appropriation bill when in the nature of things we can not know whether it is wise or otherwise?

Mr. McMILLAN. Congress could not make the apportionment itself.

Mr. ALLISON. So I think.

Mr. McMILLAN. It would be unwise in Congress to adopt any such legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. It has done so in many instances.

Mr. McMILLAN. Still it is an exercise of power which is of very doubtful propriety. The people of the Territory are capable of prescribing their own representative districts, and that should always be permitted to the inhabitants of a Territory.

Mr. ALLISON. It is usually done by the executive council of the Territory. I do not know of an instance where we have provided for reapportionment by Territorial legislation.

Mr. McMILLAN. In reference to inserting this in the appropriation bill, as I suggested when I first took the floor, in the appropriation bill of 1878, the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, a bill of the same character as that which we are now considering, there is one whole clause appropriated to the government in the Territories, and it prescribes—

That from and after the adjournment of the next session of the several Territorial Legislatures the council of each of the Territories of the United States shall not exceed twelve members and the house of representatives of each shall not exceed twenty-four members, and the members of each branch of the said several Legislatures shall receive a compensation of $4 per day each during the sessions provided by law, and shall receive such mileage as the law provides; and the president of the council and the speaker of the house of representatives shall each receive $6 per day for the same time. And the several Legislatures at their next sessions are directed to divide their respective Territories into as many council and representative districts as they desire, which districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable taking into consideration population, except "Indians not taxed." Provided, The number of council districts shall not exceed twelve, and the representative districts shall not exceed twenty-four in any one of said Territories.

It was to amend that legislation inserted in an appropriation bill that the act of last June, to which I have referred the Senator, was passed; and this legislation is merely to carry into effect that act of Congress and permit the Territorial Legislature of Dakota to prescribe the council and representative districts. An area of 150,000 square miles and a population of 500,000 people certainly should be respected and regarded, and the rights of their citizens should be regarded to that extent. I hope the Senate will retain the clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McMILLAN. I call for the yeas and nays. Perhaps a division may be taken if Senators understand the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator to withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir; I will take a division.

The question being put, there were on a division—yeas 19, nays 13—no quorum voting.

Mr. PENDLETON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Territory of Dakota by law has twenty-four members of the council and forty-eight representatives. That number was prescribed by an act of Congress passed last June. Now, the number of districts consists of twelve council districts and twenty-four representative districts. This legislation merely permits the Legislature of the Territory to increase the number of the districts to conform to the number of representatives, so that there shall be one representative from each council district, and one from each representative district. That is a principle that certainly should be recognized as one to which every portion of the country is entitled; and legislation of this character, more extended and more general, was inserted in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill in 1878, which renders this legislation necessary. There certainly can be no objection to permitting this change to be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but the legislation of 1878 has nothing whatever to do with this.

Mr. McMILLAN. The principle certainly is the same, and there the legislation was much more general and much more extensive, referring to all the Territories and covering the whole legislation for the Territories.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 36, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—36.
Allison,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Pike,
Bayard,	Dawes,	Harris,	Platt,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Hawley,	Pugh,

An act (S. 1915) to remove the disabilities of James D. Johnston, of Georgia, incurred under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution.

FISH IN POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. LAPHAM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3106) to protect fish in the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, and to provide a spawning-ground for shad and herring in the said Potomac River, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same in the following form:

"Sec. 3. That from and after three months from the date of the passage of this act it shall be unlawful to allow any tar, oil, ammoniacal liquor, or other waste products of any gas-works or of works engaged in using such products, or any waste product whatever of any mechanical, chemical manufacturing, or refining establishment to flow into or be deposited in Rock Creek or the Potomac River or any of its tributaries within the District of Columbia, or into any pipe or conduit leading to the same; and any one guilty of violating this section shall on conviction as provided in section 2 of this act be fined not less than $10 nor more than $100 for each and every day during which said violation shall continue, to be prosecuted for and recovered as provided in the preceding section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

E. G. LAPHAM,
WILLIAM J. SEWELL,
JAMES B. GROOME,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. THOS. SPRIGGS,
JOHN S. BARBOUR,
LOUIS E. MCCOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Territory of Wyoming, in line 1558, after the word "printing," to strike out "laws;" and after the word "dollars," at the end of line 1590, to insert:

And for printing code and laws of the Ninth Legislative Assembly, $2,500; in all $24,500.

So as to make the clause read:

For legislative expenses, namely: For per diem of officers and members of the Legislative Assembly; rent of two halls and committee-rooms for Legislature; fitting up halls; removing furniture; new carpets, stoves, furniture, and repairing old; fuel, lights, and incidentals; stationery; record-books; printing journals, bills; fuel, rent, light, furniture, stationery, postage, messenger, and incidentals of secretary's office, $22,000; and for printing code and laws of the Ninth Legislative Assembly, $2,500; in all, $24,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following proviso, from line 1593 to line 1606, inclusive:

Provided, That on the first Monday in September, A. D. 1885, or within ten days thereafter, the governor of the Territory and the presiding officers of the houses of the last Legislature shall meet and reapportion the Territory in accordance with the population, as ascertained by the best possible means; and that in accordance with such new apportionment members shall be elected to the Ninth Legislative Assembly, on the second Tuesday of November, 1885, in accordance with the election laws of the Territory; and the members of the council and house of representatives so elected shall be the legal members and constitute the Ninth Legislative Assembly of the Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," in the appropriations for "the Signal Office," in line 1665, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "forty," so as to read:

And for the services of scientific experts, clerks, draughtsmen, copyists, messengers, mechanics, laborers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, in the office of the Chief Signal Officer, to carry into effect the appropriations for observation and report of storms, and for the construction, maintenance, and repairs of military telegraph lines, $40,000.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "office of the Quartermaster-General," in line 1672, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-two" and insert "twenty-three;" so as to read:

Twenty-three clerks of class 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1683, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of chief clerk and the clerks and employes in the office of the Quartermaster-General from $155,375 to $156,775.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "the office of the Chief of Engineers," in line 1748, after the word "messenger," to insert "one watchman;" and in line 1749, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and forty" and insert "nine hundred and sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

In the Office of the Chief of Engineers: One chief clerk, at $2,000; four clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; three clerks of class 2; three clerks of class 1; one clerk, at $1,000; one assistant messenger; one watchman, and two laborers; in all, $23,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1759, after the word "exceed," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

And the services of skilled draughtsmen, civil engineers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary may be employed in the office of the Chief of Engineers to carry into effect the various appropriations for rivers and harbors, fortifications, and surveys for military defenses, to be paid for from such appropriation: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, shall not exceed $60,000; and that the Secretary of War shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons so employed, and the amount paid to each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Office of publication of Records of the Rebellion," in line 1765, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 1767, before the word "copyist," to strike out "five" and insert "four;" and in line 1773, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-one thousand three" and insert "thirty-two thousand two;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of publication of Records of the Rebellion: For one agent, $2,000; three clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; three clerks of class 1; four copyists, at $200 each; one foreman of printing, at $1,500; one pressman, $1,200; five compositors, at $1,000 each; two copy-holders, at $200 each; two assistant messengers, two watchmen, and one laborer, at $600; in all, $32,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," in line 1869, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1881, to increase the total amount of appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of the Navy and the clerks and employes in his office from $56,830 to $58,630.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1917, after the word "for," to insert "one clerk of class 3;" and in line 1920, after the word "all," to strike out "five thousand one" and insert "six thousand seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Hydrographic Office: For one clerk of class 3; two clerks of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one assistant messenger; and one office attendant, $420; in all, $6,740.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1936, after the word "Ocean," to strike out "twenty thousand seven hundred" and insert "twenty-four thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of chart-paper, copper-plates, electrotyping copper-plates; ink and other materials necessary in printing division; materials for drawing division and for mounting charts; materials for engravers; for photolithographing charts for immediate use, and transfer of photolithographic and other charts to copper; repairs to printing-presses; for extra drawing and engraving, and for purchase of foreign charts and hydrographic works for the use of the vessels of the Navy; for the purchase of drawing-paper, drawing materials, and necessary instruments to be furnished naval vessels while surveying, and for repair of such instruments, and for printing Pilot Chart of North Atlantic Ocean, $24,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1950, after the word "at," to strike out "one thousand nine hundred and fifty" and insert "two thousand two hundred;" in line 1952, after the word "thousand," to strike out "seven hundred and fifty" and insert "eight hundred;" in line 1954, after the word "dollars," to insert "two computers, at $1,200 each;" and in line 1959, after the word "all," to strike out "seventeen thousand nine hundred and seventy" and insert "twenty thousand seven hundred and twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval Observatory: For pay of three assistant astronomers, one at $2,200 and two at $1,800 each; one clerk of class 4; one instrument-maker, $1,500; two computers, at $1,200 each; four watchmen, including one for new Naval Observatory grounds; two skilled laborers, one at $1,000 and one at $720; and seven laborers; in all, $20,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars" at the end of line 1991, to insert "one assistant draughtsman, at $1,000;" and in line 1995, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "thirteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Steam-Engineering: For chief clerk, $1,800; one chief draughtsman, at $3,250; one assistant draughtsman, at $1,400; one assistant draughtsman, at $1,000; two clerks of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one clerk, at $1,000; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $13,490.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2020, to increase the item "for stationery, furniture, newspapers, plans, drawings, drawing materials, freight, expressage, postage, and other absolutely necessary expenses of the Navy Department and its various bureaus and offices" from $11,000 to $13,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of the "Department of the Interior," in line 2113, after the word "and," to strike out "one laborer" and insert "two laborers;" and in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "ninety-seven thousand nine hundred and eighty" and insert "ninety-eight thousand six hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Indian Office: For compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; one financial clerk, at $2,000; chief of division, at $2,000; one principal bookkeeper, at $1,800; four clerks of class 4, one of whom shall have charge of the educational division; ten clerks of class 3; one stenographer, at $1,000; sixteen clerks of class 2, one of whom shall be a draughtsman; nine clerks of class 1; thirteen clerks, at $1,000 each; fourteen copyists; one messenger; one assistant messenger; one messenger-boy, at $360, and two laborers; in all, $68,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the clause from line 2116 to line 2139, inclusive, as follows:

That a committee consisting of five members-elect of the Forty-ninth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall, during the recess of Congress, inquire into and investigate the expenditure of appropriations for Indian schools, and the education of Indians, the established system of such schools or education, and whether any changes should be made therein. Said committee shall also inquire into the expenditure of public money for the Yellowstone Park, and the administration of the laws applicable to said park, whether any change should be made in said laws or the boundary of the park, and what steps, if any, can be taken to make of practical benefit and utility that portion of the public domain. That said committee have power to visit the places where appropriations mentioned herein are expended, and in doing so they are hereby authorized to use Government conveyances and means of transportation. Said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, and to appoint a clerk, and may report by bill or otherwise to the Forty-ninth Congress. The expenses of said committee, and of witnesses that may be summoned before it, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the draft of the chairman of said committee, in sums not exceeding $1,000 at any one time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Pension Office, after the word "dollars," in line 2167, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That vacancies occurring in the clerical force of the Pension Office during the fiscal year 1886 shall not be filled by promotion or original appointment until a reduction of one hundred and fifty in all is made; and thereafter the number shall not be increased, and the number in the several grades shall remain as existing when said reduction is completed.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to reserve a point of order on that amendment until I learn what the necessity for it is. I should like to inquire of the chairman if the condition of business in the Pension Office is such that this reduction may properly be made? The complaint is very great, coming in every mail very largely from pension applicants all over the country, of great delay in dealing with their cases.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think the delay comes from any lack of clerical force. If the Senator will turn his eye to page 89, line 2184 to line 2190, inclusive, he will see that we continue for the next year a force of one hundred and fifty special examiners, which under the appropriation act of last year were to be retired on the 1st day of July next. Upon as thorough an examination as we could make of the situation, it was the opinion of the committee that if we continue this additional force of one hundred and fifty special examiners, gradually during the year 1886 we can from all the force reduce an equal number of employes. I do not think there is any likelihood of anybody suffering on account of this reduction.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to set up a question of order that will prevent the Senate from acting upon a matter which has been matured by the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. If the amendment is subject to a point of order, I trust the Senator will make it. I do not understand what point of order it is subject to.

Mr. HOAR. It certainly is new legislation. It provides that the now existing authority to appoint a particular class of officers shall not be exercised.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator will see, it relates wholly to the clerks provided for in the paragraph and appropriated for in the paragraph.

Mr. HOAR. But the clerks in that office that now exist are officers beyond the particular year. If we do not appropriate for them, and they go on with their work, would they not have a claim against the United States?

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps a portion of them may be recognized by some permanent law, but these clerks are appropriated for annually in the appropriation bills, and their number is increased or diminished from year to year.

Mr. HOAR. There is a change in method of machinery of appointment and putting a limitation on authority. However, I was about to say that I wanted merely to have a clear and distinct affirmation from the committee and the chairman, the organ of the committee, of a belief that the clerical force is sufficient to transact the business of the Pension Office promptly and without delay, because undoubtedly the most objectionable part of our civil administration for the last few years has been the clumsy and imperfect manner and the great delays which have attended the settlement of pension cases. There are a great many cases of fraud, a great many cases of doubt, a great many cases of improper evidence; there are a great many cases of negligence on the part of applicants or their attorneys; but allowing for all that, the fact remains that here are thousands and tens of thousands of soldiers, soldiers' widows, and soldiers' orphans who have done everything that in them lies to secure the pension to which they are entitled by law, and who are growing old and dying of poverty and want and suffering by reason of the imperfection of the mechanism which we have devised for the establishment of their rights.

I do not mean to say that any Commissioner of Pensions has failed to do his best with the machinery at his command. I do not mean to say that there is not much difficulty inherent in the nature of the subject. My own belief is that the whole scheme has been wrong and the pension applicants should have been permitted to try their cause in a district court of the United States, or before some special tribunal in their neighborhood, with a proper officer to represent the Government. I think that such a scheme would have long ago disposed of the vast number of pension cases which still await the tardy process of justice.

If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, with the great responsibility which rests upon him and his committee, says that the force of clerks in the Pension Office at the present number is not necessary to remove this difficulty, and that the settlement of these cases will go on as rapidly as may be in the nature of things even with the reduced number, I do not undertake to set up any opinion of mine against his authority.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say in regard to the amendment that last year the Commissioner of Pensions himself recommended an important reduction in the force of that office because of the lack of the necessity for its continuation. But it was not reduced; or rather, the force having been reduced by the bill as it came from the House, the Senate increased it again upon the belief that what is known as the Mexican pension bill would become a law and add very largely to the business of the office.

Of course if this amendment were in any way to diminish the efficiency of the office and prevent the allowance of any claim at a proper time after the completion of the testimony, I should not myself vote in favor of its adoption; but from a somewhat extended knowledge of the condition of business in the Pension Office my belief is that the force can be reduced one hundred and fifty during the year (although it will not probably be reduced so much by reason of this amendment) without diminishing its efficiency in any degree; that to-day it is not a lack of force which is impeding the business of the office; and if we were to add 500 or 1,000 clerks to the office I believe the business would not be expedited in view of the facility thus afforded to transact it.

I wish to say one thing further in regard to the one hundred and fifty special examiners. I do not think the anticipations that were had when that force was provided have been justified. I would be very glad to cut off part of them, believing as I do that they encumber largely the business of the office rather than tend to expedite it.

I do not believe that under this provision there will be any delay more than has been, and I believe the force can be so reorganized, and it ought to be so reorganized, as to really expedite the business much more rapidly than ever has been done heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "United States Patent Office," before the word "principal," in line 2206, to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty-six;" so as to read:

Twenty six principal examiners, at $2,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2207, before the word "first," to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

Thirty first assistant examiners, at $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2209, before the word "second," to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

Thirty second assistant examiners, at $1,600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2210, before the word "third," to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read:

Thirty-five third assistant examiners, at $1,400 each.

The next amendment was, in line 2212, before the word "fourth," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Forty fourth assistant examiners, at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2222, before the word "clerks," to strike out "fifty" and insert "fifty-five;" so as to read:

Fifty-five clerks of class 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2223, to insert:

Fifteen examiners' clerks, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2236, after the word "each," to insert:

Ten messenger-boys, at $360 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2238, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Commissioner of Patents, Assistant Commissioner, and the clerks and employes in the office from $597,170 to $646,370.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2274, after the word "dollars," to insert "one engineer and skilled laborer, at $1,000;" and in line 2279, after the word "all," to strike out "forty-four" and insert "forty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Education: For the Commissioner of Education, $3,000; collector and compiler of statistics, $3,400; chief clerk, $1,800; two clerks of class 4; one statistician, $1,800; two clerks of class 3; one translator, $1,600; four clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; seven copyists; two copyists, at $900 each; one copyist, $720; one engineer and skilled laborer, at $1,000; one assistant messenger; two laborers; two laborers, at $480 each; one laborer, at $400; and one laborer, at $300; in all, $45,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2287, to increase the appropriation "for collecting statistics for special reports and circulars of information," from $2,200 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2294, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

For the distribution and exchange of educational documents, and for the collection, exchange, and cataloguing of educational apparatus and appliances, articles of school furniture, and models of school buildings illustrative of foreign and domestic systems and methods of education, and for repairing the same, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2313, after the word "law," to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five;" and in line 2314, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Labor: For Commissioner of Labor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; for rent of rooms for use of bureau, and for fuel, light, stationery, employes, and all other necessary expenses of said bureau, and to make investigation into the statistics of labor in the United States and elsewhere, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and as provided by law, $35,000; in all, $40,000. And it shall be the duty of the commissioner to report the number and salaries of employes, with the estimates for said bureau, to the first session of the next Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 2358.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the words "horse-railroad car tickets" in line 2354. I supposed that amendment of the committee had been noted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2361, to increase the appropriation "for stationery for the Department of the Interior and its several bureaus and offices, including the Geological Survey," from $70,000 to $72,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "may," at the end of line 2370, to insert "in the discretion of the Secretary;" so as to make the clause read:

For the rent of other buildings for the use of the Department of the Interior, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, $58,160: Provided, That any building rented hereunder may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be vacated on the part of the Government as soon as the new Pension Office building is ready for occupancy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Post-Office Department," in line 2500, to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" in line 2501, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one female clerk, at $900;" and after the word "all," at the end of line 2501, to strike out "thirty thousand nine hundred" and insert "thirty-one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the Postmaster-General, $8,000; chief clerk to the Postmaster-General, $2,500; stenographer, $1,800; appointment clerk, $1,800; law clerk, at $2,500; and one clerk of class 4 (in office of Assistant Attorney-General for Post-Office Department); two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; three clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000; one copyist; one messenger; one assistant messenger; in all, $31,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of "First Assistant Postmaster-General," in line 2515, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert eight;" so as to read:

One clerk of class 2 and eight clerks at $1,000 each, for one year, in the salary and allowance division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2524, to insert:

One clerk, at $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2526, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of First Assistant Postmaster-General and the clerks and employes in his office from $111,500 to $120,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2530, after the word "dollars," to strike out "chief of foreign mails division, $2,000; eleven" and insert "ten;" in line 2532, before the word "clerks," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirty-four;" in line 2533, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty" and insert "eighteen;" and before the word "hundred," in line 2538, to strike out "fifty-one thousand nine" and insert "forty-three thousand seven;" so as to read:

For Second Assistant Postmaster-General, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; chief of division of inspection, $2,000; superintendent of railway adjustment, $2,000; ten clerks of class 4; thirty-four clerks of class 3; eighteen clerks of class 2; eighteen clerks of class 1; nine clerks, at $1,000 each; three female clerks, at $900 each; three assistant messengers; and one laborer; in all, $143,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 2538, to strike out:

And the Second Assistant Postmaster-General shall have the supervision over the foreign mails.

And to insert:

For superintendent of foreign mails, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class 4; three clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; one assistant messenger; in all, $16,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2613, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the purchase of free penalty envelopes $3,600," and in line 2624, after the word "all," to strike out "sixty-thousand eight" and insert "seventy thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department: For stationery and blank books, $9,000; for the purchase of free penalty envelopes, $3,600; fuel, and for repairs to heating apparatus, $7,200; for gas, $6,600; plumbing and gas fixtures, $1,700; telegraphing, $5,000; painting, $4,700; carpets and matting, $5,900; furniture, $7,500; keeping of horses and repair of wagons and harness, $1,500; hardware, $1,700; miscellaneous items, $13,000; in all, $79,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2631, after the word "dollars," to insert "for rent of additional buildings for the use of the money-order office of the Post-Office Department, and of the money-order division of the Office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $4,500;" and in line 2635, after the word "all," to strike out "nine thousand five hundred" and insert "fourteen thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of topographer's office, $1,500; for rent of a suitable building or buildings for the use of the money-order office of the Post-Office Department, and of the money-order division of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $8,000; for rent of additional buildings for the use of the money-order office of the Post-Office Department, and of the money-order division of the Office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $4,500; in all, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judicial" in the appropriations for the office of the Attorney-General, in line 2671, before the word "copyists," to strike out "seven" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Ten copyists.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2768, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Attorney-General and the clerks and employes in his office from $112,110 to $114,810.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. ALLISON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels bound under the understanding to recognize the Senator in charge of the bill, that further amendments from the Committee on Appropriations, if there be any, may be offered.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Indiana will yield for just a moment I will then give way to him.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 2317, after the word "the" where it first occurs, I move to strike out the words "first session of the next" and insert "Secretary of the Interior for transmission to;" so as to read:

And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner to report the number and salaries of employes, with the estimates for said bureau, to the Secretary of the Interior for transmission to Congress.

The Bureau of Labor is under the Interior Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After line 411, I move to insert:

For pay of E. J. Babcock, secretary of the commission on the dedication of the Washington Monument, $200, to be paid from the appropriation for the dedication.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARRISON. In line 71, after the words "Indian Affairs," I move to insert the words:

Clerk to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move to amend the amendment by adding the words:

And clerk to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Another amendment is not in order now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Another amendment is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I desire to give notice that when the amendment is in order I shall propose to so amend the bill as that the clerks of all the standing committees of the Senate shall be annual clerks. This matter has drifted away from the necessities of requiring clerks to the committees. That is evident. I look over the list and find those committees which have annual clerks and those which have not, and there is no difference between the labor of the committees. For instance, here is the Committee on the Census. I will ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the chairman of that committee, whether the Committee on the Census has had any meeting this session?

Mr. HALE. It is a very laborious committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very! That committee has an annual clerk. Next is the Committee on Private Land Claims. Let me ask the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] a question, if he will give me his attention for a moment. Will he please inform me how many times that committee have met during this session, and how many reports they have made?

Mr. BAYARD. The Committee on Private Land Claims?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; I am inquiring about the relative labor of committees, and I am directing attention to the Committee on Private Land Claims. I desire to propound the inquiry to the chairman of that committee how many meetings they have had at this session?

Mr. BAYARD. On the regular day, which is Friday. I have the impression that there may have been two Fridays since the 1st of December on which the committee did not have a session, owing to the absence of members of the committee, but otherwise the committee has been in session on its regular meeting day in each week.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator will understand that I am not assigning the committee for neglect of duty by any means. That is not the purpose of my inquiry.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator state his purpose?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have no doubt of the faithfulness and zeal with which that committee does everything which properly comes before it. Will the Senator furthermore state how many reports that committee has made at this session, if he remembers?

Mr. BAYARD. I can procure for the Senator, if he desires, the statement of the clerk as to the exact number of reports.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; I should like to have it.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask now, if the Senator has no objection, what is the object of his inquiry?

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator did not hear me. I will tell him.

It is no disrespect to the committee or suggestion of their want of intelligence or diligence or activity. The Senator was not probably paying attention to my statement, and he is not required to do it. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] proposed an amendment to this bill. We have seen very much of this appropriation bill, and certainly it is a very large thing.

The Senator from Indiana proposes that among the annual committee clerks there shall be enrolled the clerk of the Committee on Territories of the Senate. That is probably very proper. With that the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] proposes that there shall also be added to the list of annual clerks the clerk of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which is very important probably. Then I suggested to the Senate that at the proper time I should propose an amendment that the clerks of all the standing committees should be annual clerks. That naturally suggested the inquiry, as I stated, that we had got a good way from the first introduction of clerks to committees where they are absolutely necessary, and I took up the list, commencing backward.

I asked the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] who is chairman of the Census Committee, which has an annual clerk, as to the duties of that committee, as to the necessity for an annual clerk, and he answered very promptly that there are serious and arduous duties performed by the Committee on the Census. Having received a satisfactory answer to that inquiry, I went along the list and found the Committee on Private Land Claims. Therefore it was that I turned to the chairman of that committee to know as to the nature or arduous character of the duties connected with that committee. I trust now the Senator understands and will excuse the inquiry that I made.

Mr. BAYARD. There is no excuse required. Anything that relates to the public business is a very proper matter for public inquiry. I may only state that before I became chairman of that committee some of the most experienced lawyers of the body, the present presiding officer of the Senate, Judge Thurman, and Judge Davis were all members of the committee, and I think they found themselves sometimes very constantly occupied to frame proper laws for the very important cases that came before them. It was under their supervision and control that the annual feature was made for the clerkship. I found it so, and I trust it will remain so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 20.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. CALL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	George,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Hill,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams,
Chace,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Wilson.
Conger,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,
Dolph,	Lapham,	Pike,

NAYS—28.

Allison,	Colquitt,	Jackson,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Dawes,	Jonas,	Ransom,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Lamar,	Riddleberger,
Brown,	Groome,	Macey,	Sherman,
Camden,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Vance,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Platt,	Walker.

ABSENT—19.

Butler,	Gariand,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gibson,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Slater,
Fair,	Hale,	Pendleton,	Voorhees.
Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. VAN WYCK. After the word "Forestry" I move to insert—And clerks to each of the other standing committees of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend that.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask whether an amendment is in order?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is in order. I want to amend it so as to include the clerks of the select committees of the Senate, making it read "the clerks of the standing and select committees."

Mr. FRYE. That is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri is not now in order. There is an amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana pending, and an amendment to that amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Committee on Appropriations gave consideration to this matter, which I suppose they did, with the view of providing annual clerks for the committees which really need them, then I think in the estimation of nearly every Senator here outside of the Appropriations Committee they have failed very seriously in the correct discharge of that duty.

The clerks of committees should be established, if they are made annual, upon the necessity of labor being done after the close of the session, if we require that of some of our committees. Among the committees for which annual clerks are recommended there are those which have no pretense of requiring an annual clerk. Such, I think, are the two committees to which I have referred, the Committee on the Census and the Committee on Private Land Claims. I do not think the Senator from Delaware, although he voted against the amendment of the Senator from New York, believes for a moment that there is any pretense for having a clerk to the Committee on Private Land Claims after the session closes. We should do one thing or the other.

If there is any justice or honesty about the distribution of this part of the patronage, or plunder, as it should more properly be called—patronage, if we choose to call it by a milder term, because probably one-half the persons employed about this building are not necessary—we should act equally. We have doubled the expenses connected with the running of this part of the Capitol beyond what is actually necessary. It is significant that we have here clerks of committees carried on the annual roll to-day when there is no pretense of necessity or duty for them. The Appropriations Committee has retained some, and we find that the Census Committee and the Private Lands Committee have annual clerks. There is no necessity for annual clerks to these committees. Why do the Appropriations Committee, who watch everything so carefully, suffer this to pass out of their grasp and fasten committee clerks on the Treasury when there is no necessity for them?

Then I ask the question why did not the Appropriations Committee go further and make the clerks of all standing committees annual clerks? Let us make a reform one way or the other. Let us make a reform in justice by only apportioning the clerks where the duties of the committee require them, or let us make the reform on the other line, on the basis of honest equality, and make the clerk of every committee an annual clerk.

I say to my friend from Iowa that it is not necessary to state that some committees work more than others. Certainly; but they are provided with additional clerical help. The Appropriations Committee has not only one clerk, but two clerks to the committee. So all committees whose duties require it are provided for already by this bill. I have asked only that the committee shall strike down those that are useless or add others that are also useless, and have an equality one way or the other.

There is no necessity for this, Mr. President. There is no occasion for it. There are officers provided for here for whom there is no necessity. We have messengers at $1,440 a year and the compensation of others is increased and so is that of the clerk of the Appropriations Committee, and every gentleman on the Appropriations Committee has taken especial care I suppose to see to it that the clerk of his particular committee is an annual clerk. I do not think this necessary. I should like the Senate if possible to be consistent on one line or the other, either on the basis of honest equality for all the committees or on the basis of economy. If it is a donation, if it is a gift, a matter of favor to a Senator having charge of a committee, let it be uniform. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose there is no more difficult question affecting our internal affairs here than the one we are now considering. Certainly no one question gives the Committee on Appropriations more trouble at each recurring session than the consideration of the committee clerkships.

The Senator from Nebraska wants to know why it is that we have reported this bill providing for the clerks of certain committees, which committees, he says, have no labor or very inconsiderable labor to perform. The Committee on Appropriations have reported the annual clerks in accordance with the action of the Senate hitherto. We have not taken upon ourselves the responsibility of revising the judgment of the Senate with reference to those clerks of committees; and where we have found resolutions of the Senate or votes of the Senate making clerks annual officers we have adhered to them.

If the Senator from Nebraska thinks that some of these annual clerks ought not to be so provided for, I should think with his judgment in reference to the economy of the Senate he would have addressed himself rather to correcting the errors of the Committee on Appropriations by proposing to strike down clerks that the Senate has hitherto made annual; but instead of that his proposition is now a sweeping proposition that every committee of this body shall have an annual clerk, without reference to the business of the committee and without reference to the question whether or not that committee has work for an annual clerk to perform.

I shall not go into a discussion of the respective labors of committees in this body. Every Senator here is as capable of judging of this matter as I am. Nor am I intending to lecture the Senate as to whether or not clerks of committees shall all receive annual compensation. That is a question for the Senate, which I do not choose as a member of the Committee on Appropriations to interfere with. I only say that the Committee on Appropriations have from time to time made these reports in view of facilitating the business of the committees of this body and of the Senate. Last year, I believe, we did add one annual clerk to the list of annual clerks; that was the clerk of the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which the venerable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is chairman. I think the Senate will agree that that committee for the last year or two years has been one of the hardest worked committees in this body.

Now, if the Committee on Agriculture which has just been voted in is a committee that requires work in the vacation, is a committee that requires the labor of a clerk in vacation, no Senator will be more willing to vote for it than I will; and so with the clerk of any other committee where the committee can show a reason why that should be done. It has been shown in the past with reference to the several committees named in the bill, and the Committee on Appropriations did not choose to reverse the judgment of the Senate.

But I ask that the Senate pause before it adopts the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska to provide sweepingly for annual clerks to all the standing committees of this body; because if that shall be done, surely the Senator from Missouri will insist upon his amendment which shall provide for the inclusion of all the select committees of this body. If that is the disposition of Senators I shall not interfere with it; but I submit that it will add largely to the expenditures of the Senate, and in that respect I do not think I am illiberal.

The Senator from Nebraska said that the Committee on Appropriations had two clerks. It has two clerks, and neither of these clerkships is a sinecure, I can tell the Senator from Nebraska. They are as hard worked clerks as there are connected with this body; and one of those clerks, the chief clerk of the Committee on Appropriations (and I say it without invidious distinction in regard to other clerks), is an officer who not only works during the session of Congress, but in season and out of season in the committee-room with reference to public measures.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Allow me right there one moment?

Mr. ALLISON. I will.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not undertake by any means to intimate that the clerks of the Appropriations Committee were not just such officials as the Senator represents. My only idea was to answer what I supposed be an argument made, that annual clerks are given because some committees do more work than others. I only said in that connection that when that was the case the Senate took care to provide that they should have additional clerks. I beg the Senator not to misunderstand me.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I will not misunderstand the Senator; but the Senator from Nebraska undertook to say, and did say, that the Committee on Appropriations in deciding this matter, so far as they had the power to decide the matter, were actuated by principles of favoritism with regard to the members of this body. I do not so understand the action of the Committee on Appropriations. Now take the clerk of the Committee on Indian Affairs, made annual last year. The Senator from Massachusetts, although a member of the Committee on Appropriations, did not ask for that annual clerk, although he might as well have asked for it, and so I might say of other gentlemen the clerks of whose committees have been made annual.

I have no feeling about this. I think we ought to have competent men as clerks of committees, competent men in the administration of our affairs at the desk here and elsewhere; and if they are not paid sufficiently now, let us pay them a larger salary; but let us not do it by a wholesale amendment such as is proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I do not desire to go into any general discussion of this subject, as I do not think it is necessary. I understand that from time to time the list of the annual committee clerks has been changed and added to. It seems to have come to a point now where, in the opinion of many Senators, if not a majority, there is a discrimination in this matter which ought no longer to exist. There are a number of the committees which are standing committees, but the clerks of which are merely appointed for the session and are paid a per diem.

Last session the Senate by quite a majority decided to allow a private secretary to every Senator in this body who was not the chairman of a committee. The pay of these secretaries is precisely the same as the pay of the clerks of standing committees, which are not included in the annual list in this appropriation bill. I submit that that is not a fair distribution; for if these committees are of any value at all, if they have any work to do, certainly the clerk of such a committee should receive more than the secretary of a Senator, who is paid for doing the ordinary business of a Senator and nothing else. A number of these committees are very important and do a large amount of work. There can be no doubt about that.

Then in the making up of the force about the Senate and arranging their salaries, a matter entirely in the hands of the Appropriations Committee, it so happens that the men who are appointed as messengers to these very committees about which we are now talking receive an annual salary of $1,440, which is more than the clerks of the committees receive. I submit that this is not a fair distribution, and it should not be so. They are general messengers, and they are assigned to act as messengers to these very committees on the days they sit and at other times they are distributed to other work; but they do act as messengers to those identical committees. Of course their appointment is general, but they are assigned specially to committees.

Mr. PLUMB. The messenger in charge of the room of the Committee on Public Lands acts as messenger to that committee during the days when that committee is in session and at other times he does other messenger duty. He is not messenger to that committee specially.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I understand, but they are assigned to special duty as messengers to the particular committees and they receive the salary which I have stated.

As to the main question whether all the standing committees should have permanent clerks, I am not prepared to say. As I look over the list I am not able to select any which I think should not come under that rule. I do not care to go into any discussion as to the importance of some of the committees which I find in this bill. The Senator from Nebraska has done that to some extent. I submit to any fair-minded Senator if he will take that list of committees whose clerks are made annual by this appropriation bill and then take the list of the committees which are standing and the clerkships which are not annual, he will say that it is not right. The only way to make it right is to change it here and now in this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggested to the Senator from Nebraska when he offered his amendment that I thought it was not in order. It has not been reported by any committee nor has it been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks, if the Senator makes the point, it is not in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is an amendment to an amendment. Do I understand that it is the rule of this body that where a gentleman has presented an amendment properly, as the Senator from Indiana did, and then any other Senator desires to propose an amendment to that amendment, it must be submitted to the Committee on Appropriations the day previous?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the rules to require in respect of amendments to appropriation bills that all amendments which add new items of appropriation (as this does in substance as the Chair thinks) must be reported from a standing or select committee and be referred, one day previous to their being considered, to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair understands that the same rule applies to amendments to amendments. If any question of order shall be raised on the first amendment the Chair will rule upon it when made. The Senator from Iowa makes the question of order that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska is not in order under this rule. The Chair is bound to sustain the point of order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Chair hear another suggestion? This amendment was received without opposition and has been discussed without opposition, and now I submit it is too late for the Senator from Iowa to raise the question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the practice of the Senate has always been to have these questions of order determined when they are raised until the bill has gone to a stage where the amendments become a part of the bill and can not be touched.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Speaking upon the bill, then, I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. The Senator from New York spoke in regard to messengers, and the Senator from Kansas replied that the general messengers were detailed to wait on committee-rooms, and when not waiting there were engaged in other services. Let me call his attention to this:

Seven messengers at the rate of $1,440 per annum for the following committees, namely: Finance, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Pensions, Claims, District of Columbia, Judiciary, Engrossed Bills, and Military Affairs.

Are not those messengers appointed for and especially assigned to duty to those committees?

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose they are; but I was referring to the messengers generally, not to those specially named.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Here are seven placed in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations, whose only duty is merely to sit at the doors of those committee-rooms.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me get through with this first.

Mr. ALLISON. It is right on this point.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me finish my sentence. They are at the doors of these committee-rooms. My friend from Kansas admits that their only duty is at those committee-rooms. I want still further to ask him—and then I will hear the Senator from Iowa—what duties have they to discharge during the vacation?

Mr. PLUMB. That I do not know. I can not tell about that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Probably the chairman of the committee can.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Nebraska probably knows more about it than I do. I was speaking in reference to the general messengers. I suppose these special messengers probably do the duty of waiting upon those committee-rooms during the session, but I understand—though I do not know anything about it—that they have other duties during the vacation. But I want to say one thing further. The Committee on Appropriations did not put anything at all in the bill on this subject. These provisions were found in the bill as it came from the House, and the House committee presumably—I have no doubt that is the fact—took the regular establishment as provided for at preceding sessions of Congress; and these committee clerks and messengers, as I understand, have been put in in obedience to a resolution of the Senate made prior to the time when they were put in; and in putting them in the committee has simply accepted the judgment of the Senate expressed independently on the proposition.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now I will hear the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I am much obliged to the Senator from Nebraska. If I were to say anything it would be a repetition of what the Senator from Kansas has just said, and that is that the Committee on Appropriations do not pretend to consider these questions where the Senate has taken action. We find an existing statute with reference to the number of employes and the compensation of employes, and except in a very few instances we do not undertake to change that statute.

Now with reference to the messengers that have been put on from time to time, some of them have been put on against my vote, as I remember very well. Last year a messenger to the Committee on Military Affairs was by a resolution of the Senate, and a large majority too, placed on that list, and we felt bound to make an appropriation for that messenger in accordance with the judgment of the Senate, and so we have acted with reference to the annual committee clerks.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me ask the Senator from Iowa a question, which the Senator from Kansas said he could not answer. I find in the bill—

Seven messengers at the rate of $1,440 per annum, for the following committees, namely: Finance, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Pensions, Claims, District of Columbia, Judiciary, Engrossed Bills, and Military Affairs.

The Senator from Kansas admits that these messengers are specially assigned for duty to these committees. Let me ask my friend from Iowa if these messengers have any duty to discharge in vacation.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose they have; otherwise I presume the Senate would not have given them an annual salary. What those duties are I do not know. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Finance, which is the only committee of which I am a member of those committees indicated in that list. I suppose the chairman of the Committee on Finance could indicate what his messenger does. Of course I can not follow him up day by day. But I take it that when the Senate deliberately provided for a messenger they did so upon some idea that service was to be performed, and I have no doubt these messengers perform their relative proportion of the work that is done by messengers of the Senate during the vacation.

It is impossible for any Senator here to run the Senate in vacation. It is the business of the Sergeant-at-Arms to take care of this wing of the building during the vacation and to assign a sufficient number of messengers, laborers, and other employes to see that the building is taken care of; I do not know what particular ones he uses at different times.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I will say that the Sergeant-at-Arms has the sole charge of these seven men, and places them at any duty he sees fit. They can not be absent without his leave.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would suggest in the same line that the messenger of the Committee on Pensions was summoned here in vacation by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is not one of the committees I am asking about.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, it is.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I beg pardon; I see it is. That is one of the seven specially assigned by a resolution of the Senate, my friend says deliberately adopted. The resolution of the Senate was for duty to these committees. Then I desire to know—I do not suppose the Appropriations Committee know—what they do when Congress is not in session? I venture to say that these men assigned here have no duty to perform, as most of the annual clerks have no duty to perform during vacation. That is the point I was designing to make.

Then the gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee say they are powerless, they can not do anything, because the Senate has deliberately resolved that these appointments should be made; but I see the Appropriations Committee struck down some things. Only a moment ago they were striking down one hundred and fifty clerks in the Pension Office. How were they on the roll. Does my friend from Iowa understand me? He was saying that it was not proper for the Appropriations Committee to retrench of their own motion when the Senate deliberately by resolution said these messengers were beyond their reach. Then I alluded to the fact that only a moment ago the Appropriations Committee were asking us to strike down one hundred and fifty clerks in the Pension Office. Was that not taking the power in their own hands? Those clerks were placed there by law or by resolution of this body. My friend must know this.

I want to show that that committee can do it when inclined. They can strike down one hundred and fifty pension clerks, but they can not strike down the annual clerk of the Committee on the Census or the annual clerk of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there can be no doubt, indeed I do not understand that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations denies, that there are great inequalities in the provision made in this bill for the clerks of the committees of the Senate. The Appropriations Committee evade responsibility for some of these things by saying that at some previous session of the Senate an annual clerk was ordered for a particular committee, that they have felt that order to be binding upon them, and therefore they report an appropriation for that clerk.

Now, I think this whole subject ought to be reconsidered and put upon a fair and equal basis all around. So far as the clerk of my committee is concerned, I do not ask anything else. As these clerks are now serving, perhaps at this session of Congress the pay of one of these clerks who is paid a per diem would be between five and six hundred dollars. At the longer session of Congress it would be probably a thousand dollars, or something more. I do not think the average annual pay amounts to a sum that is equal to the service they render, because any competent clerk who comes here and takes a position as clerk of a committee, if he is a stenographer, loses his place and his business at home. He may pick up something in the intervals of the sessions of Congress, but he practically gives up his place; he loses his identity in the community in which he has been engaged, and the best he can do is to supplement his salary in the vacation by picking up some work, more or less, as he may be fortunate about it.

It seems to me that as to many of our committees the annual salaries fixed here of $2,200 a year would be too large, but if as to many of these committees there could be an annual salary fixed of say $1,800 a year, and perhaps others $1,600 a year, putting them upon an annual basis, but not at the rate named here, and that this rate of $2,200 should be allowed only in the case of those clerks who hold such committees as—

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Will the Senator allow me to ask if he does not discover that there are numerous clerks here receiving $2,500 and $3,000?

Mr. HARRISON. I know there are some.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The advances have already been made for the great Committees on Appropriations and Finance and others.

Mr. HARRISON. The clerk and stenographer of the Committee on Finance, I see, has a salary of $2,500. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations has $3,000. It is increased by this bill $500 by an amendment recommended by the committee. It does seem to me that it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to harmonize this bill and put it on a basis that is fair all around to the different committees.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that last year we put a provision on the appropriation bill appointing a joint committee of both Houses to take up this whole question of compensation to the employees of both Houses with reference to the distinctions between the two Houses and with reference to the inequalities in the Senate; and that committee I think made a report; I do not remember what the report was, but at any rate after a long sitting our committeemen were unable to agree with the House of Representatives in relation to a general scale and schedule of salaries.

Mr. HARRISON. It is not necessary that there should be an agreement with the House. This is a matter I think as to our own clerks that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate could control if they would take hold of it.

I am not in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska to make all committee clerks annual and to give them all the salary specified here. I do not think we could justify ourselves in doing it. There are some of the committees, and I think the committee of which I am chairman is one, that have a great deal of work to do which requires a competent man, and I do not think the present adjustment of his pay is adequate. It is certainly out of proportion to the pay allowed to others who do no more work than he does.

I do not know how generally this proposition should be extended. I have no disposition to seem to be greedy in making this proposition for the clerk of my own committee. I believe he is entitled to more money than he receives, under the present adjustment, for the work he does, and I would be entirely willing to meet the Committee on Appropriations on some amendment that would put these clerks on some fair basis as to the pay that they should receive, involving annual employment.

Mr. MAHONEY. I believe it is in order to offer an amendment to the amendment now under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to offer a further amendment. There is only one amendment now pending.

Mr. MAHONEY. I offer the following amendment under the instruction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; after the word "Forestry" I move to insert "and clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds."

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose that the amendment is in order from the fact that it was offered a few days ago and regularly referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That being the case, it is in order. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. GORMAN. I dislike very much to oppose an amendment offered by any Senator providing for a clerk to his committee; but I find upon a hasty examination to-day of the rolls of the Senate that there are two hundred and five persons now employed annually in the service of the Senate, and with the list of temporary employees added the aggregate number is two hundred and fifty-six officers of this body; and the total amount of compensation paid per annum to officers of this body by the bill which is now under consideration is $348,082.70, divided thus:

In the office of the Vice-President.....	$4,742 40
Chaplain.....	900 00
Office of the Secretary of the Senate.....	62,566 50
Clerks and messengers to committees.....	57,020 00
Offices of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper.....	151,621 80
Session clerks to committees.....	31,800 00
Clerks to Senators.....	39,432 00

Making an aggregate of..... 348,082 70

It appears also by this bill that the whole amount paid in the other branch to clerks and messengers to committees is only $37,900, as against $57,020 here.

I submit that on that statement it would be very unwise, indeed, to increase this list. I desire to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that one year ago he himself, as I remember, knowing what great abuse there was in this matter ingrafted upon an appropriation bill a clause for the appointment of a committee to revise the list, but nothing has been done. At this session of the Senate, without the slightest reason for it, and with no reason in the world—for you can not hide them away in the corridors of the Capitol—a large increase of force has been made. Now, I submit that it is unwise and improper with this immense list, with more men than can possibly be used in transacting the affairs of this body, to increase the force.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not take any part in this sort of small economy which fails to measure the importance of the public duties confided to this body. There is nothing shown in these objections, no particularity; there is merely a general statement that the service of the Senate is extravagant and unreasonable. Now, sir, I want to say, with the committees that we have here, that if the judgment of the Senate that established these standing committees was correct, if they are charged with the highly responsible duties of legislation for this country, with the vast amount of public moneys that are appropriated, with the care of public property, there is not a standing committee of this body that ought not to have a capable and well-informed annual clerk to discharge the duties of that committee, to prepare its papers, and furnish the necessary information for legislation, and correct legislation upon the subjects committed to it.

We are not to measure the great duties confided to this body in a spirit of small and narrow economy. We ought to be prepared with every efficient means of legislation, with information at our hands, and the service of this body ought to be discharged in the most prompt and the most efficient manner. If we have public servants and fail to exact of them the proper measure of public duty, it is our fault; but there is no propriety in objecting to a proposition, when the judgment of the Senate has been passed and created a committee, that it should be furnished with proper and efficient service. I deny the charge that the service of the Senate is extravagant. I deny that it is out of proportion to the necessary and proper means for performing legislative duties, and I protest against a spirit of small and narrow economy which is to menace the efficiency of this body in the discharge of its public duties.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, it happens to have come within my knowledge that this small spirit has been perhaps too small to be observed. I have known since I have been here this winter that messengers, so called, are appointed to take care of committee-rooms, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms, because some Senators perhaps did not want to vote appropriations, has not allowed their committees the services of those who are called messengers. It is a fact that I state, and it is susceptible of all the proof that you can want.

This thing of appointing this committee clerk or that committee clerk to an annual place is quite easy. If the Senator from New York will show that he requires for the Committee on Agriculture an annual clerk, he can get it; but I venture to say that that committee does not meet once a fortnight, and I ask that Senator to show now whether the clerk that he has for his committee is required to perform service two hours in a week. I am chairman of the Committee on Manufactures. It has met once in two years. If there be any reason why the clerk of that committee should not have an annual salary, I shall be obliged to some Senator who will assign it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Virginia why he does not move that the committee be dispensed with. That is the proper course to pursue if there are committees here that are not required for the service of the body.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I can answer the Senator very quickly. I am not in a position to make that kind of a motion. If I belonged to a Democratic caucus possibly I would have a right to do that, and I should bring it in here as a measure and have it defeated; and if I belonged to a Republican caucus I might make the same motion here and have it prevail; but I have as much right, I think, to have a committee as others. Possibly there may be a mistake about the word "honesty," but I should be honest if I simply told the truth about the Committee on Manufactures; and as the Senator from Florida wants to know, I tell him that the fact about it is just as I have stated.

But I did not rise to speak to that. I want to know now for myself whether one Senator who happens to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations represents more than one State or more than one-half of one State. I can not understand that the rules of the Senate preclude me from offering an amendment to any bill that comes in here, and the Senate can not make a rule that will preclude me from doing so. If the Senator from Iowa, as Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is larger than a Senator who is not a member of that committee, then we ought to know it, and know it quickly. I understood the Chair to rule that a single objection from the Appropriations Committee could preclude an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair only ruled that the express rules of the Senate provide that all amendments proposing anything that has the effect to increase an appropriation must be proposed to carry out an existing law or treaty, or moved in pursuance of an estimate of the head of a Department, or reported from a standing or select committee of the Senate; and if reported from such committee, it must have been referred one day previous to its action to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair has only endeavored to enforce that rule when the objection was made.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is a rule of the Senate, and as a rule perhaps it is a good one. But it is not law; it binds nobody; and when I choose to offer an amendment to an appropriation bill in this body, and ask the Senate to vote whether they will adopt it or not, you can not preclude me from offering it by an objection from any member of the Appropriations Committee. If that were so, I and every other Senator had better leave here and go where we can at least maintain a decent self-respect.

Now, sir, I say again with respect to these clerks that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is no more entitled to an annual clerk than any other committee in this body. There is no committee here that ought to have an annual clerk, in my judgment. I will take the Committee on the District of Columbia; I will take the Pensions Committee; and it has been a mere favoritism that has made these annual clerks—nothing else. Therefore I am going to vote against all of them, and I wish it were possible for some Senator who has some comprehension of his possible rights in this body outside of the Appropriations Committee to move to strike out the whole of it, and I would vote for that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which I belong, I must respond in a few words to the Senator from Virginia.

I think all the standing committees of the Senate are of equal dignity, and if any division of the public business is such as to require a standing committee, that committee ought to have an annual clerk or no committee ought to have one. No committee's clerk transacts business in vacation. By law if a committee is allowed to sit during vacation it carries with it the clerk and he gets his pay. I think this is a very small business for the Senate of the United States, the most august body in the world, to be engaged in—chaffing over the pay of a few clerks of committees. It is a small business, Senators, for us to be talking about—the representatives of the richest and grandest and greatest Republic in the world to be talking about the pay of a committee clerk! It is a mere bagatelle, the whole of which amounts to nothing.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have but a few more words to say.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky declines to yield. The Senator from Virginia is not in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So far as the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is concerned, if it has but little business it is because the Senate of the United States has been disposed to take but little notice of the farmers of the country. That is the reason it has not business. But the Committee on Finance, that interests the banks, the Committee on Railroads, that interests the great corporations of the country, have clerks provided for them; and so has even the Woman Suffrage Committee. But I say, Mr. President, to the Senator from Virginia that if the expectations of the fathers of this country are carried out this Agricultural Committee is soon to be one of the foremost committees of the Senate. The House has passed a bill making the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet officer; and when we have somebody in the Cabinet of the President to represent the agricultural interests of this country that committee is going to be one that ranks in dignity with the first of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I had hoped to be able to finish this bill to-night.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to make a speech.

Mr. ALLISON. I am afraid others will, and other amendments are to be offered. If the Senator will give way I will move either an adjournment or an executive session.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I am appealed to by gentlemen all around me who have business to present. I will yield a moment for the introduction of business.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving the report? The Chair hears no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8236) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the floor except for a motion to adjourn, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky declines to yield. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Senator from Kentucky to yield a moment that I may introduce some amendments for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WILLIAMS. For that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can yield for no particular purpose. He can only hold the floor in his own right. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I make a parliamentary inquiry? I think since I have been a member of this body the practice has invariably been for a person upon the floor to yield for a purpose when it is specified and without objection. It may be contrary to the rules, but for the past four years the rules have been violated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been constantly the practice, except when other gentlemen were claiming the floor and complaining that one gentleman could not farm it out.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There was no complaint made, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair heard many complaints.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if he will yield to me to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Kentucky—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WILLIAMS. For a question, of course.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. To make a reply to what observations he has made. I think, Mr. President, that if Senators would stop talking and give the Senator from Kentucky an opportunity to understand what I say, he would possibly do me the courtesy either to continue his remarks and give me an opportunity to reply to them or he would give me a chance now to respond.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I can not give you an opportunity in the midst of my speech.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If I may be permitted to respond, I should like to do so. I think the Senator said he would not yield unless to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield to a motion to adjourn or to a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will address the Chair.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. My remarks were directed to the Chair and with the approbation, as I understood, of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has yielded only to the Senator from Virginia, who now has the floor by the consent of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir; I want to say this—

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield only for a question.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have no question to ask, and I will sit down.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask the Senator from Kentucky to yield to me that I may move an adjournment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Before that is done let me—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to know—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw his motion?

Mr. BLAIR. Let us vote down the motion to adjourn.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to know—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw his motion?

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer some amendments which I send to the Secretary's desk that they may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska presents sundry amendments intended to be proposed to what bill?

Mr. VAN WYCK. To the bill under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. They will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator to withdraw his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw the motion?

Mr. CULLOM. If I may be allowed to do it I will yield. I withdraw it for the purpose indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have been standing on the floor all the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from New Hampshire state what he proposes?

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference, a pension bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to introduce a bill at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I object to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONEY].

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. Pending which I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Call, Cockrell, Coke, George, Gorman,	Hampton, Harris, Jackson, Jonas, Lamar,	Maxey, Pugh, Ransom, Vance, Vest,	Walker, Williams,
---	---	---	----------------------

NAYS—24.

Aldrich, Blair, Bowen, Cameron of Wis., Chace, Conger,	Cullom, Dolph, Edmonds, Hill, Hoar, Jones of Nevada,	McMillan, Mahone, Manderson, Miller of N. Y., Morrill, Palmer,	Platt, Riddleberger, Sawyer, Sewell, Van Wyck, Wilson.
---	---	---	---

ABSENT—35.

Allison, Bayard, Beck, Brown, Butler, Camden, Cameron of Pa., Colquitt, Dawes,	Fair, Farley, Frye, Garland, Gibson, Logan, McPherson, Miller of Cal., Mitchell, Morgan,	Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kenna, Lapham, Lamar, Logan, McPherson, Miller of Cal., Mitchell, Morgan,	Pendleton, Pike, Plumb, Sabin, Saulsbury, Sherman, Slater, Voorhees,
--	---	---	---

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PUGH. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULLOM. The executive session will last only a few minutes.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison, Blair, Bowen, Cameron of Wis., Chace, Conger,	Cullom, Dolph, Edmonds, Harrison, Hoar, Ingalls,	Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Mahone, Manderson, Miller of N. Y., Morrill,	Palmer, Platt, Plumb, Sawyer, Van Wyck, Wilson.
---	---	--	--

NAYS—9.

Call, Cockrell, George,	Hampton, Harris,	Maxey, Ransom,	Riddleberger, Williams.
-------------------------------	---------------------	-------------------	----------------------------

ABSENT—43.

Aldrich, Bayard, Beck, Brown, Butler, Camden, Cameron of Pa., Coke, Colquitt, Dawes, Fair,	Farley, Frye, Garland, Gibson, Gorman, Groome, Hale, Hawley, Hill, Jackson, Jonas,	Jones of Florida, Kenna, Lamar, Lapham, Logan, McPherson, Miller of Cal., Mitchell, Morgan, Pendleton, Pike,	Pugh, Sabin, Saulsbury, Sewell, Sherman, Slater, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walker,
--	--	--	--

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to direct a call of the Senate, pending which the Senator from Tennessee—

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. On which question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and forty-four Senators responded to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORMAN. Pending that motion I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks no business has been done since the last motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, there has been a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a call the rules provide for.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent to make a request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think the executive session, if we can get one, will last more than a few minutes. I ask the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw his call for the yeas and nays and let us go into executive session. There is no quorum present.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the call for the yeas and nays on the motion to go into executive session be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. On that I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the demand for the yeas and nays be recalled. Is there objection?

Mr. PUGH. I object.

Mr. HOAR. I move to reconsider the demand.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BLAIR. Just withdraw that objection. You will get through a great deal sooner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the motion that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GORMAN. I now renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate do now adjourn. The Chair thinks that motion is now in order. The question is on that motion.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 17, nays 25.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with my colleague [Mr. McPHERSON], who is absent.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—24.
Allison,	Conger,	Hoar,	Morrill,
Beck,	Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,
Blair,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Platt,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Chace,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Wilson.

Colquitt,	Jackson,	Pike,	Walker,
Dawes,	Jonas,	Pugh,	Williams.
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the vote is taken I hope the Senate—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senate will give unanimous consent that I may introduce some bills for reference only. They are pension bills, and they need to be printed to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has voted, and the Chair can receive no bill or any other business.

Mr. BLAIR. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That does not make any difference. No quorum has voted. No quorum for any business purpose is now present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that the Senate adjourn, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—20.
Allison,	Gorman,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Beck,	Hale,	Lamar,	Vance,
Call,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Vest,
Coke,	Harris,	Plumb,	Walker,

Camden,	Gibson,	Miller of Cal.,	Slater,
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Colquitt,	Jonas,	Pendleton,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate refuses to adjourn, and a quorum is present. The question recurs on the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to introduce two bills for reference only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to introduce two bills for reference. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2661) granting a pension to Miss Gill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2662) granting an increase of pension to Ella W. Thornton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BOWEN, Mr. DOLPH, Mr. GORMAN, Mr. HAMPTON, and Mr. SEWELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH, and Mr. JONES, of Nevada, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5828) for the relief of Saint Mark's Protestant Episcopal church in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to state, by permission, that very early to-morrow I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I now desire to move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MAHONE. I wish to make a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving the report at this time? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no objection to the Senator submitting the report. Does he desire the consideration of it?

Mr. MAHONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion for an executive session is withdrawn, the Chair understands.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the motion.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia presents a report from a conference committee.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1600) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add as an additional provision to said House amendment the following: "And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed in any event to increase the cost of the site and building, including approaches, when completed, beyond the sum of $900,000, as provided in this section;" and the House agree to the same.

WM. MAHONE,
ANGUS CAMERON,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
JAS. H. HOPKINS,
EDWARD BREITUNG,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee. [A pause.] The Chair is informed at the desk that this conference was asked for by the Senate and granted by the House. The report of the committee in this body first is therefore irregular. It should first be presented to the House of Representatives.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 25, 1885.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2375) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago; and

A bill (S. 2084) to amend chapter 464 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, entitled "An act providing for a public building in the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana."

ALASKA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relating to the protection of seal and the enforcement of the laws in Alaska, and recommending an appropriation of $25,000 for the revenue marine service in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CLAIMS.

Mr. GEDDES. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, is it allowable under the special rule for the Chair to entertain a request of this kind for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Under that rule the Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, but the gentleman from Ohio asks to make a report.

Mr. MILLS. The temporary Speaker declined the other day to entertain the request when I desired unanimous consent to make a report.

Mr. GEDDES, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendments from the Committee on War Claims a bill (H. R. 8177) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHARLES E. JOHNSON.

Mr. YAPLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8273) for the removal of the charge of desertion against the record of Charles E. Johnson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw that demand in order that I may call up the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the call for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post-Office appropriation bill with Senate amendments—

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And that the amendments be non-concurred in.

Mr. PAYSON. I object.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to that. I will consent to the bill going to the Committee on Appropriations for consideration of the Senate amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask my friend from New York to consent that this matter come up for consideration. Then he can submit, if he wants to, the motion to send it to the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. The usual course is to let a bill of this character go to the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The usual course always has been—

The SPEAKER. This question is not debatable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But in reply to the gentleman from New York I desire to say that the usual course at this stage of the session is to non-concur in Senate amendments, in order that we may more promptly bring the matter into conference.

The SPEAKER. Two gentlemen have made objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What gentlemen have objected?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that I be allowed to call this question up, and then the motion can be submitted to refer it to the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do you mean call it up for consideration now?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I mean let it be called up for the purpose of testing the sense of the House as to whether the bill shall go to the Committee on Appropriations or go at once to a committee of conference.

Mr. BLOUNT. Would not the Committee on Appropriations be ready to report the matter back in a very short time?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well; let it go to the committee.

Mr. PAYSON. I object to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, I submit to the House, what can we do with this question? One gentleman objects because he wants the bill referred to the Committee on Appropriations; another gentleman objects to such reference. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HORR. What objection is there to letting the bill go to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am perfectly willing; but my colleague [Mr. PAYSON] does not want the bill to pass this session, perhaps—

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The regular order has been demanded.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended, so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8235) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, and pass the same, together with certain amendments to be submitted thereto by the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask whether there is anything in this bill except the ordinary appropriations—

Mr. RANDALL. The bill will have to be read, at any rate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ought not the bill to be read before the vote is taken?

The SPEAKER. It will be read before the vote is taken on the adoption of the resolution to suspend the rules; but the first question is whether a second is demanded.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I demand a second.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it in order to state why this resolution should be adopted?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent. If the motion to suspend the rules should be seconded, debate will then be in order for half an hour.

 A bill (H. R. 6011) granting an increase of pension to Robert Casey;
 A bill (H. R. 6029) for the relief of Jeremiah McCarty; and
 A bill (7617) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann E. Gridley.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BURNES.

Mr. GIBSON. Before the vote is taken I desire to ask if this motion is carried whether the vote on this bill will take precedence of the vote on the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. The river and harbor bill does not come up, under the practice of the House, until after the morning hour.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 147, noes 16.

So a second was ordered.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I wish to ask a parliamentary question. Does this motion include the amendments proposed by the committee; and will it be in order, if it does include them, to ask that they be now read in connection with the bill?

Mr. KEIFER. They will have to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks they must be read.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to submit this proposition: This bill has been printed and on the tables of members for a number of days. My proposition is that by unanimous consent we dispense now with the reading of this bill, but not to dispense with the reading of such amendments as the committee propose to offer or may permit to be offered in connection with it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. KEIFER. It will take all the afternoon; it is quite a long bill and I hope it will not be insisted upon. Let the amendments be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio to dispense with the reading of this bill and to have read only the amendments which are proposed by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. THOMAS (interrupting the reading). I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none. The objection being withdrawn, the Clerk will report the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Do I understand that there is unanimous consent asked again to pass this bill without having it read at all?

The SPEAKER. There was unanimous consent asked to dispense with the reading of the bill and to have read only the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, to which request the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] objected. The reading of the bill then was begun, after which the gentleman withdrew his objection. The Chair asked for further objection, and, there being none, unanimous consent was given to dispense with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk will now report the amendments.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I did not hear the request or I certainly should have objected to it. I desire to enter my protest now upon record against passing a bill in this manner without having it read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after line 156, the following:

"And all suits or proceedings pending in the district courts of Dakota and Washington Territories at the time of the passage of said act, and which would, if instituted after the passage of said act, be required to be brought in the new district created and provided for in said act, may be transferred by consent of the parties to said new district courts, and there disposed of in like manner and with like effect as if the same had been there instituted; and all writs and recognizances relating to such suits and proceedings so transferred shall be considered as belonging to the courts of the said new districts, respectively, in the same manner and with like effect as if they had issued or been taken in reference thereto originally; and the counties of Skamania and Spokane, in said Washington Territory, shall constitute part of the fourth judicial district thereof until the Legislature shall meet and otherwise provide."

The next amendment is as follows:

"For one clerk to continue the work of making a consolidated index of the Southern Claims Commission reports and claims referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act, and authorized by resolution of the House July 3, 1894, from March 4 to December 1, 1895, at $6 per day."

In line 113 strike out "50" and in lieu thereof insert "58."

After line 187 insert:

"For paper, express charges, and printing of national-bank notes, $40,000."

On page 13, after line 303, insert as follows:

"COURT OF CLAIMS.

"For payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims, as follows:

"To the Great Falls Manufacturing Company, $15,692, with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum from June 16, 1881; Sallie H. Palmer, $30; James W. Walz, $12,365.11; the Barber Match Company, $12,631; the James G. Hotchkiss Match Company, $470.31; William J. Jenkins, $527.52; the Saint Louis Wine Company, $32.30; the Home Bitters Company, $152.79; E. Wilder & Co., $61.20; John F. Henry & Co., $253.82; Bernard Riley, administrator of Thomas Gorman, $100; V. E. Manger and John Petrie, jr., $464.10; V. E. Manger, $183.60; Seth W. Fowle & Son, $135.20; Robert Selden, $100; Alexander C. Rhind, $250; Charles H. McBlair, $450; Stephen P. Quackenbush, $180.50; James H. Watmouth, $500; Dabney H. Maury, $100; Marius Duvall, $300; Douglas F. Forrest, $875; Marius Duvall, executor of Joshua R. Sands, deceased, $65; Augustus Elchele, $6,044.73; Mary H. Lanier, $375; Henry H. Lewis, $875; Samuel P. Carter, $187.50; William B. Sinclair, $300; Duncan N. Ingraham, $625; Laura M. Chilton, $150; Sarah L. Chandler, $120; Agnes R. Tilghman, $75; Elodie J. Minor, $400; Charles Thomas, $375; John S. Maury, $187.50; Cornelia A. Stanley, $375; Isaac Wilmoth, $43.33; the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company, $4,622.85; John W. Beaman, $91.26; Thaddeus Thayer, $809.20; Henry McGowan, $3,040; Ezekiel G. Byam, trading in the firm-name of Byam, Carlton & Co., $6,339.35; Austin Messenger, $5,826; William Roeder, $2,040; the Excelior Match Company, $1,043.09; Herman W. Newbauer, trading under the name of Newbauer & Co., $4,609; James Eaton, $3,410; Henry Stanton, $1,528.75; Phineas T. Ives, $696.79; R. Bendel & Co., $2,600; the Clark Match Company, $320; Aristides Welch, $500; Thomas Mootes, $375; Lelia I. Sinclair, $450; Elizabeth H. Spotts, $250; A. F. Warley, $187.50; Merced G. Brent, $375; William Leigh, $450; Eliza M. Fairfax, $450; Eliza H. Ramsay, $150; Van R. Morgan, $250; John T. Mason, $300; Frederick Chaffard, $450; M. C. Meigs, $3,370; Joseph W. Harrison, $31.78; in all $238,495.09; and a sufficient sum in addition thereto as may be necessary to pay the interest on the judgments in favor of the Great Falls Manufacturing Company and of James W. Harvey and James Livezey as above provided is hereby appropriated: Provided, That none of the aforesaid judgments shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired."

In lines 191 and 192 strike out the words "eighty-four, $317.35," and insert

"eighty-two, $234.67."

After line 576 insert: "To complete the new naval cruisers and dispatch-boat under construction and repair, $75,357.25. Under steam-engineering $86,983.57; and all balances of appropriations heretofore made under any bureau of the Navy Department for any one of said vessels may be used under the same bureau for any other of said vessels."

Insert after line 630, page 38: "To enable the Attorney-General to pay the State asylum for the care of insane criminals at Auburn, N. Y., for the United States convicts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, $936."

On page 38, in line 923, after the word "and," where it last occurs in said line, insert "53."

On page 42, after line 1016, insert, "to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for session employes of the House, as follows:

"For committee clerks, $1,302;

"For pages, $507.50;

"For messengers in the Post-Office, $96.00;

"For laborers, $157;

"For cloak-room men, $90.32; in all, $2,322.42."

Strike out lines 1017 to 1019 and insert: "For allowance to the parties named below in full of expense incurred by them in contested-election cases:

"To Martin Maginnis, $1,500;
"To A. C. Botkin, $1,300;
"To J. O. Broadhead, $1,000;
"To J. H. McLean, $1,000; and
"To George H. Craig, $750; in all, $5,450."

Insert after line 1022: "To pay Charles M. Shelley in full for expense incurred in his contested-election case, $500."

In line 1047, strike out "84" and insert "83." After the amendment last considered insert: "To pay Harry Neal for services as messenger to the Speaker's room, in addition to his pay as laborer, from December 1, 1883, to July 7, 1884, and from December 1, 1884, to March 4, 1885, at the rate of $40 per month, $409.30."

Mr. GIBSON (interrupting the reading of the amendments). I desire to ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk is now engaged reading the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. The reading can not be interrupted.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. This is not the time to do that.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the amendments.

Mr. GIBSON addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from West Virginia rise?

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment. I will state to the House that it provides for the payment of the pages according to a resolution passed at the last session of this House. The Comptroller will not allow the payment because of some technicality.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment which he sends to the desk. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay each of the pages borne upon the rolls at the close of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress the balance due them for the remaining twenty-four days of the month of July, 1884, under resolution of the House adopted July 7, 1884, $2,230; which sum shall be immediately available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia for unanimous consent to offer this amendment?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the question on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the balance of $3,342.44 to Robert Smalls for expenses due him for contesting the seat of G. D. Tillman in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. COOK. I object.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. BEACH. I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which cuts off requests for unanimous consent. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate—fifteen minutes in support of the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] and fifteen minutes against it.

Mr. LONG. I send up one more amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Office of the Tenth Census is hereby abolished, and the terms of office of the Superintendent and of all employees appointed under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1879, entitled "An act to provide for the taking of the tenth and subsequent censuses," or of any subsequent act relating to the Tenth Census, shall cease and terminate from the date of the passage of this resolution; and no further expenditures, whether for salaries or expenses, shall be made on account of the Tenth Census, except as hereinafter provided. The unfinished work of the Tenth Census shall be completed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, to whom the records and other property of the Census Office shall be transferred. And the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to appoint, from the date of the passage of this act, and for the term of one year from date of such appointments, a clerical force for duty in said division, which force shall consist of one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3, who shall also be a practical printer; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; and one copyist, at $900 per annum; and for the payment of the salaries of such force the sum of $6,900, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated; and any balances of appropriations for the Tenth Census heretofore made which shall remain unexpended at the date of the passage of this resolution shall be applied to the liquidation of any liabilities for the work of the Tenth Census which have been incurred heretofore and remain unpaid at such date; but this provision shall not apply to any unexpended balance of the appropriation for printing the report of the Tenth Census made by act of August 7, 1882, but such balance shall be applied as provided in that act. The foregoing provisions relating to the Tenth Census shall take effect from the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. There is another amendment sent up by the Committee on Appropriations which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse the Clerk of the House for postage-stamps, $73.

Mr. BURNES. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to correct a mere clerical error on line 716, page 30, of the bill? The words "the legal representatives of" should precede the words "William M.

Garvey," and those words "the legal representatives of" should go out where they appear in the next line; so that it will read:

Payment to legal representatives of William M. Garvey: To pay amount found due by the accounting officers to William M. Garvey, &c.

The SPEAKER. This a mere clerical error, which will be corrected if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Missouri will permit me I ask permission to offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employes of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 31 day of March, 1885, one month's extra pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sums shall be immediately available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. It is usual.

Mr. BURNES. I am constrained to object.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman will not object. This has been done at the close of every Congress for a number of years.

Mr. BURNES. It would give me a great deal of pleasure to agree to it, but the committee has not authorized me.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 335) to print 2,000 additional copies of Lieut. P. H. Ray's report of the International Polar Expedition to Point Barrow, Alaska;

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] has the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] if he will not withdraw his objection to the amendment I have offered?

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] knows that I would like to yield to him if I felt at liberty to do so. I will say this, however, that I am perhaps authorized by the committee to accept the suggestion that by unanimous consent a vote may be had in the House upon the proposition.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to that. Let us take the vote now.

Mr. BURNES. If we can have unanimous consent, of course the vote can be taken now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month's extra pay, at the compensation then paid them by law; which sum shall be immediately available.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the author of this amendment if it embraces all the employees?

Mr. KEIFER. All the employees.

Mr. COOK. I object.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, do not object. This is the same thing that has been done from one Congress to another.

Mr. COOK. I know it, and I object to it. [After a pause.] I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on that amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 147, noes 18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCOID. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. McCOID. I wish to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Buford Lee $180, Alexander Thomas, James Hall, and Charles Carter $260 each, being the difference of pay at $1 per day which they received and the usual rate of compensation at $2 per day during the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. STORM. I object. There are plenty of claims in that same situation.

Mr. McCOID. I hope the gentleman will not object. This is unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] has the floor.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, of all the bills that come before the House of Representatives perhaps none can be so safely passed under a suspension of the rules as the general deficiency bill. Its items of appropriation come, or ought to come, from existing laws and deficient appropriations by preceding legislation. Mere claims have no place in such a bill, and from it should be rigidly excluded everything not clearly authorized by law. If any question of fact is involved, or if any fact is to be found, the Committees on Claims should have the exclusive jurisdiction.

It is therefore a safe conclusion that no objections will be urged against anything that is in the bill; only those things left out of the bill can defeat its passage. Everything that is in the bill, I apprehend, will meet with the approval of every member upon this floor. The trouble is, if there be any, that there are some things outside of the bill which various gentlemen would like to have in it. In view of that fact, I beg to say that there may be some matters omitted from the bill which it would have been safe for the committee to have inserted and allowed, but so far as our limited time and strength would permit, we have given due consideration to everything submitted to us for investigation, and believe no substantial injustice has been done to any one in the exclusion of many items pressed upon our deliberations. It may, perhaps, be some consolation for me to say to gentlemen who believe that meritorious items have been omitted from this bill, that in the other end of the Capitol its provisions will be reviewed with great freedom and independence, and if amendments are made, a review will be had in conference that must be satisfactory to both bodies.

Mr. Speaker, general debate upon a general appropriation bill is, it seems to me, a misnomer. It is impossible to conclude what general debate would be appropriate to a general deficiency bill. It is a bill consisting of numerous items, and if we should take up item after item, it would occupy from now until after the 4th of March to consider the merits or, if you please, the demerits of them all. Hence, as we can not stop to consider the merits of each particular item, I will simply call attention to one principle that has guided us in the preparation of the bill.

Under existing law the accounting officers of the Treasury seem to be authorized to audit and allow certain claims against the Government, and when they shall have audited them it is made their duty to report them for the consideration of Congress. There is a deep desire on the part of certain gentlemen not members on this floor, but gentlemen interested outside, to construe the action of the accounting officers of the Treasury in these cases as adjudications and to give to such adjudications the form and effect of the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.

The committee in the preparation of this bill have acted upon the principle that the action of the accounting officers of the Treasury is only prima facie evidence, if that—merely presumptive evidence of a meritorious claim for appropriation. Wherever the element of claim was found to exist we refused to consider it, for the reason that we have here a Committee on Claims having jurisdiction of such matters, and we sought to avoid trespassing upon the authority or jurisdiction of a co-ordinate committee of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me I wish to ask him if section 4 of this bill, which seems to be intended as a statute of limitation against claims to be examined by the Treasury Department, is approved by the Treasury Department in the form in which it appears in the bill.

Mr. BURNES. I will answer my distinguished friend from Georgia by saying that section 4 of the bill is the work of a former Secretary of the Treasury, fully and warmly approved by him; and, so far as the committee have been informed, it has been approved by each succeeding Secretary of the Treasury for several years past.

Mr. BLOUNT. If my friend will allow me one other question I will not interrupt him further. I see in this bill a provision for the abolition of the National Board of Health. I wish to ask what is the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations as to providing in this or any other bill for protection against the appearance of cholera or any epidemic of that kind.

Mr. BURNES. The matter of the protection of the public health has been provided for most liberally in the sundry civil appropriation bill, by an appropriation to be disbursed at the discretion of the President.

Mr. BEACH. Does not this bill contain legislation—

Mr. BURNES. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BEACH. Upon a very important point?

Mr. BURNES. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BEACH. Does it not wipe out of existence the National Board of Health?

A MEMBER. It ought to be wiped out.

Mr. BURNES. The National Board of Health was wiped out a year ago, but its members did not know it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEACH. That is a mistake, Mr. Speaker. The board is still in existence. The act of 1879 under which it was created is still the law of the land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri). The gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] is not in order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will proceed.

Mr. BURNES. I was considering for a moment the force and effect we should give to claims audited by the Treasury Department. I have found in my investigation—and I think the Committee on Appropriations has about reached the same conclusion, perhaps unanimously—that it is not every audited claim that has either justice, or merit, or law in its favor. Therefore, as upon examination we find specific claims which it would be a wrong and an outrage to allow simply because of their being audited, we have concluded that they are not entitled to absolute verity. Congress can not abdicate its functions or transfer them to mere clerical agents in the Departments. Its authority and duty to adjudicate upon the rights of the Government and the rights of the people can not be so transferred or abandoned.

The work of these Department officers is not the constitutional and intelligent consideration and action of the Congress of the United States, and it must not be allowed to grow upon us as a substitute for direct Congressional investigation and decision by the proper committees. We have sought, therefore, to allow no appropriation without due consideration. The circumstances surrounding us, the condition of the business of the House, and the shortness of the session remaining are known to us all. We could earnestly wish for time to submit the work of the committee to the closest scrutiny of the House, but the necessity for my motion to pass this bill under a suspension of the rules must be apparent to every member. Reserving the remainder of my time, I yield to my friends on the other side, if general debate is desired.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I am ready to admit that there may be occasions when it is proper to pass an appropriation bill without discussion under a suspension of the rules. In the Forty-seventh Congress, when we had before us a tariff bill of which the country demanded the passage, it became necessary to pass the deficiency appropriation bill in this way. But in this case I called for a second for the purpose of demanding, and with the expectation of receiving, some explanation either from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] or the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] of the reasons for this extraordinary course. For if the supervision of the House of Representatives over the expenditure of the public money amounts to anything, it is when that supervision is exercised item by item. The passage of this bill in this way really demands an explanation, which has not been given.

Why is it that this bill has been so long delayed? It can not be on account of the pressure of other public business, for it is known to this House and to the country that the other public business of the country has not been transacted. Why, then, has this bill been delayed, and why is it that we are remitted by the gentleman from Missouri to the Senate of the United States for amendments? The gentleman from Missouri in the sole explanation which he has vouchsafed to give says that this is a bill eminently fit to pass under a suspension of the rules, if any is. Why? Because it is a deficiency bill; and he says that those items which have been adopted can safely pass. Why, sir, that is not an auditing of the public accounts. What the country has a right to have is a vote of the House of Representatives upon the demands and the rights of every citizen, and these ought to be presented here by the representatives of the people, who ought not to be told by the Committee on Appropriations that they can go to another body to have their case presented.

I hold it is just as much a right for a claimant to have his claim passed upon, even if it is rejected, as it is to have it passed upon and sustained. What hearing does a man get here? None at all. His sole hearing is before that self-constituted tribunal, the Committee on Appropriations—a valuable collection of gentlemen, but one uncommonly overworked—one that has so much business to do that it does not seem to be able to do it except under a suspension of the rules in this House.

I certainly hope that in the time reserved on the other side some explanation may be given; because members are put in this position: they can not freely vote against the passage of such a bill, because its failure may stop the necessary supplies of the Government. They are, as it were, coerced by the action of the committee. I do think that the committee owe to the country and to the House a further and fuller explanation of this matter.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] desires to go on now.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I will wait.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, perhaps at this stage of the session as wise a thing as could be done is to pass this bill under a suspension of the rules. That the bill might have been reported earlier is true. That many appropriations for deficiencies which have been omitted might have been recommended with as much propriety as those which have been recommended is, I have no doubt, true, and so state the fact to be.

However, I call the attention of the House to the fact that this is a much better deficiency bill than the one which was passed last year. That is not very high praise, but it is some. I hold in my hand estimates submitted last year by the Treasury Department, and not then allowed—estimates which have been resubmitted this year, and in large part allowed. I recollect that at the last session I stood here for a whole day offering amendments, contained in this list of estimates, line by line, subject by subject, explaining as best I could that there were hundreds of small claims which had passed the accounting officers—claims of soldiers and sailors, private soldiers and sailors—claims the payment of which was due and of such a character as had uniformly been appropriated for by previous Congresses.

Without rhyme or reason, under the lead of the Democratic Committee on Appropriations, a Democratic House refused to appropriate for them. Now they come at this session and put them in. I have here one claim as a sample: Joseph A. Steele, $91.50, commutation of rations under the law; due for seventeen or eighteen years for service in the late war. They refused to appropriate for that item, although it came recommended by the Auditor, had passed the Comptroller, and was verified by the Adjutant-General's official record. That, with three hundred claims just like it, they refused to appropriate for. When I went home this man, suffering from disability incurred in the army, poor, unable to work, came and asked me why we did not appropriate $91.50 to pay him what was due? He said he had been informed by the Comptroller that it could not be paid because the money was not appropriated. The only answer I could give him was that, forsooth, the money was not appropriated because it did not please a Democratic House to follow the precedents which had been followed by Democratic and Republican Houses since these claims had been made, namely, to pay them as they were audited.

Now, sir, what is true as to these claims of last year is also true in reference to them this year. It is no answer for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to say he had not time to investigate them. He had as much time to investigate them and just as much authority to put in many claims he has omitted that he had to put in those he has provided for. There are hundreds and hundreds of claims (and I ask his attention to it) put into this bill because they were audited at the Treasury Department and recommended, and never examined by him or any other member of the House.

As a general rule it is safe to follow the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. I do not mean universally, but generally. The law has created the Treasury Department with an excellent system of checks and balances, the Auditors stating accounts, the Comptroller investigating and passing upon them, backed up by the Secretary of the Treasury and all the official records of the Departments from which claims come under contract or law for services performed. When they pass upon a claim it is right; as a general rule, that Congress should appropriate the money to pay it. Congress generally has appropriated the money to pay claims under such circumstances when passed upon favorably by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

But now our Democratic friends refuse in many instances to make the appropriation.

I call attention to this that citizens—many of them soldiers and sailors—who are entitled to pay for services performed do not receive the same because this Democratic House refuses by law to authorize the money to be taken from the Treasury for that purpose.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, reserving my time.

Mr. BURNES. I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he desires to proceed at this time.

Mr. RANDALL. No; we have the right to close.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then I yield to my colleague [Mr. DINGLEY] for five minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to call the attention of the House to what seems to me to be a serious omission in this deficiency bill. First of all I regret exceedingly the Committee on Appropriations should have deferred action to so late a day. We find ourselves unable to consider the bill item by item.

What I wish especially to call to the attention of the House is the omission of a deficiency appropriation asked by the Secretary of the Interior for printing and binding. He asks for $60,000 for that purpose. At the last session the appropriation asked for was reduced from $402,000 to $342,000, and that caused necessarily a deficiency of $60,000 in the printing and binding of the Interior Department, covering the printing of the Patent Office, of the Indian Bureau, of the Educational Office, and of all the other bureaus. It seems to me a matter of routine like this, when every gentleman knows it will be needed, to omit an appropriation of that kind asked for by the Secretary and recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, even with the expectation the Senate will insert it, is not meeting the just demands upon this House. I suggest to the chairman of the subcommittee this omission ought to be supplied before the bill leaves the House. By unanimous consent the item can be inserted. The Department asks for $60,000, and it should be granted.

Mr. LONG. From personal examination of the matter I am sure it ought to go in.

Mr. BURNES. I will answer the gentleman from Maine by saying the Interior Department has expended, out of the appropriation of $342,000, in the first five months $185,000, in round numbers. That was an expenditure in the first five months of the current fiscal year. At present there are but $31,000 left of the fund, but it will be perceived that an extraordinarily large amount has been expended in less than the first half of the year. I will say frankly that a desire on the part of the committee to look into what seems to be an abuse generally in all this printing business by the Departments determined the majority of the committee not to make an additional appropriation for the balance of the current year.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desired simply to call the attention of the gentleman and of the committee to the fact that the printing of the Patent Office reports, which are sold in the community, is dependent upon our making that appropriation. There should also be deducted, which was not deducted in the report, all the receipts from the sale of Patent-Office documents. If there is no appropriation for this purpose it will be impossible for the Department to go on with the printing of the ordinary Patent-Office reports that sell to the public everywhere for their convenience.

I repeat, I desire simply to call the attention of the gentleman and of this committee to these facts, leaving to themselves the responsibility of supplying the omission. This printing, I will here add, is all required by law.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, a deficiency bill is necessary, because the amounts which were embraced in the general appropriation bills at the last session of Congress for the various objects for which appropriations were made were not enough, in the judgment of those who administered the affairs of the Departments of the Government generally, to carry on those affairs, and hence it is necessary to provide a sum sufficient to meet these expenditures up to the 30th of June—which necessitates a bill of this character.

A deficiency bill ought not in reality to contain any claims; but there is a practice which has crept into the preparation of this bill which has permitted the incorporation of appropriations to pay the judgments of the Court of Claims, and also to pay audited claims which have been passed upon by the proper officers of the Departments under existing law. Now, as to the bill itself, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations permit me to say that there has been no delay on the part of that committee in its preparation.

The estimates of deficiencies did not come to us at all until the 20th of January, and the supplemental estimates of the deficiencies did not reach us until the seventh day of the present month. The audited claims did not reach this House, if my memory serves me right, until the 29th day of January just past. It required then five days to print these various estimates and documents which contain the audited claims. So the House will at once see that there has been no delay whatever in presenting this bill for its consideration; and if there be a bill which can be safely passed under a suspension of the rules it is a bill of this character, because it contains no original matter.

It contains simply appropriations which were not sufficient, under the administration of the general objects of appropriations, to execute the laws of the Government.

Let me say as to claims that as much time was given to the consideration of them as it was possible for the committee to give since about the 4th day of February until this time. It would be a herculean task, and an impossible physical and mental labor, to undertake to delve into the merits of each of the numerous claims which may be presented; and I for one will never assent, so far as my vote is concerned, nor have I in committee allowed the position to be taken, that the mere auditing of a claim by the Department is conclusive upon Congress.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then would it not be a good plan to divide up the appropriation bills among the several committees, so that they may have an opportunity of looking into the work?

Mr. RANDALL. I know very well what the gentleman from Maine is driving at.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Certainly you do.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not go by indirection at anything. I will meet the question when it comes up. But in justification of the committee, and in conclusion, let me say again that there has been no time wasted in the consideration of these subjects, and that they had the unlimited attention of the subcommittee who prepared this bill from the very moment that they were received up to the time that they were reported to the general committee and passed upon by them. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. I simply desire to say as a member of the subcommittee which prepared this bill, that since it was placed in their charge it has received diligent attention from them. I quite agree in many of the criticisms which have been passed on the bill. I doubt very much the policy of passing a bill of this importance, which involves an appropriation of money, under suspension of the rules. But I do desire to say that, from a thorough study of the bill, I quite agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that it is not only an improvement on the deficiency bill of last year, but, so far as it goes, it is a very good bill. Its fault is not in what it contains, but in what it does not contain. And while I believe there should be some items put in this bill that are not here, I simply desire to say, in the one moment left me, that I believe the House will make no mistake in passing the bill as it is.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments which have been read; and on that question the yeas and nays will be taken.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to inquire if it is necessary that the yeas and nays should be taken, the motion being to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is a motion to suspend all the rules, including that which requires the yeas and nays to be taken as well as the rest.

Mr. ANDERSON. When the bill has not been read, and it is proposed to pass it under a suspension of the rules, I think we should have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 240, nays 33, not voting 46; as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

There was no objection.

Mr. RYAN. I am paired with Mr. BLACKBURN, of Kentucky, but I am advised by that gentleman's friends that if present he would vote as I have voted. I therefore let my vote stand.

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. JORDAN with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. HURD with Mr. RICE.

The following members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. ELLWOOD.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. HATCH, of Michigan.

Mr. CLAY with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. CONVERSE with Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois.

The following members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. RYAN with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. NEECE with Mr. CUTCHEON.

Mr. LOWRY. I ask to be permitted to record my vote. I was in the Hall during the second roll-call and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the name of the gentleman will be called.

Mr. LOWRY. I vote "ay."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has been announced as paired on this vote.

Mr. LOWRY. That was an involuntary pair. I vote "ay."
The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

DR. W. LEIGH BURTON.

The SPEAKER. The hour under the special rule begins at 1 o'clock. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN S. WISE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the report in relation to the pending bill read.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, is this the proper time to offer an objection to this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN S. WISE], who is entitled to five minutes in support of the bill, asks for the reading of the report. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred bill H. R. 8021, for the relief of Dr. W. Leigh Burton, have had the same under consideration and report: A patent was granted Dr. Burton, No. 88006, dated March 23, 1869, for "improvement in electro-heating," and antedated March 12, 1869. The following describes the invention:

The electric heater is based on the well-known fact that electricity, in passing through a conductor of insufficient capacity, such, for instance, as a wire of small diameter, evolves or develops heat.

It is also well known that a wire of any great length and small diameter will not conduct a strong current of electricity without difficulty and loss; for as the wire becomes heated its resistance is increased, and in consequence the heat becomes so great that the wire will be fused.

The object of this invention is to obviate this difficulty by enabling a strong current of electricity to pass through a heat-evolving apparatus of any length; and to this end it consists of an electrical conducting chain or coil, with intervals of small conducting power, in traversing which the electricity will be caused to develop heat; and further, in interposing between said obstructing intervals free conductors of much larger size, which constitute absorbents and radiators of heat. The heater exhibited, therefore, consists of an alternate arrangement of obstructing media and free conductors or radiators, arranged in a compact form, and insulated within a suitable fire-proof casing, covered by a metal plate.

In this heater the obstructing media consists of platinum wire No. 25, English standard, and the free conductors of copper blocks one and three-fourths inches in length and one-half inch square. The aggregate length of the obstructing media is about seven inches, and the weight of the fifty-seven blocks of copper about eight pounds. The entire length of chain or coil is about ten feet. It rests on a metallic bed insulated with mica, and is reflexed in lengths of a foot, the insulation between the reflexions being accomplished with strips of mica one-half inch wide. This is contained within an iron box, 18 by 12 inches, the spaces between the apparatus and sides of the box being filled in with mixture of plaster and asbestos. Connection is made with an electrical current by means of the two ends of the coil passing through glass insulators, terminating in binding screws on the outside of the case.

Owing to the invention being in advance of the state of the art, Dr. Burton has not received a dollar for his twenty years' study and labor. Now he has a chance to place his invention where it will to some extent remunerate him for his time, trouble, and expense. Therefore the committee believe that he ought to have an opportunity to go before the Committee on Patents with an application for an extension of his patent. We recommend the passage of the bill without amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire, when the proper time comes, to oppose this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN S. WISE] has one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can add to what is stated in the report. The invention made by Dr. Burton was, as is there stated, in advance of the discoveries in the science to which it relates; and although he has spent a great deal of money and a great deal of time in connection with the invention, he has never received a dollar for it. It is only within the last six months that it has been available, and it is solely for the purpose of allowing him to reap the legitimate fruits of his own labor, ingenuity, and expenditure of money that this bill is presented.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, this presents the question of the extension of patents. In this particular case the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN S. WISE] and the report state that the inventor has not obtained any benefit from his invention; but it is clear that that neglect is not the fault of the United States Government.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. ANDERSON. Not now. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is either his own fault or his own misfortune if he has not profited by this invention. So that the question presented to the House is this: Shall a patent be extended? Now, for one, I wish to state that I am wholly opposed to the extension of a patent to anybody. For seventeen years this gentleman has had the opportunity to place his invention. He has not done so, and now he comes here and asks for a renewal of it, or what amounts to that, for seventeen years more.

Mr. VANCE. Seven years.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, seven years. Now, sir, if this invention is of value to anybody, it is of value to the consumer; and when the United States Government has for seventeen years allowed this inventor an opportunity to obtain the financial benefit of his invention—

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Will the gentleman allow me to say that this inventor has not obtained a dollar from it?

Mr. ANDERSON. Very well; that was not the fault of the Government. My point is that the Government is not called upon to step in now and give him this further benefit. It seems to me that in dealing with this patent question some attention should be paid to the people.

Mr. TUCKER. Is it not the object of the law to secure to the patentee the benefit of his idea—his invention?

Mr. ANDERSON. For seventeen years the Government has done that in this case, and it is not our fault if he has not made money out of his invention; and now if there be a dollar to be made out of it, or half a million dollars, or a million dollars, why not let the people have the benefit of it? In this matter of electrical apparatus there are the most complete monopolies that exist in the country, and they are created and maintained by the patent system, in so much that the telephone, the electric wire, your whole electrical apparatus, is to-day in the hands of a very few men, and gentlemen well know that when they come to consider the tariff they find that immense sums are extorted from the people by means of patents, apart from the sums properly collected as duties. I am opposing this bill, not because I am opposed to this particular patent or this particular gentleman. I would be glad indeed if he should make out of his invention all that can possibly be made out of it. I am opposing the bill on principle; on the principle that the people of the United States have some rights which ought to be respected, and that this House is not called upon to extend any patent.

Mr. VANCE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman has had his time.

Mr. VANCE. No, sir; I have not had any time.

Mr. ANDERSON. You might have had it.

Mr. VANCE. Will you yield to me for a minute?

Mr. ANDERSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I have not time.

Mr. VANCE. Go on, then.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the first of these cases that has been brought up. Where there is an extension of a patent you will ordinarily find large sums of money behind it. When men extend or renew patents they do so because they are valuable, and I desire to raise now upon this case the general question as to the renewal or extension of patents. I ask gentlemen to consider what vast sums—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Mr. Speaker, have I any time left?

The SPEAKER. The time prescribed for debate by the rule has expired. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER] objects. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] Twenty-three gentlemen have risen to object—more than a sufficient number under the rule—and the bill will be laid aside.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Mr. GLASCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1810) for the erection of a public building at Sacramento, Cal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office, land office, internal-revenue office, signal office, and other Government offices, at the city of Sacramento, Cal. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of California shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes are now allowed for debate.

Mr. GLASCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I think the House will concede that I have not often inflicted myself upon its patience. I wish to state in a few words the absolute necessity for the passage of this bill.

Sacramento is the capital of the State of California. According to the report of the House committee which I hold in my hand its population is about 30,000. In reality its population is nearly 35,000. It is one of the few capital cities in the United States, if not the only one, having within its limits no public building of the Government of the United States. There are four Government offices located in that city—the signal-service office, the internal-revenue office, the post-office, and the land office. The Government is now paying as rent for its offices in that city $4,200 a year, representing 6 per cent. on a capitalization of nearly three-fourths of the amount asked for in this bill. It would be economy on the part of the Government to expend the modest sum here asked for—only $100,000—for the erection of a public building at that place.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the residue of my time to answer any questions that may be asked. I hope the House will allow this bill to go through.

Mr. STORM. Is there a report on this subject?

Mr. GLASCOCK. I send to the desk the report of the House committee upon a bill precisely like this Senate bill.

Mr. COOK. Before the report is read, I wish to ask the gentleman from California whether there are any Federal courts held at Sacramento?

Mr. GLASCOCK. Not one.

Mr. COOK. That is all.

The report (by Mr. BREITUNG) was read, as follows:

The committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 105) to provide for the erection of a post-office building at Sacramento, Cal., and appropriating $100,000 therefor, beg leave to favorably report the accompanying substitute for said bill, and recommend its passage for the following reasons, namely:

Sacramento is the capital of the State of California, and is a city of about 30,000 inhabitants.

Four departments of the United States Government have offices in the city, namely, the post-office, the land office, the internal-revenue office, and the signal office.

All of said offices are now rented, and are insufficient and inconvenient for the transaction of the business appertaining thereto, and their books, records, and papers are without security from destruction by fire.

The location of said offices is inconvenient, inasmuch as no two of them are in the same building, or even in the same locality.

The annual rental now paid by the United States Government for the inadequate and unsafe quarters now used for said offices is $4,200.

The business of said offices is large, and increasing, as may be seen from the following statistics of the business transacted at the post-office at Sacramento:

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. COOK. I yield a moment to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], who wishes to offer an amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman from California will accept an amendment to this bill, in the usual form, so as to avoid the approval of any plan which will ultimately require a larger expenditure than the amount which this bill appropriates. If this amendment be accepted I shall not object to the bill.

I wish to say in this connection that the back door of the Treasury seems to have been opened by the Appropriations Committee in the sundry civil bill, and the bills for public buildings brought up under this order are opening wide the front door. When we find that now the very "watch-dogs" seem to be relaxing their vigilance at the back door of the Treasury, I think it about time that we should close the front door. But I will not raise objection to this bill if the amendment I have indicated be accepted.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after "dollars," in line 9, the following:

"And no plan shall be approved that will involve for site and building, including approaches thereto, an expenditure greater than the sum herein appropriated."

Mr. GLASCOCK. Mr. Speaker, nothing would afford me greater pleasure than to accept this amendment, were it not the fact that at this late stage of the session it would be almost impossible to get the bill as amended through the Senate. I trust, therefore, the gentleman will not press the amendment now; but I am willing that a vote of the House be taken upon it; and if the House decides that the amendment is proper I will submit.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is all I ask. Of course the amendment does not come up till the bill is before the House.

The SPEAKER. If the House should decide to consider the bill the amendment will be in order.

Mr. COOK. We want to know whether the gentleman from California will accept the amendment?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to send up the amendment to be pending when the bill shall come before the House.

The SPEAKER. It can not be pending yet, because the House has not yet decided to consider the bill. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] moves an amendment, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after "dollars," in line 9:

"And no plan shall be approved that will involve for site and building, including approaches thereto, an expenditure greater than the sum herein appropriated."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GLASCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOULTON, ME.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask the House to take up and pass the bill (H. R. 707) to provide for the erection of a public building at the town of Houlton, Me.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise procure a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the town of Houlton, in the State of Maine, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States custom-house and post-office, and for other Government uses. The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $50,000; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Maine shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, recognizing as I do the importance of economizing time, I will not ask for the reading of the entire report of the committee, which was unanimously favorable to the passage of this bill, but will very briefly state some of the substantial points.

The town of Houlton, in which it is proposed to erect this custom-house and post-office building, is the shire town of the county of Aroostook, in the State of Maine, the Aroostook customs district comprising a territory about as large as that of the State of Massachusetts, with a frontier line of some two hundred and fifty to two hundred and seventy miles. The customs collections there rank high among the collections of the districts of the State of Maine. The report gives figures showing the very rapid development of that section of the State, its increase in the last decade having been more than 40 per cent. It is the most rapidly growing section of the State of Maine.

For the thirty-one and a half months from 1878 to 1881 the customs collections in the district amounted to $38,311. For the thirty-one and a half months ending November, 1883, the customs collections there amounted to $92,673, an increase of nearly threefold, and the later returns show that the increase is progressing.

Mr. MILLS. What is the population?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The population of the district of Aroostook has increased, as I have said, more than 40 per cent. during the last decade, and is now about 50,000. The population of the town of Houlton, which is the shire town of the county and of the district, was about 4,000 in 1880, and is now about 6,000. It is the business center of that region. It is the railroad terminus.

Mr. MILLS. Is there a Federal court there?

Mr. BOUTELLE. No Federal court is held there now. This bill provides for a custom-house and post-office building. The post-office is a distributing office for that large section of country. The amount received for money-orders during the year ending June 30 last was $17,000 and the amount paid $24,522. I will state here, Mr. Speaker, that the accommodations at present are entirely inadequate to the necessities of the customs office and post-office.

I desire to say further, in view of the fact that recommendations have been made by the Secretary of the Treasury heretofore in regard to certain possible consolidations of districts in the State of Maine and New England, that under any consolidation which may be made the town of Houlton will be the natural headquarters for the district of that section. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STORM. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything I can say will stop this irresistible raid upon the Treasury, for it seems after all there are hardly ten righteous in this House to save the Treasury from plunder. Nevertheless I shall attempt to call the attention of the House to this subject, not with a view of specially antagonizing this particular bill, because the objection I make now would lie against all bills we have considered heretofore, and I have no doubt would lie against three-fourths of all that may come up hereafter for consideration.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, the fact of a deficiency in the revenues of any government is a misfortune, but I still think there is a greater misfortune to any government when it finds itself with a large surplus in its treasury. We have seen bills passed in this House within the last week, and bills of like character no doubt will be passed during the next six days, which would never have been thought of—never stood the ghost of a chance of passing had there been a deficit instead of an excess of revenue. It is because there is a surplus in the Treasury, which a large number of members of the House on both sides seem determined to get out, that it is utterly impossible to stay this raid.

We are erecting public buildings at towns that our school geographies heretofore never heard of. Yesterday we allowed a public building in a town which no railroad has yet reached. We are now asked to allow a public building in a town—I do not know how old it is—which during the whole century up to 1880 had never more than 4,000 inhabitants. And a remarkable fact with all these towns is that they have all had such rapid growth or increase of population between 1880 and the present time. [Laughter.]

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, one of two things ought to be done. We should stop here with these public buildings for towns of one, two, three, or four thousand inhabitants, or else we ought to open the door and let every member decide upon the location of a public building and make appropriation of money for it.

Mr. MONEY. Offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes, and it would go through I have no doubt. Governor Allen, of Ohio, once said, you might as well undertake to run an ice-house in hell as an economical government with a surplus in the treasury. [Laughter.] I have come to the conclusion he was about right. I think this a good place to draw the line—in the case of a town of 4,000 inhabitants without a court simply for a post-office, I suppose.

A MEMBER. And a custom-house.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Custom-house and post-office. Let us draw the line here, or let every member in the House have a public building.

Thirty public buildings are reported in the sundry civil bill. Seventy-two have been reported to the House from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Thirty, as I have said, come from the Committee on Appropriations in the sundry civil bill. How many millions they will amount to I do not know. I have not had time to make the calculation. The Treasury is being robbed from both sides, by the front door and by the back door. Let us draw the line somewhere. I think it is right to draw the line here.

Mr. WELLER. I ask whether the gentleman from Ohio is willing to stand up now and commence the work of drawing the line? I have been waiting for that a long time.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate is exhausted. Is there objection?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The objection was sustained—18 voting in the affirmative; and so the bill was not taken up for present consideration.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LA CROSSE, WIS.

Mr. WOODWARD. I call up under the rule the bill (S. 78) for the erection of a public building at La Crosse, Wis.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, internal-revenue office, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of La Crosse, Wis. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than fifty feet, including streets and alleys; and that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Wisconsin shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. WOODWARD. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States has at the city of La Crosse a post-office, two land offices, surveyor of customs, and collector of internal revenue. It maintains there a marine hospital, post-office, land office, and for the last fifteen years the United States courts have been held in that city under authority of law passed in 1870, and the Government has been borrowing the county court-house for the use of its officers. This, I think, Mr. Speaker, constitutes a sufficient ground for asking this appropriation for a public building at this point. The public business requires and justifies it.

As to the city itself, I have only to say that it is located on the Mississippi River at the mouth of a large stream; that it is a true railroad center; that these roads radiate to six different points of the compass from it; that it has large business connections by railroads as well as by the river, and that its manufactures are important and constantly increasing.

In 1880, by the census of that year, the city had a population of 15,000. Since then, not less than 1,500 additional dwelling-houses have been put up in the city, and by an accurate census that has been taken recently it is ascertained that the population at the close of the year 1883 was over 20,000.

I hope objection will not be made to the consideration of the bill. I think it is as meritorious as any measure presented to the House at this session. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that we are exhausting the surplus too rapidly, and I fear that just now this controversy will take a partisan direction. I shall not, however, contribute to that end. My first objection to this bill is that the construction of this public building will cost money. Now if this economical Congress, with the assistance of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, can only devise some plan by which brick and mortar may be made and labor performed without costing anything, I shall vote for all these bills. Then I do not believe the Government of the United States needs public buildings, any way. What is the necessity for them? Why do we not buy a big circus-tent—

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. And take it around.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. A caravan of wagons, and send the court and the district attorney and the pension agent and the revenue collectors around through the country and let them tent out? [Laughter.]

Well, I do not know whether gentlemen regard the few remarks that I have been making as against the measure or not.

Mr. WELLER. It is difficult to tell, I guess.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I want to say, however, that I believe just at this time there can be no more judicious expenditure of the public moneys than in the construction of necessary public buildings. Labor is out of employment all over the country.

Mr. WELLER. The product of Republican maladministration, I reckon. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Did somebody speak?

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, there did. [Great laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have said that labor is seeking employment. For reasons that I need not give if I knew, manufacturing establishments are closed and the trustees of the poor are employed day by day in distributing charity. I wish it were possible for the Government of the United States to open the Treasury at such a time as this and allow every necessary work to be constructed, and that the people who to-day cry for bread might receive a remunerative return for their labor. It would not be waste. I am not claiming it as a charity. I say that the Government is in a condition to do this, and it ought to be done, and now is the time. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing but inexpressible contempt for that niggardly parsimony which says let us stand at the door of the Treasury and allow no cent to come out of it unless it can go in the direction which we individually are pleased to indicate. [Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STORM. Which side has the gentleman from Indiana spoken on?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana spoke in his own time and right.

Mr. STORM. But to what side was the time occupied by the gentleman charged—in opposition or in favor of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman.

Mr. STORM. The gentleman from Wisconsin was heard himself in behalf of the bill, and the Chair I supposed would yield the remainder of the time to those who opposed the bill. I want to know; therefore, whether the time occupied by the gentleman from Indiana is charged for or against the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not for the Chair to determine.

Mr. STORM. I suppose it is difficult to determine what side the gentleman occupied.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana rose and no other gentleman claimed the floor, nor was objection made to his occupying it.

Mr. WOODWARD. I would like to offer myself two amendments; one of them similar to those which have been offered to other bills of this character.

The SPEAKER. The first question is, Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODWARD. I now ask the adoption of the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert before the word "provided" in line 12 of the printed bill:

"And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause plans and specifications of said building to be prepared, and said plans and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building exceeding the portion of $100,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for. No plan shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum which remains after paying for the site of said building."

Also add as an additional section:

"Sec. 2. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WOODWARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPPLIES TO INDIANS OF MINNESOTA 1860-'62.

Mr. STRAIT. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and determine the amounts due licensed traders, citizens of the United States, for supplies furnished, in the course of trade and business, to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the outbreak and massacre of said Indians in August, 1862, and for which damages were not awarded by the commissioners appointed under the act entitled "An act for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians," approved February 16, 1863, for the reason that said act limited the action of said commissioners to claims arising from depredations, and did not authorize them to act upon claims arising upon contract or upon accounts for supplies furnished; and the said claims, when ascertained, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior out of the money hereby appropriated.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the foregoing section the sum of $120,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STRAIT. This bill has been favorably reported to the House every time it has been introduced for the last six or eight Congresses. The Senate has passed the same or a similar bill during the past five Congresses. The present bill has been reported favorably to the House from the Committee on Indian Affairs by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STEVENS]. I yield to that gentleman for a moment.

Mr. STEVENS. The object of this bill is to make remuneration to certain licensed traders on the Sioux reserve for property taken and destroyed by the Indians and for provisions and supplies furnished to the Indians at the request of the then Indian agent. In 1862 the Indians were gathered together at the regular agencies in Minnesota for the purpose of receiving their annuities, but owing to the troubles existing at that time the agents did not appear and the payments were not made. The Indians became dissatisfied. As the agents state they became "very ugly, threatening death and disturbances." The agents applied to the licensed traders who were there by the authority of law to furnish supplies to these Indians. That was done; but the annuities not coming for a long time, about a month after these supplies were furnished the Sioux outbreak, with the facts of which every member of this House is probably familiar, took place. A large number of people were killed and the property of these traders was destroyed.

In the following February Congress by an act confiscated all of the funds belonging to these Indians; it confiscated all of their annuities and covered them into the Treasury of the United States. Several claims have been paid by acts of various Congresses since that. There is now, not at the credit of the Indians, because it is confiscated money, but of the original funds belonging to these Indians there are now nearly $4,000,000 in the Treasury.

The object of this bill is to allow the Secretary of the Interior to take the necessary evidence, get the necessary proof, and ascertain the amount of supplies furnished to these Indians by the authority of Mr. Galbraith, who was then agent. The proof is clear and distinct as to the losses and as to the authority given by the agent to these traders to furnish the supplies.

Mr. ANDERSON. What is the aggregate amount covered by the bill?

Mr. STEVENS. It will not exceed $100,000; I should say about $70,000. This bill provides that an amount not to exceed $100,000 shall be paid for this purpose; and as I have said the Indians, of what once was theirs, have now in the Treasury about $4,000,000.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York whether it is claimed that this bill stands on higher ground than the claims for other property destroyed by Indian depredations?

Mr. STEVENS. There is this distinction: that this property and these supplies, bread, flour, and various kinds of provisions, were furnished by request of the Indian agent to prevent the Indians from committing the outbreak which did actually occur shortly afterward.

Mr. COOK. What reason exists for paying the post-traders for the property destroyed by the Indians that does not exist for paying for the property of the settlers or other parties destroyed by the Indians during the outbreak?

Mr. STEVENS. It has been the practice of Congress continually where Indians under control of the Government have destroyed the property of those who were there by proper license of the Government to reimburse those licensed traders for their losses.

Mr. ELLIS. With the permission of the gentleman from New York I will state that it is one of the very treaty stipulations with these Indians that these depredation claims shall be paid.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank my friend from Louisiana for his suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The five minutes allowed in support of the bill have expired.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is there a report in the case?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to have it read?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think it had better be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the report is somewhat lengthy.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then I do not call for the reading.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make an inquiry as to the funds out of which this money will be paid. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. STEVENS] to say that immediately after this massacre occurred the funds belonging to this tribe of Indians were covered into the Treasury as confiscated money. The case, as I understand, is put on the ground that it is an appropriation virtually of that money which ought to go to the payment of these claims. Has the gentleman any objection, to avoid any mistake, to that being stated in the bill, so that it shall appear that it is not money out of the public Treasury which is appropriated? My friend from New York will agree with me that the United States should not be held responsible for the acts of spoliation committed by this Indian tribe, and that the Government should only be held liable on the ground of having appropriated to its own use money which might otherwise have been appropriated to the payment of these claims.

Now, has the gentleman any objection to adding this provision:

That said sum shall only be paid out of money which heretofore belonged to said tribe, if any, and has been confiscated by the United States.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to that, sir; I am willing to accept it.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if the principle of this bill were enacted into law, even with the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and followed as a precedent, the Treasury of the United States could not pay the claims that would come against the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause]. Only nine gentlemen have risen—not a sufficient number under the rule. The bill is before the House, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Provided, however, That said sum shall only be paid out of money which heretofore belonged to said tribe, if any, and has been confiscated by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I have one or two amendments which I have been instructed by the committee to offer, as follows:

In line 7 of the printed bill strike out "August" and insert "June 1."

In line 8, after the word "sixty," insert "one."

In section 2, line 3, strike out the words "and twenty;" so that it will read "one hundred thousand dollars."

The amendments were severally agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this is a claim not founded upon any provision of law, made by persons not in the line of the discharge of any duty to the United States. It is a voluntary creation of a demand against the Government, without its consent or authority. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Unless there be objection, the title will be amended to conform to the amendments made in the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour set apart under the special rule has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 130, noes 21—more than two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a report. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, there are two or three gentlemen who have reports which they desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is insisted upon by gentlemen on the left.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the Chair will enforce it; but a privileged report is in order.

PORTAGE LAKE CANAL COMPANY LANDS.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 344) relative to lands selected by the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Canal Company.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] inform the Chair whether this restores lands to the public domain?

Mr. HENLEY. It authorizes the Attorney-General to do so.

The SPEAKER. Then it is privileged under the order of the House. The joint resolution was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

FISH IN THE POTOMAC.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report. I present a report from a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3108) to protect the fish in the Potomac, in the District of Columbia, and to provide a spawning-ground for shad and herring in the said Potomac River, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same in the following form:

"SEC. 3. That from and after three months from the date of the passage of this act it shall be unlawful to allow any tar, oil, ammoniacal liquor, or other waste products of any gas works, or of works engaged in using such products, or any waste product whatever of any mechanical, chemical, manufacturing, or refining establishment, to flow into or be deposited in Rock Creek or the Potomac River or any of its tributaries within the District of Columbia, or into any pipe or conduit leading to the same; and any one guilty of violating this section shall, on conviction, as provided in section 2 of this act, be fined not less than $10 or more than $100, for each and every day during which said violation shall continue; to be prosecuted for and recovered as provided in the preceding section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN S. BARBOUR,
J. THOMAS SPRIGGS,
J. LEWIS MCCOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.
E. G. LAPHAM,
W. J. SEWELL,
JAMES B. GROOME,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

VENTILATION OF THE HALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HARDY, from the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, submitted a report accompanied with the following resolution; which was ordered to be printed and laid over:

Resolved, That the proposition of the Exhaust Ventilation Company, of Chicago, to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, and herewith reported, be, and the same is hereby, accepted; and that said company be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to proceed with the introduction of their proposed system in accordance with the terms of said proposition; the work not to be paid for until it shall be certified by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, and the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, who shall have power to take the opinion of such experts as they may deem advisable, that the said company shall have performed their contract and have succeeded in improving the ventilation of the Hall of the House of Representatives, which certificate shall be made by them on or before the 15th day of June, 1886; it being understood that on failure by said company to receive such certificate they shall, if they have changed, interfered with, or disarranged the present system, restore it to its present condition without delay or cost to the Government.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, which is the unfinished business coming over from yesterday.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] yields to me—

Mr. PAYSON. I demand the regular order.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] insists on the regular order, which is the river and harbor appropriation bill, coming over from yesterday as unfinished business. The question is on concurring in the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to inquire whether the previous question was ordered yesterday on this bill?

The SPEAKER. It was ordered upon the amendments and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. It was not ordered on the passage, because the bill has not reached that stage.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. By the RECORD it does not appear that the previous question was ordered yesterday.

The SPEAKER. It so appears in the Journal.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Is it in order still to offer amendments without debate?

The SPEAKER. It is not; no amendments are now in order. The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will be read. Is a separate vote demanded on each of these amendments?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will not insist on a separate vote on all these verbal amendments.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have no desire to take up time unnecessarily. When the question comes on any amendment merely verbal, I am willing to waive a separate vote. But I do not wish to waive the right to a separate vote on certain amendments to this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I only asked that the vote might be waived as to verbal amendments, such as those relating to surveys.

Mr. ANDERSON. We can determine about that as the amendments are reached. I will indicate when I desire a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read, and when no objection is made, will be considered as agreed to without a formal vote.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire, by unanimous consent, and the good will of the committee, which I trust I shall have, to strike out, on page 5, in line 103, the words "five thousand dollars" and insert "twenty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. WILLIS. That relates to New York Harbor; and the committee, as I understand, have no objection to it.

Mr. MURPHY. I will inquire of the chairman of our committee when that conclusion was arrived at by the committee?

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman objects, it never has been arrived at.

Mr. MURPHY. I only wanted that statement made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 113 insert the following:

"That the United States harbor board, herein provided for, shall report a plan and estimate for obtaining a permanent channel sufficient for the wants of commerce over the Sandy Hook bar entrance into New York Harbor."

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I have the impression that the provision for the harbor board is now out of the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is.

The SPEAKER. But the amendments must either be agreed to or rejected.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to have that amendment changed by striking out the language as to the harbor board.

Mr. REAGAN. No; we will take a vote upon restoring the harbor board.

Mr. COX, of New York. As this is a proposition for a survey, I would suggest, in order to make the bill harmonious—

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No one knows that better than the gentleman from New York.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 38, noes 19.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 173 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "two hundred;" so as to read: "Improving harbor at Baltimore, Md.: Continuing improvement, $200,000."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 41, noes 27.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 64. So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was requested was read, as follows:

Strike out from line 213 to line 305, inclusive, and insert: "For improving Galveston Harbor, $500,000; and the harbor board herein provided are directed to proceed at once to examine, survey, and report to the Secretary of War, for his approval, plans, specifications, and estimates for said improvement; and when said plans, specifications, and estimates shall have been approved, said work shall be carried forward with all possible expedition."

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I raise the point of order on this amendment that in good faith this has no business here.

Mr. THOMAS. Regular order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I claim it has not been adopted in committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It is not introduced in good faith.

The SPEAKER. That is not a point of order. The Chair understands the gentleman's point of order to be that this amendment is erroneously included in the bill and was not adopted in committee.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Precisely so.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not understand what the member from Kentucky means. Does he say the Committee of the Whole did not adopt this?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands him.

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman says in the first place this was not adopted, and in the second place that it was not offered in good faith. I want to say in the first place, Mr. Speaker, that it was adopted by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and in the second place that it was recommended by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. WILLIS. We ask its passage, as it was offered in good faith and was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do except with the question of order, and the Chair is compelled to overrule that because the amendment has been reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as one of the amendments agreed to by that committee.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire the Speaker to recur to the RECORD to see that from line 213 to line 305 was on my own motion struck out and agreed to by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman is talking about one thing and this committee is acting on another thing, a condition of things not unusual in this House. [Laughter.]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 5.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 150, noes 7.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was read, as follows:

In line 332, after the word "improvement," strike out the word "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five;" making it read:

"Improving ice-harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $25,000."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I demand a vote on that amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 60.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, and Mr. BLANCHARD.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 57.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I withdraw the point of order.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was requested was read, as follows:

In line 435 strike out "$31,500" and insert "$50,000;" so it will read:

"Improving harbor at Duluth, Minn.: Continuing improvement, $50,000."

The SPEAKER. The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. WASHBURN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 6.

Mr. THOMAS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. THOMAS and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 113, noes 30.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was requested was read, as follows:

After the word "corporation," in line 543, strike out the words "for this improved navigation" and insert "on this river;" so it will read: "But no toll shall be collected by any person or corporation on this river."

Mr. GIBSON. I ask for a separate vote on this amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was requested was read, as follows:

After line 735 insert:

"Improving West Branch of the Susquehanna River, $7,500."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was requested was read, as follows:

At the end of line 770, page 32, add:

"And authority is hereby given to any individual or corporation to strengthen, repair, or rebuild the bridge across the Louisville and Portland Canal at Eighteenth street in said city of Louisville, now owned by the United States, without cost to the Government, and to use the same for railroad and other purposes free of charge to the Government, provided it shall in no way interfere with the free use of said canal."

Mr. HEPBURN. Let us have a vote on that amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 60.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. WELLER and Mr. WILLIS.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the adoption of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

It further asked for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 66) providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, granting patents therefor, and for other purposes, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin, and Mr. SLATER as said conferees on its part.

It further requested the return of bill (H. R. 5713) to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States.

It further announced agreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2009) granting a pension to Isabella Turner.

It further announced the adoption of a resolution of thanks to Col. Thomas Lincoln Casey and others, in which concurrence was requested.

A bill (H. R. 8104) granting a pension to George S. Hawley.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 144, noes 11. So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to. The next amendment on which a separate vote was ordered was read, as follows:

After line 777 insert:

"Improving Fox River, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $75,000."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 78, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was ordered was read, as follows:

Provided, That so much of the amount herein appropriated for the Osage River shall be used for surveying the same from its mouth to Tusculum, Mo., and report thereon as to the cost and possibility of improving the same by movable locks and dams.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 72, noes 26.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair). The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. BLAND were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 124, noes 40. So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was ordered was read, as follows:

After line 901 insert:
"Also of which the sum of $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied to riprap the west bank of the river at and above Guttenberg, to prevent substantially the erosion of the bank by high-water currents."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 102, noes 9.
Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint tellers.
Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and Mr. WELLER were appointed tellers.
The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 133, noes 21.
Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on this question to see whether we want to throw away the public money by providing improvements of this character for private property.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.
Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I withdraw the point of no quorum and demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered—24 members only voting in favor thereof, and 182 in opposition to the demand.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I challenge the correctness of the count and call for tellers. Evidently there is no such number on the floor. Tellers were not ordered—4 only voting in favor thereof.
So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was ordered was read, as follows:

After the amendment just adopted, insert:
"Provided, That if in the judgment of the Mississippi River Commission such improvement be necessary, the sum of $20,000 of the sum therein appropriated shall be applied to continuing the improvement of the harbor and adjacent channel at Fort Madison, Iowa."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 13, noes 132.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was ordered was read, as follows:

Insert immediately at the end of line 910 the following words:
"Including also the strengthening of the Snycarte levee where it crosses the Snycarte slough and other sloughs referred to in the report of Engineer Maj. A. Mackenzie to the Chief of United States Army Engineers, dated January 26, 1885, which work of strengthening said levee shall be done according to the suggestions and estimates made by said Mackenzie as set forth in his said report."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 6, noes 95.

Mr. RIGGS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. RIGGS and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE were appointed tellers.
The House again divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 35.

Mr. ANDERSON. I demand the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was read, as follows:

In line 916, strike out "four" and insert "six;" so that the paragraph may read: "Continuing improvement, $600,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. Where?
The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Illinois River to the mouth of the Ohio: Continuing improvement, $600,000.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 142, noes 33.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I ask for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were not ordered—26 members voting in favor thereof, and 208 in opposition.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I ask tellers on the yeas and nays.
Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was read, as follows:

Strike out from line 922 to 944 inclusive, as follows:
"Improving Mississippi River from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including the rectification of the Red and the Atchafalaya Rivers at the mouth of Red River, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red River into the Mississippi River: Continuing improvement, $2,800,000; which sum, together with the sums herein appropriated for the Mississippi River from Des Moines Rapids to the mouth of the Ohio River, shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved or amended by an advisory engineer of said commission, which office is hereby created, said advisory engineer to be appointed by the President, at a salary of $3,500 per annum; and James B. Eads is hereby recommended to the President for that position."

"For examinations and surveys at South Pass, Mississippi River, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1875, $10,000."

"For survey of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to its headwaters: Continuing survey, $75,000."

Mr. WILLIS. I want to make a suggestion which I think will be acceptable to both sides of the House. That is that this portion of the bill stricken out from lines 933 to 938 be considered as eliminated from the bill. I mean that part referring to Captain Eads—

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. We can not hear the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WILLIS. I simply ask, if the House should put back those three paragraphs, that the portion referring to Captain Eads, from line 933 to line 938, shall be omitted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object to that. We want the regular order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That would make it more palatable, and for that reason we object.

Mr. WILLIS. We propose to strike out that portion which relates to Captain Eads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the proposition he has stated.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object, and call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIS. Under the regular order I desire to make another request for unanimous consent. Under the rules of the House, being in charge of the bill, I am entitled to one hour to close debate. I wish to ask unanimous consent that, instead of occupying that hour at the usual time, I be allowed thirty minutes now. My object is—I say it with perfect frankness—to let this matter in reference to the Mississippi River be discussed. It is a great question and one that ought to be discussed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has asked unanimous consent to take a portion of his hour at this time, to which the gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. HISCOCK. We have striven for the privilege of debate on this question, and I do not propose to agree to anything of the kind such as is now proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. As I understand, a vote against this amendment of the Committee of the Whole will put back this clause into the bill. I want the House to understand that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to be to strike out this clause which has been read by the Clerk.

Mr. WILLIS. And to vote against the amendment puts that clause back into the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the amendment should be rejected the clause will be restored to the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order. I make the point of order that this is not a time for debate or for the chairman of the River and Harbor Committee to make a speech by asking questions of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Chair state the question, or have the amendment again read?

Mr. ELLIS. If you vote for this amendment the Mississippi River will be left without appropriation.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. That is what we want.

Mr. KING. That is what you want, but not what the country wants.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reading of the amendment has been called for. It will be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HUNT. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUNT. I wish to know, after the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, whether we can vote without being embarrassed by the provision of the bill relating to Captain Eads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not answer that question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is still operating. The Chair will read clause 3 of Rule XVII:

All incidental questions of order arising after a motion is made for the previous question and pending such motion shall be decided, whether on appeal or otherwise, without debate.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the question on the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole to strike out this clause.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask a parliamentary inquiry in perfect good faith. The House ought to understand that when this matter was stricken out amendments under the order of the House had been sent to the Clerk's desk and were pending under the special order of the House. They were amendments proposed by the committee and by one or two gentlemen. One of those amendments was to strike out that part of this provision which refers to Captain Eads—

Mr. KEIFER. All amendments went with the clause when it was stricken out.

Mr. WILLIS. I think not. My parliamentary inquiry is this—

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the vote on the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HUNT. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIS. The question I desire to ask is this: whether if the House votes back this clause, the amendment of the committee, striking out the portion relating to Captain Eads, is not then pending under the previous order of the committee?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Oh, no; of course it is not pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is not pending.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask the Chair to state the proposition on which we are to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee of the Whole to strike out the words which the Clerk has already read twice.

Mr. ANDERSON. And an "ay" vote strikes out Eads.

Mr. HUNT. I give notice that if the clause is restored I will move at the proper time to strike out that portion of it which relates to Captain Eads. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 141, not voting 48; as follows:

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will recapitulate the names of members voting.

Pending the reading of the names,

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding on my part that the bill is to be recommitted, with a view to striking out the Eads proposition, I desire to change my vote from "ay" to "no."

Mr. HISCOCK. What understanding is that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. There may be some understanding in the secret committee, but it is not understood in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] is simply stating his own understanding about the matter. The Clerk will proceed to read the names.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that by unanimous consent the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Several members objected.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire if there is an amendment pending which—

The SPEAKER. The result of the vote has not been announced.

Mr. STONE. I wish to change my vote if I am not mistaken as to the posture of this question, and I wish to inquire of the Chair whether there is an amendment pending to strike out the last part of this section, commencing with line 933?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer the gentleman's question, because the Chair has not examined the amendments.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the result of the vote as soon as it can be ascertained. So many changes have been made that the Clerks have some little difficulty in ascertaining the vote.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk: Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, with Mr. KEIFER, for this day.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. HOOPER, for the rest of the day.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. KETCHAM, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. KLEINER with Mr. GUENTHER, on this vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS with Mr. HOLTON, for this day. If Mr. WILLIAMS were present, he would vote "ay" on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. JOHNSON, for this day.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. GOFF, on this vote.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. SINGLETON.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I think I have a right to stand here without getting into a false position. I receive different reports. I desire to vote "no" upon this question if there is an amendment pending which will give the House a chance to pass upon the proposition I have stated.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter about which the gentleman must inform himself. The Chair is not able to inform the gentleman as to what amendments are pending, because the Chair has not examined them.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. STONE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand that there is no such amendment pending, and I desire to have my vote changed if that is the posture of the matter.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman desire to vote?

Mr. STONE. I desire to vote "ay," unless there is such an amendment pending.

Mr. REED, of Maine (to Mr. STONE). Say "ay."

Mr. STONE. "Ay"—if that is so. [Laughter.]

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 3258) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River at the most accessible point between Stillwater and Taylor's Falls, Minn.;

An act (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 7585) for the relief of William M. Gardner;

An act (H. R. 7584) for the relief of A. B. Montgomery;

An act (H. R. 5479) to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands;

An act (H. R. 6816) for the relief of Nathan J. Shark;

An act (H. R. 483) for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa; and

An act (H. R. 7498) for the relief of Wehrle, Werk & Son.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNT. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. On that I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to inquire upon what question the vote is now to be taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state it. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to; and also moves to lay that motion on the table. The question is upon laying on the table the motion to reconsider, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. WAIT. Pending that, I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion of Mr. WAIT was not agreed to, there being—ayes 45, noes 124.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now call the roll.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Can not the motion to reconsider, and to lay that motion on the table, be withdrawn by the gentleman who made it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to withdraw it before the vote is taken; but he has not withdrawn it.

Mr. HUNT. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his motion.

Mr. ANDERSON. I renew the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to agree to the amendment; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] made a motion to reconsider, and on that motion I demanded the yeas and nays, which were ordered. The Speaker had directed the Clerk to proceed with the call of the roll. Now I make the point that the gentleman from Louisiana can not withdraw his motion without unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made too late; but at any rate the same question is still pending, because the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] has renewed the motion to reconsider, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has moved to lay that motion on the table. The same question is presented.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask whether the gentleman from Kansas voted with the prevailing side upon agreeing to the amendment? Does the record show that? If not, he has no right to make the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas voted in the negative, which was the prevailing side.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion has been stated by the Chair.

Several MEMBERS. Yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYNE. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

The SPEAKER. Not on this question. The motion on which the yeas and nays were ordered was withdrawn.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 51 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 145, nays 133, not voting 46; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, and Mr. BOWEN, on this vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. SKINNER, of New York, on this vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Senate has requested the House to return to that body the bill (H. R. 5713) to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States. If there be no objection an order will be made directing the Clerk to return this bill to the Senate. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

The SPEAKER. In conformity with the statute, the Chair lays before the House a Senate concurrent resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 24, 1885.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1885 be printed, and that there be printed 11,000 extra copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon thereon added; the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent that all that part of the clause just voted on and restored to the bill in relation to Captain Eads be stricken out.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object, and demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 926, insert—

Mr. WAIT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken.

Mr. REED, of Maine. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 46 members voting therefor, and 124 in opposition.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 76, nays 176, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—76.

---	---	--	--

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Several members objected.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. MCCORMICK, on this vote.

Mr. OATES with Mr. FIEDLER, on the river and harbor appropriation bill. Mr. OATES would vote "ay" on the bill, Mr. FIEDLER "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope gentlemen will let us get on with this bill to-night.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 29, noes 80.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. WILLIS were appointed tellers. The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 22, noes 131.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Still no quorum.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams, J. J. Aiken, Atkinson, Barksdale, Beach, Belford, Bennett, Blackburn, Blanchard, Blount, Brainerd, Breitung, Brewer, F. B. Brewer, J. H. Brunn, Campbell, Felix Candler, Chalmers, Cobb, Collins, Converse, Covington, Cox, S. S. Cox, W. R. ---	--	---	---

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will now close the outer doors of the Hall. The Chair will state that this is the proper time to offer excuses for absentees.

Mr. YORK. I will state that my colleague from North Carolina, Judge BENNETT, not feeling very well, has gone to his hotel to get a cup of tea, with the intention of returning presently.

Mr. MILLS. I ask if a quorum has responded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors not being present, and as I understand a quorum is not present, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The call of the roll shows that there are two hundred and five members present.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call, and pending that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and there were ayes 65.

Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, said: I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The House is now dividing.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order relative to the vote. I ask whether my colleague from Kentucky, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, who was not present here at the call to answer to his name, has the right to move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] answered to his name on the call.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think not.

The SPEAKER. The record shows he did.

The negative vote being called for, there were noes 18.

So further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, on which no quorum voted.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 59, noes 62.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair orders tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. VALENTINE, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 78.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

Mr. WILLIS. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on the motion of Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Pending that motion, I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The House is now dividing.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative; and a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer:

Adams, J. J.	Eaton,	Lowry,	Rockwell,
Aiken,	Ermentrout,	Lyman,	Rowell,

Dorsheimer,		Robinson, W. E.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the outer doors of the Hall and the Clerk will report the names of the absentees.

Mr. DUNHAM. Has the House been informed whether a quorum is present or not?

The SPEAKER. The House has not been so informed.

Mr. DUNHAM. That was done before.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection to giving a y information to the House; but there is no rule requiring that information to be given.

Mr. DUNHAM. There may be no rule requiring that information to be given, but I presume the Chair will have no objection to letting the House know what is the fact as to a quorum being present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state what is the number of members present as soon as the Clerk reports the names of absentees. The names of absentees will now be called, and this is the proper time to offer excuses, if any.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is there any rule which prevents the Speaker from informing the House whether there is a quorum present or not?

The SPEAKER. There is not. The Chair has stated as soon as the list of absentees is certainly ascertained the Chair will make the announcement to the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. On the previous call of the House did not the Chair, on the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], inform the House that there were something over two hundred members present?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is the Chair willing to make the announcement now?

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection.

Mr. GIBSON and others objected.

The SPEAKER. The names of members who have not answered to their names will now be read, that excuses may be offered.

The Clerk read the names of absentees, as follows:

Mr. ADAMS, of New York: No excuse offered.

Mr. AIKEN: No excuse offered.

Mr. ATKINSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. BAGLEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. BARBOUR: No excuse offered.

Mr. BARKSDALE: No excuse offered.

Mr. BAYNE: No excuse offered.

Mr. BEACH.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. My colleague, Mr. BEACH, went home sick. I ask that he be excused.

Mr. ELLIS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] that his colleague be excused from further attendance this day.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 51, noes 43.

Mr. BELFORD: No excuse offered.

Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. CLAY. My colleague, Mr. BLACKBURN, is confined to his room by sickness. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. BLACKBURN was excused.

Mr. BLOUNT: No excuse offered.

Mr. BOWEN: No excuse offered.

Mr. BREITUNG: No excuse offered.

Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey: No excuse offered.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania: No excuse offered.

Mr. BRUMM: No excuse offered.

Mr. BURNES: No excuse offered.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York.

Mr. HARDY. My colleague, Mr. CAMPBELL, went home to attend the funeral of a friend who was to be buried to-day. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, was excused.

Mr. CANDLER.

Mr. CRISP. My colleague, Mr. CANDLER, has been confined to his room the last few days by sickness. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. CANDLER was excused.

Mr. CHALMERS: No excuse offered.

Mr. COLLINS: No excuse offered.

Mr. CONVERSE.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. CONVERSE, be excused from attendance. He went home very much indisposed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLACE] states that his colleague [Mr. CONVERSE] left the House on account of indisposition, and asks that he be excused.

A MEMBER. On account of what?

Another MEMBER. Indisposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

The question being taken on excusing Mr. CONVERSE, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 39, noes 44.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the vote on excusing a member require a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It does not. A call of the House is now proceeding, and less than a quorum may compel the attendance of members or excuse members from attendance.

Mr. COSGROVE: No excuse offered.

Mr. COVINGTON: No excuse offered.

Mr. COX, of New York.

Mr. STEVENS. My colleague, Mr. COX, left the House stating to me that he was feeling quite indisposed; and he requested me, if there should be a call of the House, to ask that he be excused.

Mr. ELLIS. His indisposition was indisposition to stay here.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. STEVENS] moves that his colleague [Mr. COX] be excused.

Mr. PAYSON. What is the reason assigned?

Mr. STEVENS. When my colleague left the House he stated to me that he was feeling quite unwell and indisposed; and he asked me, in case there should be a call of the House, to request that he be excused.

Mr. ELLIS. I have known that gentleman to be arrested, brought here, and then dodge the Doorkeeper, and go away.

The question being taken on the motion to excuse Mr. COX, of New York, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 16, noes 56.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina: No excuse offered.

Mr. CURTIN.

Mr. MUTCHLER. My colleague, Governor CURTIN, left the House a short time ago, saying that he felt too unwell to remain. I ask unanimous consent that he be excused.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

There being no objection, Mr. CURTIN was excused.

Mr. CUTCHEON.

Mr. HERR. My colleague [Mr. CUTCHEON] has indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. That is the fact. He is so marked.

Mr. DARGAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. DAVIDSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. DINGLEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. DOCKERY: No excuse offered.

Mr. DORSHEIMER: No excuse offered.

Mr. EATON.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I move that my colleague, Mr. EATON, be excused from attendance. His health is not strong enough to allow him to be out at night.

There being no objection, Mr. EATON was excused.

Mr. ERMENTROUT: No excuse offered.

Mr. FIEDLER.

Mr. FERRELL. I move that my colleague, Mr. FIEDLER, be excused from attendance this evening.

Mr. WILLIS. I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, on what ground is this request made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

The motion of Mr. FERRELL was not agreed to.

Mr. FINERTY: No excuse offered.

Mr. FUNSTON: No excuse offered.

Mr. GEDDES.

Mr. WELLER. I ask that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GEDDES, be excused. It is known to the House that he is in feeble health.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he makes this proposition at the request of Judge GEDDES?

Mr. WELLER. No, sir. I make the motion because I think it a very proper one, from my knowledge of the condition of the gentleman's health.

Mr. KEIFER. The motion ought to prevail.

Mr. MATSON. Judge GEDDES told me during the last week that it was impossible for him to come here at night on account of the state of his health.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no doubt that is true.

There being no objection, Mr. GEDDES was excused.

Mr. GLASCOCK.

Mr. VANCE. The gentleman from California, Mr. GLASCOCK, has placed in my hands a request for leave of absence for the residue of this day, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. FOLLETT. His wife has been seriously ill for the last two weeks, so that he has been able to attend only a portion of the time.

There being no objection, Mr. GLASCOCK was excused.

Mr. GRAVES.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman from Missouri, Mr. GRAVES, came to me requesting me to pair with him, stating that sickness in his family compelled him to be absent. I am sure he ought to be excused, and I make that request.

There being no objection, Mr. GRAVES was excused.

Mr. HANCOCK: No excuse offered.

Mr. HEMPHILL: No excuse offered.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HENDERSON, has been confined to his room for two weeks. I supposed he had leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has leave of absence, and will be so marked.

Mr. HENLEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. HERBERT.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask that my colleague, Mr. HERBERT, be excused from attendance this evening on account of sickness in his family.

There being no objection, Mr. HERBERT was excused.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York: No excuse offered.

Mr. HILL: No excuse offered.

Mr. HOBLITZELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. COBB. I move that my colleague, Judge HOLMAN— [Cries of "Object!" and laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Indiana has a right to state his motion.

Mr. COBB. I move that my colleague, Judge HOLMAN, be excused.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, and others objected.

Mr. WILLIS. If Judge HOLMAN were present, I know he would object. Representing him on this occasion, I object.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COBB, there were—ayes 54, noes 72.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 25, noes 104—less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for the tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The tellers were not ordered.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered; and the motion of Mr. COBB was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLTON.

Mr. MCCOMAS. My colleague, Mr. HOLTON, has gone to Baltimore on account of sickness in his family. I ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] asks that his colleague [Mr. HOLTON] be excused.

Mr. TALBOTT. On account of sickness in his family. I know that to be a fact.

There being no objection, Mr. HOLTON was excused.

Mr. HOOPER: No excuse offered.

Mr. HOPKINS: No excuse offered.

Mr. HOUK.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The wife of the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. HOUK, is, as I am informed and believe, seriously ill. I think there is no question about the fact. I ask that he be excused.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. HOUK, before he left, came to members of the committee and stated the cause of his leaving, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated it.

There being no objection, Mr. HOUK was excused.

Mr. HURD: No excuse offered.

Mr. JEFFORDS: No excuse offered.

Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman from New York, Mr. JOHNSON, has been confined to his room for several days by sickness. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. JOHNSON was excused.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas: No excuse offered.

Mr. JORDAN.

Mr. FOLLETT. I think my colleague is absent on leave.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the gentleman's colleague [Mr. JORDAN] has no leave of absence.

Mr. FOLLETT. He obtained leave of absence, and has been gone some weeks on important business.

The SPEAKER. His leave has expired.

Mr. FOLLETT. I ask, then, that he be excused.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I object.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. KEAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I ask that the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. AIKEN, who is in the gallery, may be allowed to come into the Hall.

Mr. WELLER. He is accompanied by a lady, and I move that he be excused.

Mr. DUNHAM. There is no objection, provided the glass doors of the barber-shop are locked.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has instructed the doorkeepers under the rule of the House to close the outer doors.

Mr. WILLIS. And I hope that will be done whether they be glass doors or any other doors.

The SPEAKER. If there is any report made to the Chair that the order has been disobeyed the Chair will act promptly.

The motion of Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. There are several gentlemen at the doors who want to come in, and I move that they be allowed to enter the Hall.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I object.

Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. O'NEILL rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has obtained leave of the House to absent himself during evening sessions, and is therefore excused.

Mr. KELLOGG: No excuse offered.

Mr. LACEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. ELLIS. I move that the gentleman from Nebraska be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska had leave of absence, but has since appeared in the Hall. Is there objection to excusing the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. LAMB.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I move that Mr. LAMB be excused. He is up in the gallery, and he will be all right when he gets here. I move that he be excused.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. LONG: No excuse offered.

Mr. LOVERING: No excuse offered.

Mr. LOWRY: No excuse offered.

Mr. LYMAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCADOO: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCCOY: No excuse offered.

Mr. MILLARD: No excuse offered.

Mr. MILLIKEN: No excuse offered.

Mr. MITCHELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. MONEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. MORGAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. MORRILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. My colleague remained here until late and has gone home for dinner. I ask that he be excused for one hour.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object.

Mr. MILLS. We will not object if the gentleman will substitute himself for his colleague.

Mr. MORRISON.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that my colleague, Mr. MORRISON, be excused.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Is not Mr. MORRISON absent on leave?

The SPEAKER. He has not a leave of absence.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will somebody be kind enough to say why Mr. MORRISON is absent? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the noes have it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask for a division on my motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 41.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORSE: No excuse offered.

Mr. MOULTON: No excuse offered.

Mr. MURRAY: No excuse offered.

Mr. NEECE.

Mr. RIGGS. I would inquire whether my colleague has not leave of absence?

The SPEAKER. No leave of absence has been granted or asked for.

Mr. RIGGS. My colleague was suddenly called from the Hall by telegram, and I move that he be excused. He has been uniformly constant in his attendance upon the sessions of the House, and under the circumstances he ought to be excused for the evening session.

Mr. DUNHAM. The House should know the reason of the gentleman's absence.

The SPEAKER. The House can not compel anybody to give a reason for him.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 44.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. HERR. Is it in order to go back to the list? [Cries of "Regular order!"] I ask that Mr. HANCOCK, of Texas, be excused, as it is well known to many of us he ought not to be here on account of his health, and it is not right to bring him here.

Mr. ELLIS. There is no objection.

Mr. HERR. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. NICHOLLS: No excuse offered.

Mr. OATES: No excuse offered.

Mr. OCHILTREE: No excuse offered.

Mr. PEEL: No excuse offered.

Mr. PERKINS: No excuse offered.

Mr. PETERS: No excuse offered.

Mr. PETTIBONE: No excuse offered.

Mr. PHELPS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] was here the greater part of the afternoon, and went away feeling quite unwell. I know that he was severely indisposed, and I move that on account of his indisposition he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask that Judge POLAND, of Vermont, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask that Mr. SPRINGER be excused on account of sickness in his family.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that Mr. RANDALL be excused. He has been quite unwell for some time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that Mr. RANDALL be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has already made the motion.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. I believe Mr. RANDALL is a member of a committee which is entitled to sit during the sessions of the House, and I venture to say he is now in his committee-room, and if advised he is wanted will come into the Hall.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN.

Mr. DEUSTER. Mr. RANKIN has leave of absence and is away from the city. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANNEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. RAY, of New York. Night before last I was sick with a cold and confined to my bed, and to-day I have been suffering with a cough. I am not able to continue longer in this night's session, and therefore ask to be excused.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Speaker, I was informed this morning that my colleague, Mr. RAY, was confined at home by sickness and unable to be here. He has a very bad cold and is unable to speak aloud. I think it is a case that justifies an excuse, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that my colleague, Mr. REAGAN, be excused from attendance to-night. He left here about an hour ago not feeling at all well, and stated that he was unable to attend. As is well known his health is not vigorous at best.

There was no objection, and Mr. REAGAN was excused.

Mr. RICE: No excuse offered.

Mr. ROBERTSON.

Mr. WOLFORD. My colleague, Mr. ROBERTSON, went away from here, as he said, sick; and in addition to that—

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to say that his colleague is sick?

Mr. WOLFORD. He said he was.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Looking pale, I suppose? [Laughter.]

Mr. WOLFORD. In addition to that he has not seen his wife for a long time, and she is now here, having just come. I move that he be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Division.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the gentleman from Texas, Mr. OCHILTREE, be excused, as I understand, owing to some recent unpleasantness, it is not safe for him to be out after dark. [Laughter.] Objection was made.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I demanded a division on the motion to excuse my colleague, Mr. ROBERTSON.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 63.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the gentleman from New York, Mr. ADAMS, be excused. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. WAIT, is present, and has asked me to request that he be excused to-night.

Mr. WAIT. I have had a great deal of work to do in various ways to-day in the line of my duty, and I hardly feel as if I ought to stay here through the night, particularly when I know from experience in the past, and believe now, that no good results follow from such sessions. I have paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Judge BUCKNER, for whom I entertain a great deal of esteem, and ask that he also be excused.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let us have a division of the question.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I demand a division of the question. I am perfectly willing to excuse the gentleman from Connecticut, but not the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to demand a division and a separate vote. The question is, Shall the gentleman from Connecticut be excused?

Mr. WAIT was excused.

The question recurred on the motion to excuse Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend that by excusing as many from our side as from the other. It is not fair to excuse gentlemen who are against the bill and keep all those here who favor it.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Would it be in order to move to amend by excusing the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WHITE?

The SPEAKER. It would not. The question is, Shall the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER, be excused?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 47, noes 60.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts. I had supposed my colleague [Mr. RICE] had leave of absence, until I heard his name called. It is well known that he has been ill for a long time, and he is now at his home in Massachusetts on that account.

There was no objection, and Mr. RICE was excused.

JAMES S. ROBINSON: No excuse offered.

WILLIAM E. ROBINSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. ROCKWELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. ROWELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that Mr. JAMES S. ROBINSON, secretary of state of Ohio, be excused.

Mr. HART. Mr. ROBINSON is not a member of the House, and has not been since the 12th of January.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understand he is in this city, and as we need a quorum we might as well send for him.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that my colleague, Mr. ROWELL, be excused.

The SPEAKER. There is a question before the House.

The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that the question as to whether or not his late colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] is a member of this House or not has been referred to the Committee on Elections by order of the House to settle that very point, and is still pending, no report having been made.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is he not a member of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers not to decide the question which the Committee on Elections are instructed to investigate.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then I insist upon my motion that he be excused.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I suppose I will be permitted to make a suggestion at least. I stated to the House that Mr. ROBINSON was not a member of this House and had not been since January 12. That day he filed his resignation with the governor of the State of Ohio, and it has been entered upon the records there. The matter was referred here to the Committee on Elections and the report is ready to be presented as soon as it can be reached.

Mr. DUNHAM. Bring it in, then.

Mr. HART. You had better send for it.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. I would like to call attention to one fact: If this man shall be arrested and is not a member of this House, we would be liable for false imprisonment.

Mr. COOK. The Sergeant-at-Arms would be.

The SPEAKER. This motion is not debatable.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. POTTER. I move that my colleague, Mr. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON, be excused. He is a very old man and not able to be here to-night.

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. SHAW.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I move that my colleague, Mr. SHAW, be excused. He has not been able to attend the House during this session.

Mr. PAYSON. I think Mr. SHAW has indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness.

The motion to excuse Mr. SHAW was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY: No excuse offered.

Mr. SINGLETON.

Mr. MULBROW. I move that my colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS G. SKINNER: No excuse offered.

Mr. SLOCUM.

Mr. WEMPLE. I move that my colleague, Mr. SLOCUM, be excused from further attendance this day. He is now engaged on the committee preparing for the inauguration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask that my colleague, Mr. SMITH, be excused from attendance at the night session.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRIGGS: No excuse offered.

Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER, is chairman of a committee that is privileged to sit during the session of the House. I know that to-day he was engaged with the business of that committee.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. And I know that Mr. SPRINGER's wife is sick.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. SPRINGER is in attendance on his wife, who is ill, and has been so the entire winter. I move that he be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont: No excuse offered.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER.

Mr. MATSON. I am informed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAYBURY] that my colleague, Mr. STOCKSLAGER, left the Hall within the last hour requesting him to see some of his colleagues and have him excused on account of ill-health. I know that Mr. STOCKSLAGER is in delicate health, and I think he ought to be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. STONE: No excuse offered.

Mr. VAN EATON. I ask that the gentleman from Texas, Mr. OCHILTREE, be excused, on account of sickness in his family.

The SPEAKER. That request is not in order at this time.

Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. WAKEFIELD. I ask that my colleague, Mr. STRAIT, be excused. He is now standing outside the door.

Objection was made.

Mr. STRUBLE: No excuse offered.

Mr. SUMNER, of California.

Mr. BUDD. I ask that my colleague, Mr. SUMNER, be excused. He has been ill for several days and is not able to be out this evening.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. SUMNER] is in the lobby now. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia object?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I do.

Mr. BUDD. I do not know whether my colleague is in the lobby or not, but I know he has been dangerously ill for several days. If he is in the lobby now it is because he has determined to discharge his duty, however sick he may be.

Mr. GIBSON. I know that Mr. SUMNER has been sick. I ask that he be allowed to come in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD] moves that his colleague [Mr. SUMNER] be excused.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 65, noes 10.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask that my colleague, Mr. ERMENROUT, be excused. I understand he is not well.

The SPEAKER. The name of Mr. ERMENROUT has been passed. The Chair will recognize the gentleman hereafter to make that request.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR: Absent on leave.

Mr. THOMPSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. THROCKMORTON.

Mr. MILLS. I ask that my colleague, Mr. THROCKMORTON, be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I move that Mr. TOWNSEND be excused. I understand he had to attend a conference.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. TULLY: No excuse offered.

Mr. WADSWORTH: No excuse offered.

Mr. WASHBURN: No excuse offered.

Mr. WHITING: No excuse offered.

Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask that my colleague be excused on account of sickness. He has been sick all day.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE: No excuse offered.

Mr. WOOD: No excuse offered.

Mr. YOUNG: No excuse offered.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move that Mr. WOOD be excused.

Mr. WELLER. I would like to know the reason for the request to excuse Mr. WOOD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] moves that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] be excused.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I move as an amendment that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] be allowed to come from the gallery of the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order as an amendment. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The request for unanimous consent can not be entertained pending the motion that Mr. WOOD be excused.

The motion that Mr. WOOD be excused was not agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] be allowed to come in. Several members objected.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. LOWRY, be permitted to come in. He was here all day. He went down to the restaurant to get some lunch and happened to miss answering to his name when called.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to include in that request the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. RANNEY, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. MILLARD.

Mr. ELLIS. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members now in the lobby be admitted to the floor of the House.

Mr. BUDD. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. BUDD (after a pause). I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the order will be made. The Doorkeeper will admit the gentlemen, and their names will be recorded by the Clerk.

A number of members who had been waiting in the lobby entered the Hall and were proceeding to their seats.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentlemen who have just come in that unless they take their places in such order that the Clerk can distinguish them, their names will probably be included in the order of the House for the arrest of absentees by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The following-named gentlemen appeared in front of the Clerk's desk and, as they were called, answered to their names: Messrs. ADAMS of New York, BAGLEY, BROWN of Pennsylvania, DINGLEY, ERMENROUT, HENLEY, LONG, LOWRY, MILLARD, MITCHELL, MONEY, OCHILTREE, RANNEY, ROWELL, STRAIT, SHIVELEY, SKINNER of North Carolina, TULLY, and WOOD.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are now absent without the leave of the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with all further proceedings under this call.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order at this time. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask whether or not a quorum is now present in the House, according to the count? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is more than a quorum. The question is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to lay that resolution on the table.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, ought not the names of the absent members to be included in the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not usual.

The question was taken on the resolution offered by Mr. WILLIS; and it was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. We have a quorum now present.

A MEMBER. No matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Missouri moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that motion will be withdrawn. We want to pass this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. WILLIS. I hope it will be voted down.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH to dispense with further proceedings under the call; and on a division there were—ayes 39, noes 93.

So the motion was not agreed to.

After a pause, during which the Clerk was engaged in making out the warrant for the arrest of the absentees, the following proceedings occurred.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONG. A few moments ago, returning from my dinner and attempting to enter this Hall, officers of the House refused me admittance. I claim that that is a violation of my privileges as a member of this House. I understand the rule to be that—

In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

That is, absent members who are under arrest for violation of the order of the House shall be discharged on rendering proper excuse. I claim that I was here not under arrest; that I presented myself at the door and sought to enter, and that I was excluded—

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman submit?

Mr. LONG. It might be said that the House was justified in excluding me because of the constitutional provision which says that the House shall make rules to regulate its proceedings. The first question is: What are the proceedings there referred to? Whether they are the ordinary transaction of business, or whether those "proceedings" go so far as to include the matter of the attendance or the exclusion of members.

It should be remembered that this is a personal right; that the constitutional provision and all rules and laws relating to personal rights should be construed very strictly; and that no member, either in his representative or his personal capacity, should be excluded unless the right to exclude him is very clear. Now, it is doubtful whether the constitutional provision applies any further than to the ordinary proceedings of the House, the transaction of business, and whether it applies at all to the regulation of the movement of members; and further than that, I take it that the constitutional right of each House to regulate its own proceedings does not apply to the personal attendance of members, because there is another provision in the Constitution which regulates that matter.

The provision is that the House may compel the attendance of absent members. That provision also must be construed strictly, because it affects a personal right. It gives the House no power over the persons of members present, no authority with regard to keeping members in the Hall; it simply gives the House power to compel the attendance of absent members, and a member must be absent before the House has, in this way, any constitutional right over him. I claim that I was not an absent member, that I was here, not under arrest, not in contempt, not absent in any sense, but a member of the House present and seeking to enter this Hall, and that my privilege was impaired by not permitting me to enter.

The SPEAKER. Under Rule IX questions of privilege are defined, and there must be some question presented in order to constitute a question of privilege. Does the gentleman make any motion?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order I will submit a resolution expressive of the sense of the House. I think it raises a practical question, and an important one. Nothing should be done under the guise of the constitutional right of members to prevent a small part of this House from compelling the attendance of absent members, but it is not necessary, when a gentleman returns here and offers voluntarily to come into the Hall of the House, that he should be prevented from so doing; and the rule of the House requiring the doors to be closed might be construed, and in my opinion ought to be construed, as providing a means whereby members who are here present and whose presence is needed should be prevented from leaving the House—which I take to be a legitimate exercise of the authority of the House. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I will submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the rule requiring the doors to be closed upon a call of the House should not be so construed as to prevent members from voluntarily returning to the Chamber, provided they are not under arrest by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order upon that resolution that it would change existing rules.

Mr. KING. I move that that resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I desire to inquire whether at this time there is anything in order except a motion to adjourn or further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. There are various motions which might be in order, such as questions relating to excusing members, imposing fines upon members, or other conditions upon which they might be released—

Mr. MUTCHLER. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER (continuing). But the effect of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] appears to be an instruction to the Doorkeeper during these proceedings to admit to the floor of the House all members who are not under arrest. The Chair thinks the resolution affects the proceedings now going on.

Mr. McMILLIN. In order to determine the facts I would like to ask a question. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] has risen to a question of privilege and made his point. The doors of the House were closed pursuant to the order of the House after a call of the House under the rules. What I desire to ask the gentleman is whether he was present when his name was called as a member and answered?

Mr. LONG. I will answer the gentleman, I was not present.

Mr. McMILLIN. He was not. Then it was for the purpose of securing the attendance of those in the same condition that the call of the roll was had.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that clause 1 of Rule VIII be read.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Is the motion of my colleague subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not decided yet whether the motion is in order.

Mr. PAYSON. Is a point of order pending?

The SPEAKER. It is. The Clerk will read clause 1 of Rule VIII. The Clerk read as follows:

1. Every member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented.

The SPEAKER. Now, another rule of the House provides that when members are not present in the House during its sitting, and it is so disclosed by the call of the roll, the doors shall be immediately closed, and that, the Chair thinks, is what was done to-day. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to contend that any rule of the House has been violated, but that the rule which was adopted was perhaps beyond the power of the House.

Mr. LONG. That is the point.

The SPEAKER. Therefore there is no question for the Chair to decide. If any question is presented it must be decided by the House.

Mr. LONG. The rules of the House are not valid unless they are authorized by the Constitution. My point is in regard to the first rule, which has been read, which says that every member shall be present and shall not absent himself without leave of the House; that no power is given by the Constitution to the House to so far abridge the personal liberty of a member that he can not go and come as he pleases, but if he goes and is absent then the power is given by the Constitution to the House to compel his attendance.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I have reduced my resolution to writing, and ask it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That hereafter the order of the House that the doors be closed and absent members be sent for shall not be so construed as to prevent members not in arrest from voluntarily entering the Hall of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that resolution is not in order, because that is a proposition either to change or to construe a rule for all time to come in the House. The Chair does think any proposition which is in the form of instruction to doorkeepers as to what course they shall pursue on the present occasion during these proceedings would be in order. If the House adopted such a resolution it would be taken as a precedent for the guidance hereafter, as a matter of course.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to say a few words and submit the reference of that resolution to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. It can not be referred while the House is proceeding under a call of the House.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I find in the Digest, page 242, the following:

At the conclusion of the call of the roll, the names of the absentees are called over, and a list of those for whom no sufficient excuse is made and furnished the Sergeant-at-Arms, and thereupon the doors are closed.

Now, the inquiry I wish to make is, Was it proper to close the doors until the call had been made for members to make their excuses? I understand the doors had been closed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read Rule XV, page 195, clause 2. The Clerk read as follows:

In the absence of a quorum fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members.—RULE XV, clause 2. But where less than that number are present, a motion for a call can not be entertained.—Journal, 1, 23, page 885.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. As I understood, the doors were closed while the Clerk was calling the roll for excuses.

The SPEAKER. The rule says the names of the members shall be called and the absentees entered, and then the doors shall be closed, and after that members for whom no excuse was offered may be brought in.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I hold the latest edition of the Manual in my hand, and it is different from that on page 242.

The SPEAKER. Then it is in opposition to the rules of the House. Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Several members are at the door waiting to come in. I think the House should permit them to do so as we did with others a while ago.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that will be done, their names being called as before.

The was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first call the names of gentlemen who are entitled to admission under the unanimous consent given.

The Clerk called the roll of the following gentlemen, who responded to their names, and were entered, as present: Mr. PETTIBONE, Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SPRIGGS, Mr. DAVIDSON, Mr. BARKSDALE, Mr. FINKERTY, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. WHITING, Mr. COLLINS, Mr. STREUBLE, Mr. HILL, Mr. COSGROVE, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. DOCKERY.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I now ask to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the doorkeepers be, and they hereby are, instructed to admit any member in the House who may present himself, and who is not under arrest.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. That, Mr. Speaker, will not relieve any member who is absent and who does not voluntarily return before being served with a process of arrest by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. COSGROVE. But that is a change of the rule, and I make the point of order on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. It simply relates to the proceeding now going on under the call of the House. It is the same precisely as the unanimous consents which have been given some two or three times to-night to admit members who were at the doors of the House after a call of the House had been ordered.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The adoption of that resolution, Mr. Speaker, will not relieve any member from the penalty for being absent without leave. It will simply relieve him from the physical inconvenience of waiting in the lobby until there shall be a number of members gathered and somebody asks unanimous consent to let them in. When any member comes in under this resolution his name can be reported, and there is no practical inconvenience to result from it, while on the other hand there is great practical inconvenience to result from the adoption of that instruction.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope that resolution will be adopted. I think it important hereafter to be regarded as a precedent in cases of this kind. For that reason I believe the rule which contemplates the arrest of members for absence without leave is intended to apply to those who willfully, or, it may be, contumaciously, absent themselves without the consent of the House. It has often occurred that members, as I have observed on many occasions during the years I have been a member of this House, have gone out temporarily, intending to return, or leave the House perhaps in the belief that it would soon adjourn, and as soon as they learned that the House was in session, or that a call of the House was going on, or that their presence was needed, have made haste to get back to be in attendance.

On all such occasions they have been stopped by this order which the resolution now before us seeks to set aside; and I believe the spirit and the meaning of the rule would be embraced in that proposition, and that when any member not under arrest comes to the door of the House and presents himself desiring to be admitted, it should be the rule of the House, and if it is not the rule that it should be so amended or construed as to allow the member to be admitted without being subjected to the indignity of being arrested and brought before the bar of the House to offer an excuse, or perhaps, as is usually the case on such occasions, to be made a mere butt of ridicule by the members.

I hope for these reasons that this resolution will be adopted, because I think it is a proper resolution and one that will commend itself to the judgment of the House.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I can not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts or with the gentleman from Illinois in their construction of this rule. More than that, it seems to me that the adoption of the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Illinois would be to establish a bad precedent, for the reason that it would necessarily encourage absenteeism.

Whenever it is known that a member may absent himself from the House, and that if he can possibly escape the Sergeant-at-Arms he may return at will without being arrested, it will have the effect of inviting members to stay away. It ought to be well understood that if a member is absent without leave and in contempt of the House, he subjects himself to arrest and is liable to be called upon to answer at the bar of the House an account of his absence.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I agree fully with the views expressed by my friend from Indiana who has just taken his seat. If it is an indignity to be arrested, an indignity which members of Congress desire to avoid, they can readily do so by being present during the sessions of the House and avoid absence without leave. It is also a very great indignity for them to go and leave other members of the House here to transact the public business without a quorum.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the custom heretofore adopted in arresting members of Congress who had absented themselves without leave during its session, and of releasing them here by making a farce of the whole proceeding, is a custom that is more honored in the breach than in the observance. We ought to enforce or change that rule, and have it understood that when a member of the House during its sessions leaves the House without its consent and leaves the House without a quorum during its sessions, to the detriment of the public business and the inconvenience of other members, he should not only be subjected to the indignity of arrest, but he should be punished and made to attend the sessions of the House. That is my view.

We have sat here several nights during this session of Congress without a quorum because members of Congress have neglected their duties and left the House without leave. The rule now is bad enough in itself. But this resolution which is presented by the gentleman from Illinois will simply allow members hereafter to absent themselves without leave, and when they have gone from the presence of the House to return and slip in at one of the doors so as to avoid the Sergeant-at-Arms, thereby preventing our ascertaining when we have reached a quorum to go on with the public business.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to say that when a gentleman has sat here for six, or eight, or ten hours he should not be permitted to go to the restaurant or some other place to get his dinner. What I mean to say is that when a man willfully and deliberately leaves this body and goes to his room understanding that the House is in session and leaves us without a quorum for the discharge of our public duties he ought to be subjected to the indignity of a public arrest for not being here, because he is in contempt of the dignity of this body.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The rules of the House have never been enforced so far as this question of absenteeism is concerned. The coercive power of the rule amounts to nothing. For eight years past I have seen on repeated occasions members arrested; no one has ever been punished or even reprimanded because of his absence. I do not believe that this rule ought to be continued any longer by the House. It were better that we leave representatives of the people upon their honor to be present here in the discharge of their public duties.

I assert, as within the experience of all of us, that when there has been a call of the House, and the officers have been sent to arrest those who are absent, they come or remain away, as they please. If they please to do so, they disregard the orders of the House, and decline to accompany its officers. I know that that has been the experience of the officers of the House during the present session of this Congress. Where is the necessity, let me ask, of continuing a rule that has never been enforced, that we laugh at, that we sneer at? When men have been arrested and brought into the presence of the Speaker, and have been inquired of as to the reason of their absence, there then begins a stupendous farce, all of us who are now putting ourselves on our dignity joining in it. Even my distinguished friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], I have no doubt, would enjoy himself with the rest in bringing reproach and ignominy upon the rules and upon the authority of the House. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The rule is perhaps good enough, but we have made it exceedingly absurd in the manner in which we have sought to enforce it; and I predict that if members are arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms and brought before the House to-night there will be such an exhibition as ought at least to gratify every gentleman who has a proper sense of the dignity of his position. I call your attention to what will happen in the event members are arrested; and after we have gone through with these proceedings, I would then like to see some gentleman get up in his place and say we ought to preserve the dignity of the House and secure the transaction of its public business by the enforcement of these rules.

Mr. COSGROVE. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 100, noes 36.

Mr. VALENTINE. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 9—not a sufficient number.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to present a motion precedent to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will state his motion.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not know if it will be in order until I submit it to the Chair. It is that the Sergeant-at-Arms, having been directed not to arrest the members who voluntarily—

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask my friend from Virginia to withhold that motion for three or four minutes.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. GEORGE D. WISE, the Speaker stated that in the judgment of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 88.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 27, noes 117.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were refused, and the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Clause 2 of Rule XV, which has been read by the Speaker, provides as follows:

2. In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had the roll called; we have had the absentees ascertained; we have ascertained who are still absentees; and I now move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to bring in the absentees but that he shall not arrest any member who voluntarily presents himself at the door of the House for admission. And I desire to make a few remarks on that point.

Mr. Speaker, I call attention to section 5 of the Constitution (page 4 of the Manual), which provides that—

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the House has provided by Rule VIII (which is on page 167 of the Manual) that "every member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings"—

Mr. BLAND and Mr. WILLIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall have order. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] has the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I was calling attention to the first clause of Rule VIII, which provides that—

Every member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented; and shall vote on each question put, unless, on motion made before division or the commencement of the roll-call and decided without debate, he shall be excused, or unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Louder!" "Louder!"]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I would like to have order, Mr. Speaker. I am clearly speaking upon the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have called attention to the fact that under the rules which I have read and under the Constitution we have the right to compel the attendance of members. Now, sir, when any member is here and seeking to enter this Hall it is not necessary that we should compel his attendance. These provisions are designed for that class of members who are at Welcker's, who are at the theaters, who are in one place or another away from their duties; they are designed to enforce the attendance of such members as, in the language of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, have been away "making cabinets" for the next administration [laughter]; such men as the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who is now disturbing the Illinois Legislature. [Renewed laughter.]

I desire to call the attention of the House also to sections 40 and 41 of the Revised Statutes, which were passed in order to enforce the attendance of members; and in order to rest my voice, which is feeble [laughter], I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 40. The Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House respectively shall deduct from the monthly payment of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the Senate or House respectively, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as a reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to inquire whether the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER] is present? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, before asking the Clerk to read the next section, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] that even Mr. WELLER, if he were present, would know how to behave himself.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if it necessarily follows that the man who has the most mouth is entitled to all the time of this House? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska is correct, and as soon as I get through I will yield to him. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire the House to listen to the reading of these two short sections of the Revised Statutes to which I have called attention. They are not welcome sections to some gentlemen here, but they are in the Revised Statutes, and they bear directly on this question of compelling the attendance of members. By the provisions of those sections of the Revised Statutes the House has the right (which as a means of compelling the attendance of members is worth much more than all this performance here to-night) of withholding the salary of a member who is absent without proper excuse. That is the point I want to make. You smoke your cigars, gentlemen; you lie back in your seats and jeer at me, but the RECORD will show to-morrow morning whether I have spoken the truth or not. I now ask the Clerk to read these two sections, section 41 and also section 40, again, because members did not hear it; and I ask the Speaker to preserve order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 40. The Secretary of the Senate and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, respectively, shall deduct from the monthly payment of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the House or Senate respectively, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family.

SEC. 41. When any Member or Delegate withdraws from his seat and does not return before the adjournment of Congress, he shall, in addition to the sum deducted for each day, forfeit a sum equal to the amount which would have been allowed by law for his traveling expenses in returning home; and such sum shall be deducted from his compensation, unless the withdrawal is with the leave of the Senate or House of Representatives, respectively.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to these gentlemen who have laughed here so eloquently [laughter], and to this committee, which is doing nothing here to-night because it lacks a quorum, and to those who would arrest a member who appears at the door asking to be admitted, I commend a careful reading of these two sections of the Revised Statutes.

If you are going to compel the attendance of members, enforce the law. You can withhold the salary of every member who does not attend on this floor. No member has a right to be absent from a roll-call unless he is excused. But, sir, from whose salary has there been any deduction made? The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] rises here and makes fun of me for calling attention to these laws; yet he stands in contempt of the House—in violation of Rule XIV, clause 7, on page 195, which says that no gentlemen shall smoke on the floor of the House. [Laughter.] Any man can play the part of a boor; but to a gentleman—

Mr. WEAVER. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that it is necessary for a person to do something to keep from being bored to death. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Anybody can discover that he is a boor. Upon such gentlemen I have no time to waste.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the situation? Here we are without a quorum, with the river and harbor bill upon our hands. It reminds me very much of a little anecdote I once heard. During that remarkable contest in 1876, when it was a question whether Tilden had the one majority or whether Hayes had the one majority, Zack Chandler, the great hero of Michigan, was Secretary of the Interior. One of the clerks in the Interior Department drew a picture of the elephant that was supposed to be on Mr. Zack Chandler's hands as chairman of the national Republican committee—

A MEMBER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Another MEMBER. Oh, let him finish his anecdote.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I was talking about an elephant, Mr. Speaker. I will attend to the other animals by and by. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that we had the river and harbor bill on our hands, and that it reminded me of a little anecdote. This clerk drew the picture of Zack Chandler; and the hands of Mr. Chandler were represented as holding to the scandal appendage of the elephant. [Laughter.] Mr. Chandler was driving the elephant across a bridge. The bridge had broken down; and Mr. Chandler was represented with one foot on each pillar on which the bridge had been supported. The question was whether Mr. Chandler would be able to get his elephant across. Mr. Chandler thought this picture so good a joke that he presented it to General Grant, then President, and asked him whether he thought he would be able to deliver the elephant. General Grant told him he thought he would if the tail-hold did not break. [Great laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, here is the situation we are in. For seventy years the Democratic party has told us that it was unconstitutional to appropriate money out of the public Treasury for river and harbor improvements. Away back when the old Cumberland turnpike road was appropriated for it was declared by the Democratic party unconstitutional to make such an appropriation. A few years ago, Mr. Speaker, you and the chairman of this committee and a few other prominent gentlemen on this floor to-day, together with other gentlemen of the country, entered your solemn protest against the passage of a river and harbor bill which was as far superior in merit to this one as the angel of light is to the fiend of infernal darkness.

Now we have the elephant on the hands of this Speaker, and on the hands of this chairman of the River and Harbor Committee to-day who made that protest, but whom I now hear urging us to pass a bill which the elegant and eloquent gentleman from Arkansas says has for its backbone the Mississippi River Commission and the Mississippi River appropriation, which has for its ribs the tentacles of that Mississippi River Commission—$150,000,000 to be sunk in the fruitless work which the gentleman from Arkansas describes, which has in the past been begun on the Mississippi River. Here is your elephant. Now the question is, can you in the next five days of this Forty-eighth Congress get your elephant across the bridge? Look at the gentleman from Arkansas, and my colleague, the chairman of this committee, and their cohorts who are supporting them, and say, do you think they will be able to deliver the elephant? Not even if the tail-hold hangs in place!

Mr. VAN EATON. I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the successor of the gentleman from Kentucky is present. I move that he now be sworn in. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that if there had been a fair election in his district his face would never have been seen in this Hall. If there had been a fair election in his State there would have been no representative to interrupt and insult me on this floor.

Mr. VAN EATON. If there had been a fair, intelligent election in the gentleman's district he never would have been here. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I want to say to the gentleman in behalf of my successor that he is a gentleman, and that is more than I can say of the gentleman from Mississippi. [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN EATON. It is more than I can say for his predecessor. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I shall not be diverted from my purpose. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KING. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. My point of order is this: What is the order of business before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a motion to instruct the Sergeant-at-Arms in execution of the order of the House.

Mr. KING. I move that it be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. KING. Then let us proceed to business.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky is not confining himself to the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. That point of order is well taken. The gentleman from Kentucky made a motion to instruct the Sergeant-at-Arms not to arrest gentlemen who were at the doors of the House seeking admission, and that is the only question before the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I submit to you as a fair-minded man that I was not digressing from my subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was discussing the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will state to the Chair—if he will keep the member from Mississippi who holds a position on this floor contrary to the will of the people of his district from interrupting me—that he will bear in mind that I did not digress from the resolution until I was interrupted repeatedly by the gentleman—if the House will allow me to call him so—from Nebraska [laughter] and the member from Mississippi.

Mr. HAMMOND. I demand the words of the gentleman from Kentucky be taken down. Under the rule he will now take his seat until the words have been taken down.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Then we should take down almost all the words that have been said this evening.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. If it be unparliamentary, I will withdraw the expression.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will proceed in order. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Kentucky can not be interrupted without his consent, and the Chair will protect him.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I hope the Chair will do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must confine himself to the question before the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. What has become of my demand?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has withdrawn his language.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask whether a member can rise and be impudent and offensive and then withdraw his remarks and proceed?

The SPEAKER. It is always in the power of the House to take such action as it sees proper concerning any gentleman who violates its rules: The withdrawal of the remarks by the gentleman does not deprive the House of the right to take any course it sees proper in reference to the matter; but it does, the Chair thinks, dispense with the taking down the language.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to ask whether if under the parliamentary law, when a gentleman has transgressed the rules by offensive and unparliamentary remarks, simply by withdrawing them he can go on, or whether it is in the power of the House to stop the gentleman until those remarks can be acted on by the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. But no proposition has been made to take any action in regard to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GIBSON. I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a point of order, that this whole proceeding is out of order.

Several members rose to interrupt.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not, I believe, obliged to answer for my remarks to any gentleman who may interject questions from the floor. I am addressing the Speaker of this House, and I have every confidence I will be fully protected in my rights by that official. My point of order is that objection having been made to the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky and a motion made that his words be taken down, the gentleman from Kentucky thereupon having withdrawn the expressions against which objections were urged, and having been permitted to do so and pursued his line of remark in order, it is not now in order for any gentleman to raise the point against him.

The SPEAKER. It is not, unless the gentleman offers some proposition in regard to the matter.

Mr. HAMMOND. May I be permitted to make one remark?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. This does not come out of my time? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. HAMMOND. As soon as the gentleman from Kentucky withdrew his remark I had no further thought of any motion, because I desire to state, while I think the gentleman's remarks were out of order, the gentleman from Kentucky had been greatly provoked. [Cries of "That is true!" and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a point of order, that before the gentleman can debate the question his motion should be submitted and stated by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated it more than once.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I hope I shall be allowed before proceeding to return my sincere thanks to the gentleman from Georgia for his very sincere and kind remark. I would not have departed from this subject but from frequent and unkind interruptions. The House will bear me witness when I rose to discuss this question I was met by jeers and laughter and cries of "Vote!" which culminated in gentleman after gentleman rising to interrupt me. Up to that time I assert, and to-morrow morning you will find by the RECORD, without correction by me, that I had not digressed one iota from the resolution which is on the Clerk's desk, which is as to how we shall compel the attendance of absent members.

Now we are here wasting hours, you say, but we are not wasting the hours if you with seventy majority can not produce a quorum. If a member gets to that door and wishes to be admitted I do not want a page to put his hand on his breast, as one did on me a few moments ago, and as another officer did on the distinguished ex-governor of Massachusetts, and say you shall not come in because the rules show you were not present.

On further examination they found that I had been present, and that I had not been absent from any roll-call, and had simply gone down to get a meal of victuals and had returned before the completion of the roll. I say, sir, a member who wants to attend here and is at the door waiting to enter should not be prohibited from entering.

Now, the objection is made to the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] that it was a change of the rule. I am endeavoring to show that under the rule and under the general statutes, if the rules and the laws were enforced by fining members—not fining them, but by withholding their pay if they are absent without leave, or if absent without an excuse—that you will never find yourselves without a quorum. Members of Congress must eat. Members of Congress in order to eat in this city must draw their pay of about $17 a day under this law which I have read.

A MEMBER. No, not $17, but $14.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I am told that it is less than $14. I think it is between $16 and $17. But that does not matter.

Now, under this section 40 it is provided:

That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House shall deduct from the monthly payment of each member the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the House, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as the reason of such absence the sickness of himself or some member of his family.

That is the law. Here is our rule, Rule VIII, upon the same subject, which goes further and says that he shall vote on all questions unless he shall be excused, or unless he has some pecuniary interest in the matter. Now what I want to do is to let members come in who want to come in.

But the members who are in Illinois, the members who are away making cabinets, who are giving big dinners at Welcker's, who are at the theaters, and who are absent without excuse and who are not sick, who in justice to their constituents and in justice to you and to me, who are endeavoring to make a quorum here for the transaction of the public business, ought to be in their seats, I say they should not be permitted to draw their salaries under the law, and should be brought here under that clause of the Constitution to which I have called your attention, and the other clause which provides that a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business. Without a quorum we can not do business.

If they are absent we have not a quorum. If you enforce the law, and deduct the pay from their salary for each day they are absent without leave or excuse, you will make much better headway.

I speak here, sir, for a personal reason. It has been alleged through your Democratic press, through your mercenary press, that I am here obstructing public business. Has it come to this, that one member on this floor under the rules of this House can obstruct the business when you have a majority of 70 over my head and over the heads of the Republican minority who occupy seats on this floor? And, sir, do you believe the people of this great nation are such fools that they will believe your newspaper liars on that subject?

It occurs to me, sir, that another reason holds in this case. Every member knows that when you fill that lobby with members who voluntarily present themselves there, with the Sergeant-at-Arms closing the door in their faces, that when they come in here it is to go through a simple farce; for they are excused, they are permitted to take their seats and are rehabilitated with all the power vested by the Constitution and the people in a member on this floor. Now, I say you should not prohibit those persons from entering. Let them come in, the sooner the better; and have your Sergeant-at-Arms not go through a mere empty form, but in reality arrest members that are not earning their pay.

Let him arrest those who are away seeking to interfere with a State Legislature; seeking to corrupt the President-elect, who, the last time I heard from him, was in a saloon in Buffalo telling, as they say, a few of "the boys" he could not be with them at a dinner, and was very sorry for it. [Hisses on the Democratic side.] Oh you may hiss, but it has never been denied—it has never been denied—and I pause. I will not consider it an interruption if any gentleman on this floor will rise in his place and say he denies that the President-elect was in a saloon in Buffalo and wrote on a piece of paper—

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman is proceeding without order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the question before the House, which is on the motion as to how the Sergeant-at-Arms shall be directed to arrest absent members.

Mr. GIBSON. It is disgraceful.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I would like, Mr. Speaker, for the Clerk to state how many are absent, as shown from the last roll-call, if it be in order, in my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can have it read as a part of his remarks.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not want to have the names read; I only want to have the number given by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk can not, except by unanimous consent, make a statement.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to have anything read in his time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask that the number be read.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not wish to advertise those who are absent. They may have good excuses.

Mr. TULLY. Give him the names if he wants them.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman shall not utter deliberate falsehoods on this floor.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask that the words of the gentleman from West Virginia be taken down.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not take them back. I repeat them.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask that the additional statement of the gentleman from West Virginia be taken down also.

The SPEAKER. That will be done.

Mr. GIBSON. And if the House—

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the gentleman whose words are being taken down be required to take his seat.

The SPEAKER. The rules require that the gentleman whose language has been ordered taken down should take his seat.

The reporter proceeded to write out the words ordered to be taken down.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I submit that under the rules the gentleman whose words are being taken down shall take his seat.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be enforced.

Mr. BLAND. I ask that I be excused from further attendance. I have been here all day and have been sick all evening, and am not able to continue in attendance.

There was no objection, and Mr. BLAND was excused from further attendance.

Mr. YORK. I have been here all day and all evening, but am very unwell. I ask to be excused from further attendance.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It is well known the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. YORK] has been in bad health for a long time.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman from North Carolina will be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to make a similar request on behalf of the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. VANCE. His wife is very ill.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that request will be granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] be excused on account of sickness in his family. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the language of the gentleman from West Virginia which was ordered to be taken down.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman shall not utter deliberate falsehoods on this floor. Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask that the words of the gentleman from West Virginia be taken down.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not take them back. I repeat them.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am not surprised that in the confusion which prevailed in the House the reporters should have been somewhat inaccurate in repeating the language of the gentleman from West Virginia. I took it down at the time. His language to which I excepted was this:

And the gentleman has been standing here to-night uttering deliberate falsehoods.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not in the confusion hear the language to which exception was taken—that is, the first part of it—and is therefore unable to say whether the language has been accurately taken down or not.

Mr. MILLS. I ask that the language of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to which the gentleman from West Virginia replied be coupled with the language of the gentleman from West Virginia, which has been taken down.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. MILLS. It is not too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, as follows:

4. If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgresses the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case, without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

5. If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is, under the rule, too late in asking the language of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to be taken down.

Mr. MILLS. I do not ask to have the language of the gentleman from Kentucky taken down in order to put him on trial; but I desire that the language of the gentleman from Kentucky shall be read in connection with the reply made by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. That may be done as a matter of debate.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I submit the first question that concerns the House is to ascertain the language used by the gentleman from West Virginia, and then to determine whether or not it is parliamentary.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to correct the statement of my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] as to the language I used. I used the word "advertise."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] should not participate in this discussion. I make the point as much for his protection as for the enforcement of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia can not take part in the discussion without the consent of the House.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, the language used by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] has been misquoted here, and if he has not a right to be heard, I state for him that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] is mistaken as to the language used. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] says that he used the word "advertised."

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, we heard him.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] state his recollection of the entire sentence?

Mr. ELLIS. I did not catch the language, but I am contending for the right of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] to utter his correction.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am entirely willing that the gentleman from West Virginia should do so. I do not submit this question in malice or with the least ill-will.

Mr. ELLIS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] be allowed to state the language he did use.

Mr. KEIFER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I did say— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the House has consented that the gentleman from West Virginia shall correct the language that I have attributed to him wherein he deems that there is inaccuracy in my statement of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been endeavoring to secure order so that these proceedings may go on in a regular way. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] asks consent to make a statement.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. No; not to make a statement. I object to that.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, under the rules the gentleman has a right to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. He has no right to make any statement without the consent of the House.

Mr. ELLIS. Consent is asked only for the gentleman to reiterate what he said.

The SPEAKER. That, the Chair supposes, can be done only by a statement.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, there is no misunderstanding among several gentlemen here, including myself, as to what the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] said. We understand that he used the word "advertise."

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. What was the balance of the statement?

A MEMBER. "Deliberate falsehood."

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am willing to take it that way; "and the gentleman has been standing on the floor to-night advertising deliberate falsehood."

Mr. VALENTINE. He did not say that.

A MEMBER. He said "utter;" there is no question about that.

Mr. MORSE. Admit that, and then it is true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] to make a statement simply as to what he did say.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is asking unanimous consent—

Mr. AIKEN. I object.

The SPEAKER (continuing). But the House by a vote has a right to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. AIKEN. If it requires unanimous consent I object.

Mr. ELLIS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] be allowed to proceed to make his statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] moves that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] be allowed to make a statement as to what he said at the time his language was objected to.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] has permission of the House to make a statement as to what he did say when his language was objected to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let me suggest, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] has the floor.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I said: "I submit that the gentleman from Kentucky has no right to stand on this floor and advertise a deliberate falsehood." [Applause on the Democratic side, and cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER (after a pause). What order will the House take with reference to this matter?

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman who requested that the words of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] should be taken down makes no motion, and there is nothing pending before the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have been waiting, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of ascertaining, if we could, what the language employed by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] was.

Mr. HAMMOND. And the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] had it read from the RECORD and said that was wrong, gave his own version of it, and then consented that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] should state it himself. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] stated it, and the House has waited in vain for a motion, and there is nothing now pending before the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"] We wait for a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has asked what action the House will take in the matter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask the Speaker under the rules to determine whether or not the language of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] was in order, whether it was parliamentary?

A MEMBER (to Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana). Now offer your resolution.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not care whether the language was as I understood it, or as understood by the reporter, or as now stated by the gentleman from West Virginia himself.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Indiana will examine the rule he will find that in cases where exception is taken to the language of a member and it is reduced to writing, it is for the House to determine whether the member shall be censured, or what other course shall be taken with reference to the matter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move, therefore—

Mr. MILLS. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order that the House—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move, therefore, that it is the judgment of this House that the language used by the gentleman from West Virginia was unparliamentary and in violation of its rules, and that he is subject to the censure of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. And I move to lay that proposition on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read the utterance of the gentleman from Kentucky which preceded the remark of the gentleman from West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. But the motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will not make the motion until the language of the gentleman from Kentucky has been read.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I had not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Indiana says he had not yielded the floor the Chair must respect his right to the floor.

Mr. HAMMOND. My only purpose is to cut off debate. I am perfectly willing to yield such time as will allow the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to have the other language read; and I am perfectly willing to yield for a reasonable time to the gentleman from Indiana if then the motion to lay on the table can be voted upon. My whole purpose is not to waste time in talk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana had the floor—

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order that my colleague [Mr. BROWNE] had the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had so decided. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not intend—and I never do, I hope—to waste the time of this House. When I asked that the language of the gentleman from West Virginia be taken down I was inspired to do so because I believed it was an insult to the House itself and to its dignity. I had no hope that the gentleman would be censured by the House, whatever language he might have employed.

Mr. WILLIS. Let me ask the gentleman, in order to determine our judgment, what was his opinion of the language used by my colleague?

A MEMBER. That is not before the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Whenever I am called upon in a proper way to give an expression of my opinion of the conduct of the gentleman's colleague, I shall do so freely and frankly.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not think the gentleman within parliamentary rules can do so.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I can get through much more speedily if gentlemen will not interrupt me. I said that when I asked to have this language taken down and when I submitted this resolution I had no expectation that the gentleman would be censured by any vote or expression of opinion on the part of the majority of this House. The time has come when a member here may charge upon his fellow-member that he is a liar, a scoundrel, or anything else within the catalogue of invective, yet it is not a violation of the decorum of this dignified body.

I have seen exhibitions of this kind repeatedly during the brief period of my service here. I have heard language used on this floor by one member against another that would have disgraced the vilest pot-house in this iniquitous city; and while temporarily we became very indignant, we have permitted the offending member to make some lame apology or to withdraw his offensive language, and the dignity of the House was vindicated.

If these things are to continue let it be so understood. [Derisive laughter.] I am not conscious, Mr. Speaker, that I have said anything that should have excited the laughter of any gentleman in this House. I suppose, however, it is in keeping with the dignity of our proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The Speaker takes upon himself, I think, too onerous and burdensome a duty in attempting to keep order in this House. I state that; and I am willing to take whatever share of the odium of our proceedings may belong to me.

I shall not detain the House a minute longer. I think it is time that we should put our disapprobation upon such scenes as have occurred repeatedly here to-night—not in this instance alone, but in language employed by other gentlemen whose names I shall not mention. I say our rules have been violated repeatedly; and if now we are to express no disapproval of such proceedings, then, so far as I am concerned, I shall to the end of my short service here believe that it is decorous and entirely in order for one gentleman to say of another whatever he chooses. That is it. Let us turn this thing into really what it is.

Now, gentlemen, I hope that no member will accuse me of having said this because I entertain the slightest feeling of hostility to the gentleman from West Virginia or any other member of this House; but the time has come when this House should maintain some degree of respect for its own character and dignity of its proceedings. If we do not respect ourselves we deserve the contempt of our constituents.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Correct.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I said here a winter or two ago I regretted each of our constituents could not be assembled on some night like this in these galleries to watch our proceedings and pass judgment upon them. We do here what we would not attempt in the presence of those people by whose suffrages we occupy seats here.

Now, I have said all I desire to, and I close as I began, with the expression of the belief that the gentleman from West Virginia will not be censured, not because he is not subject to a reprimand on the part of the House, but because a fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind. Scarcely one but expects, if these things continue, he will be in like position.

So far as I am concerned, I hope during my service here I have at no time under any sort of provocation used a single unparliamentary expression or said anything that was calculated to wound the feelings of the most sensitive gentleman who may have heard me.

I yield the balance of my time, if I have any, to my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty-five minutes left.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. HEWITT, of New York, has come to the House voluntarily, but is unwell. I ask he be excused from further attendance.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done now, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

There was no objection, and Mr. HEWITT, of New York, was excused.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, for about four hours this House has been engaged in a very extraordinary proceeding, in what I shall call a minority veto of the river and harbor bill. Most people who read our Constitution superficially think there is but one veto power on legislation, and that the President has it—that it is a one-man power only. There is such a one-man power in analogy to the veto of the tribune of Rome; but, sir, our Constitution recognizes two other legislative veto powers: First, a minority of one-fifth of the House can prevent the action of the other four-fifths; and second, one-fifth of the Senate can thwart the will of the other four-fifths. In other words, we have what I shall call a minority veto. If the House will bear with me I will quote the Constitution to show how it is we are entangled and estopped in public business, and endeavor to call members back to the proprieties of legislative action, and ask them to act in a becoming manner.

The third clause of the fifth section of the first article of the Constitution reads as follows:

Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal.

I ask members to mark the language: "And the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal."

Now, sir, whenever one-fifth of the members of this House of Representatives or one-fifth of the Senators in the other end of the Capitol deliberately make up their minds to defeat any measure that the other four-fifths of either body are in favor of passing, the Constitution gives that one-fifth a veto power to baffle the other four-fifths by calling the yeas and nays and having them entered upon the Journal until the term of the Congress shall have expired, if they think proper to do it.

Shortly after 6 o'clock this evening it was very evident that more than one-fifth of the members on this floor had unalterably decided that the river and harbor bill should not become a law, and the gentlemen of the majority, with whom I co-operated on that bill, may sit here until 12 o'clock on the 4th day of March protesting against the veto of one-fifth of the members on this floor in trying to coerce them, and they will protest in vain.

Sir, as a member or as a contestant or contestee I have been a constant observer or participant in the proceedings of this body for eight years, and I have never yet seen a determined filibustering minority who meant business beaten or driven from their resolution to veto the pending measure.

Mr. WILLIS. I am compelled very reluctantly to make the point of order on my friend. We are here in good faith, and the moment I get the floor I propose—

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope I will not be taken from the floor. I have a right to introduce my remarks and present them in any way I wish, if I do it decorously.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman confines himself to the question under debate.

Mr. TILLMAN. I propose to come to the question under debate as speedily as practicable.

The SPEAKER. It is on the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana, which proposes to declare the language of the gentleman from West Virginia as out of order and subject to the censure of the House.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am coming to it, sir, and I propose to come to it in my own time and in my own way.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that the rule shall be enforced which requires each member addressing the House to confine himself to the question before the House.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suppose I can talk some common sense and make some philosophic or general comments on the situation. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It becomes the duty of the Chair in enforcing the rule to call the attention of the member addressing the House to the fact that the point of order is made against his remarks and to request him to confine himself to the subject before the House. It is always difficult for the Chair to decide whether the gentleman is doing so or not, because a gentleman may make an argument totally irrelevant in the opinion of the Chair, but which, in his own opinion, has direct relation to the subject pending. The Chair, therefore, can only say to the gentleman in general terms under the rules of the House he must confine his remarks to the pending question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I propose to do that. I suppose the gentleman from Indiana who took the floor had an hour's time, and that he consumed some fifteen or twenty minutes of it. He then yielded the remainder to me. If I choose to discuss principles germane to the subject under consideration, I think I have a right to do so in that time.

Now, sir, I have made these remarks with a view to try to get this House to quiet its excitement, act as the representatives of 55,000,000 of American citizens ought to act, and adjourn at a decent hour tonight, so that we can come back here refreshed to-morrow for the transaction of the public business.

As long as there is crimination and recrimination allowed to go on and mere personalities to be indulged in, nothing in the way of the public business can be done; and this disgraceful struggle of the four-fifths majority attempting to coerce the vetoing one-fifth of this body, even if every member of the House were present, should have an end.

During the eight years of my observation in this House, as I said before when I was interrupted, I have never known a resolute vetoing minority of one-fifth who were willing to face the responsibility to the country and their constituents for preventing the passage of a particular law to be defeated in their purpose. And, sir, when the majority attempts to coerce such a minority, who under the Constitution choose to assert their rights and face their constituents and be responsible to them for it, it simply becomes a question of physical endurance as to which party shall yield, and when the contest resolves itself into that jakkasses are superior to the most intellectual statesmen. [Laughter.]

Therefore, sir, to make the application, whenever the majority who are in favor of a measure that commands even four-fifths of the House find out that the vetoing minority are fixed in their purpose to defeat the pending legislation, such majority, after putting the vetoing members on record, ought to be satisfied and adjourn. Ay, not only that, not only ought they to be satisfied, but they must be satisfied, because they can not help themselves. Most of the ill-temper, most of the unseemly personalities that are exhibited on such occasions, arise from the helpless impotency of baffled rage. Every intelligent member of the majority here must be absolutely conscious that he can not coerce the vetoing minority, that is bent upon defeating this river and harbor bill.

It can not be done because that vetoing minority has, under the ægis of the Constitution, this power which permits them, on motions to adjourn or to take a recess or to lay upon the table or to reconsider, authority to demand roll-call after roll-call, and have the yeas and nays recorded during the whole term of Congress, if they choose to take the responsibility.

It is a question between them and their constituents. It is a privilege they have not under the rules of the House, as many seem to think, but under the Constitution, and we ought to rejoice that it is so. Any proposed measure which one-fifth of the people's representatives here are so violently opposed to that they are willing to take the sole responsibility of defeating in all probability ought not to pass. A majority is often the result of a conspiracy, and the minority ought to be able to thwart it. The Constitution and the rules of this House were both framed to protect minorities, because majorities can protect themselves.

Let us stand by the great charter of our liberties. There is only one instance in our history so far where the vetoing minority has been deprived of its power to veto the action of the four-fifths majority, when the minority determined to do so, and that was in the last Congress, when the revolutionary Republican party suspended the constitutional right of the minority to veto the will of the majority in election cases, but still that bold, reckless party did not dare to override the veto of the minority on any other question.

Therefore, in order not to consume the time of the House further and to appeal to the good sense of gentlemen to cease this wrangle that never can accomplish any good, I hope that the majority will first move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call and then adjourn. And if I am in order, I will offer such motion. But as I would not be in order to make the motion now, I shall move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call, as soon as I can get the opportunity.

Mr. WILLIS. I have been waiting to make that motion for some time.

Mr. TILLMAN. And now I yield the remainder of the time back to the gentleman from Indiana, thanking him for his kindness, and apologizing to the House for having occupied so much time.

Mr. HAMMOND. As I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] yielded the balance of his time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. And the gentleman from South Carolina has returned to me that portion of the time which he has not used. But I do not intend to occupy a moment of it unless something shall be said requiring a response, in which case I may give what time remains to me to some of my friends.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana reserve his time?

Mr. HAMMOND. I hope the gentleman will use his time now.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will say in good faith I have no intention of talking further on this question. If gentlemen on the other side desire to discuss it they may discuss it, and meanwhile I will reserve my time for some gentleman who may desire to respond. But if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] will make his motion now to lay the resolution on the table I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Indiana can not control me in that way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] obtains the floor in his own right he can proceed to debate the proposition and then he can make any proper parliamentary motion he sees fit.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I suppose the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] has the right to open and close debate on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to an hour under the rules of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I beg to state that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] yielded the balance of his time to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. He did so on condition that I should return to him any time that I did not consume.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I merely desire to reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair desires that the gentleman from Indiana shall not be under any mistake about the position. If another gentleman obtains the floor in his own right, the Chair can not prevent that gentleman from making any proper parliamentary motion he sees fit to make; and that may result in depriving the gentleman from Indiana of the privilege of using the remainder of his time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why should not the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] the time that gentleman wants?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understood the gentleman from Georgia desired to occupy his own time.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Georgia does not desire to be indebted to the gentleman from Indiana for the privilege of speaking. I say so politely, because I want my own time and not his.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman from Georgia is always polite.

Mr. HAMMOND. Now, will the gentleman from Indiana politely answer me whether he desires to go on now or whether I shall go on?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. As I have the floor, and I presume have the right to do so under the rules, I now move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The question being taken on the motion for the previous question, there were—ayes 86, noes 52.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 19—not a sufficient number.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only 21 members voting therefor—not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman from West Virginia has not the right to do that pending this proceeding.

The SPEAKER. The proposition before the House is, that certain language used by the gentleman from West Virginia was out of order and that that subjects him to the censure of the House. The Chair thinks that pending that proposition the gentleman can not proceed under the rules of the House except by the consent of the House. The House has ordered the previous question on the resolution, which cuts off all debate.

Mr. HAMMOND. I now make the motion to lay the whole proceeding on the table.

Several MEMBERS. Too late!

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read clause 4 of Rule XVI, as follows:

4. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing in the rule which prevents the motion at this time to lay on the table, which motion, of course, is not debatable.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There is no objection on the part of myself, or I think on the part of gentlemen on this side—

Mr. HAMMOND. I object to further argument. If we are not allowed to debate we insist there shall not be debate on the other side.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. What I wish to say is that we have no objection to hearing the gentleman from West Virginia if he wants to be heard. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] to lay the resolution on the table.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that in the judgment of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 51.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Although not at all disappointed in the result [cries of "Regular order!"], I will ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 43 members voting therefor—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. MILLER, who is now in the Hall but quite unwell, be excused from further attendance upon this sitting of the House.

The SPEAKER. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HISCOCK. If there be objection to letting in all the gentlemen who have come here voluntarily—

The SPEAKER. This is a proposition to excuse a gentleman who is present in the Hall.

Mr. WELLBORN. He has been here all evening, and he is now quite sick.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, the Sergeant-at-Arms, who has called upon my colleague, Judge HOLMAN, reports that he found him sick in bed and unable to attend here this evening. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] No objection being made, it is so ordered.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HAMMOND, and there were—yeas 132, nays 66, not voting 126; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. WELLER (when the roll-call had been concluded). I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] whether, out of regard for the clerks whose voices during this prolonged session have been subjected to severe labor, he will not have the kindness to withdraw his objection to dispensing with the reading of the names.

Mr. McMILLIN. I should be very glad indeed to relieve the clerks; but this is a close vote, and I think the names should be read.

The names having been read,

Mr. ROCKWELL. I desire to withdraw my vote. I understand that I am paired with the gentleman from California [Mr. SUMNER]. Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey. I voted "ay," but I believe I am paired with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON]; and I withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I rise to make a privileged motion.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House take a recess till to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is not in order while the House is acting under a call.

On motion of Mr. HAMMOND, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. BURLEIGH, on this vote.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. YORK, for the rest of the day.

Mr. SINGLETON with Mr. MORRILL, for this day.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. KELLEY, for this day.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. BELFORD, for this day.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. COX, of New York, for this day.

Mr. WAIT with Mr. BUCKNER, for this evening.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. POLAND, for this evening.

Mr. SUMNER, of California, with Mr. ROCKWELL, for this evening.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. SKINNER, of New York, until changed by mutual consent. Mr. TOWNSHEND would vote "yea" and Mr. SKINNER would vote "nay" on this vote.

Mr. SPRINGER with Mr. COSGROVE, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER with Mr. KEAN, for this vote.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. SMITH, of Iowa, for this day.

Mr. COVINGTON with Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. MCCORD, for this day.

Mr. HARDEMAN with Mr. ATKINSON.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Pending that motion I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Friday next at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That would change the regular order of the House fixing 11 o'clock as the hour of meeting each morning.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Then I will change my motion and move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Friday next.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 106.

So the motion of Mr. MILLER was not agreed to.

Mr. HERR. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew the motion that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion is now pending.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to know what becomes of the order if this motion to adjourn shall prevail.

The SPEAKER. What order does the gentleman mean?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The order for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Of course all proceedings under the call of the House terminate with the adjournment of the House. The question is upon the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 104, noes 73.

Several MEMBERS. Tellers.

Mr. WILLIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 60 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. At the time this interruption occurred I was occupying the floor, and I did not yield it.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman did not resume the floor when the proceedings terminated, and the Chair thought, of course, that he had surrendered the floor. Several motions have since been made and voted on.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. What becomes of my resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's resolution is pending.

The question on the motion to adjourn was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 106, nays 110, not voting 108, as follows:

YEAS—106.

Adams, G. E.

Cannon,

Mr. WILLIS. I move, then, to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to dispense with further proceedings under the call takes precedence.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to resume my remarks, if I am entitled to the floor now. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not entitled to the floor. He did not resume the floor, and the House proceeded with the transaction of other business, in which it has been engaged for the last half-hour.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. My resolution is still before the House.

The SPEAKER. It is still pending; but the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has made a motion that takes precedence.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. What is the motion?

The SPEAKER. To dispense with further proceedings under the call. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE], which relates to the call of the House, will be dispensed with if this motion be adopted.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I now move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. WELLER (at 11 o'clock and 50 minutes). I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn has precedence over the motion for a recess.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WELLER, there were—ayes 83, noes 80.

Mr. WILLIS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 47 voting therefor; and Mr. WELLER and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 82.

So the motion of Mr. WELLER was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. VALENTINE: Petitions of J. H. McCall and 86 others, and of Ferdinand Zimeven and 60 others, citizens of Nebraska, praying for law granting bounty-land warrants to soldiers of the late war—to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

By Mr. MILO WHITE: Petition from James M. Goodwin Post, No. 81, Grand Army of the Republic, Owatona, Minn., in favor of purchase by the Government of Miss Ransom's portrait of General George H. Thomas—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WOOD: Petition of citizens of the tenth judicial district of Indiana, for bounty land—to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. KEIFER: Of James McCafferty and 38 others, citizens of Vienna Cross Roads, Ohio.

By Mr. VALENTINE: Of William H. Thompson and 48 others, citizens of Custer County; of H. F. Hill and 33 others, citizens of Holt County; of O. Graves and 74 others, citizens of Merrick County; of Joseph Westervelt and 17 others, citizens of Custer County; of A. A. Sherman and 50 others, citizens of Sherman County; of H. M. Grimes and 31 others, citizens of Holt County; of William Terhune and 61 others, citizens of Howard County; of J. H. Skinner and 32 others, citizens of Brown County; of James D. Russell and others, citizens of Buffalo County; of William Young and 31 others, citizens of Holt County; of F. F. Rexford and 10 others, citizens of Cass County; of W. H. Staley and 62 others, citizens of Saline County; of A. W. Powers and 61 others, citizens of Wheeler County; of J. F. Woods and 55 others, citizens of Colfax County; of C. L. Harris and 48 others, citizens of Boone County; of Charles Harlocker and 61 others, citizens of Burt County; of H. H. Haven and 62 others, citizens of Buffalo County; of Samuel Monroe and 61 others, citizens of Holt County; of C. H. Moulton and 28 others, citizens of Red Willow County; of W. H. Webster and 57 others, citizens of Merrick County; of W. H. Bristol and 32 others, citizens of Custer County; of John A. Wood and 63 others, citizens of Holt County; of L. W. Harris and 130 others, citizens of Valley County; of Fred. Wright and 65 others, citizens of Hall County; of T. M. Kirby and 140 others, citizens of Washington County; of A. C. Abbott and 61 others, citizens of Burt County; of J. M. Ellington and 30 others, citizens of Holt County; of William Watts and 23 others, citizens of Boone County; of Jacob Rounds and 29 others, citizens of Valley County; of J. S. Cramer and 126 others, citizens of Dixon County; and of W. C. Sutton and 45 others, citizens of Boone County, Nebraska.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1885.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of JOHN F. JONES, chosen by the Legislature of Nevada a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1885; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting appropriation estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Navy for completing the new naval cruisers and dispatch-boat; which, with the accompanying estimates, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the allowance, by the accounting officers of the Treasury, of the twelfth installment of the war claims of the State of Pennsylvania in the sum of $4,378.30, now awaiting an appropriation for its payment; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 23d instant, a report of the Commissioner of Education regarding the progress of Indian education and civilization. If there be no objection the letter will be printed, and, with the accompanying report and papers, referred to the Committee on Printing. The papers seem to be quite voluminous, and unless some other direction is suggested the Chair will refer them to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Memorial to Congress.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully represents—That at the last session of Congress an appropriation of $50,000 was made for the purpose of experiments in sorghum machinery and improved methods of making sugar; therefore your memorialists respectfully ask that the unexpended balance of said appropriation be made for the purpose as will enable the Agricultural Department to continue and extend the experiments contemplated by said appropriation.

SAM. S. FIFIELD,

President of the Senate.

HIRAM O. FAIRCHILD,

Speaker of the Assembly.

J. M. RUSK, Governor.

Approved February 19, 1885.

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
Department of State, ss:

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Ernst G. Timme, secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby certify that the foregoing has been compared by me with the original in this office, and that the same is a true and correct copy thereof, and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, at the capitol, in the city of Madison, this 23d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1885.

[SEAL.]

ERNST G. TIMME,

Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of New Orleans, La., praying that J. W. Pearce, of that place, be appointed United States minister to Liberia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of Reuben N. Hill, of Summum, Fulton County, Illinois, praying that he may be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present the petition of Barber & Peckham, William Gates's Sons, F. P. Newton, and others, citizens of Ohio, Massachusetts, New York, and other States, praying for the refunding of taxes erroneously collected. As the petition is based upon a claim founded upon a judgment of the Supreme Court, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a resolution of the Toledo (Ohio) Produce Exchange, favoring the acquisition by the Government of title to Lake Superior and Portage Lake Canals; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JACKSON. I present a petition of members of the Tobacco Board of Trade of Clarksville, Tenn., praying that the tobacco report of J. B. Killebrew, prepared for the census reports of 1880, may be published in full by the Census Bureau. The petition is addressed to my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] and myself, but is evidently intended for the Senate, and I ask that it be received and referred to the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census and ascertaining the results thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be received, and so referred.

SUPPLIES TO MINNESOTA SIOUX INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, returning Senate bill No. 94 with an amendment. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the House of Representatives will be read.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 5 of section 1, to strike out "August" and insert "June 1;" in line 8, after the word "sixty," to insert "one;" in line 3 of section 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out the words "and twenty;" and on the end of the bill to add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That said sum shall only be paid out of money which heretofore belonged to said tribe, if any, and has been confiscated by the United States.

Amend the title by striking out "August, 1860," and inserting "June 1, 1861;" so as to make the bill read:

A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to June 1, 1861, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and determine the amounts due licensed traders, citizens of the United States, for supplies furnished, in the course of trade and business, to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to June 1, 1861, and prior to the outbreak and massacre by said Indians in August, 1862, and for which damages were not awarded by the commissioners appointed under the act entitled "An act for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians," approved February 16, 1863, for the reason that said act limited the action of said commissioners to claims arising from depredations, and did not authorize them to act upon claims arising upon contract or upon accounts for supplies furnished; and the said claims, when ascertained, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior out of the money hereby appropriated.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the foregoing section the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That said sum shall only be paid out of money which heretofore belonged to said tribe, if any, and has been confiscated by the United States.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments to the bill, and ask the House for a conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, subsequently said: Upon further examination, I have concluded that I am in favor of concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives to Senate bill 84. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate disagreed to the amendments and asked for a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the vote of the Senate disagreeing to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof, be reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I withdraw that motion, and move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws the motion to disagree, and moves that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1266) for the relief of Alexander D. Schenck, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2637) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to release a right of way across lands of the United States at Carlisle, Pa., to report it favorably.

With the indulgence of the Senate I desire to say that this is the military reservation or establishment at Carlisle, which under the law is now used by the Interior Department as an Indian school. An important line of railroad has been surveyed and must go through those grounds. The Secretary of the Interior and the superintendent of the school have agreed upon a location and upon terms. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to allow the railroad to go through; and as it must pass the other House I am requested by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] to ask for the present consideration of the bill. It is very brief and well guarded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I think we had better finish the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7081) to amend section 17 of an act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 133) authorizing the President of the United States to grant permission to one or more officers of the Army to accept temporary service under the Government of Corea; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1963) for the relief of J. G. Fell, Edward Harper, and George Burnham, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6122) to extend the time specified in an act approved June 27, 1882, entitled "An act to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia," reported it without amendment.

Mr. HALE. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, to report it with sundry amendments. There is a report accompanying the bill, and I ask that the bill and report be printed. I give notice that I shall endeavor to call up the bill to-morrow morning.

SENATE ELECTION CASES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution providing for a compilation and digest of contested-election cases in the Senate, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask that the resolution may be immediately acted upon.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to cause to be prepared a compilation and digest of the contested-election cases which have arisen in the Senate since its organization, and to report the same to the Senate at the December session of Congress, and be authorized for that purpose to employ a clerk at the usual compensation until December 1, 1885, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to make a statement. The contested-election cases of the Senate have not been collected since 1865. The cases which had arisen both in the House and Senate were collected in 1834 and again in 1865; but that compilation is an exceedingly imperfect one, owing to the imperfection of the reports. There is a great deal of valuable matter found in Niles's Register which is not found in those volumes. Since 1865 those cases which arose in the House have been separately published four times, once in 1871—those which had arisen for the then past six years—again in 1876, again in 1880, and again in 1882; but there has been no collection of the cases which have arisen in the Senate since 1865; and, as Senators are aware, there have been very numerous and important cases of that class.

If the resolution passes I expect to have the compilation made under my own supervision and care.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A. L. SINGLETON.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report favorably a resolution directing a payment out of the contingent fund to the widow of A. L. Singleton, and I ask that the resolution may be immediately acted upon.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the widow of A. L. Singleton, deceased, late a fireman in the heating department of the United States Senate, a sum equal to three months' salary as fireman aforesaid, at the rate of $1,095 per annum, this amount to be considered as including the funeral expenses of A. L. Singleton and all other allowances.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 320) authorizing the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1883 and 1884, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 127) to authorize the printing of the reports of the Bureau of Ethnology, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask a question in regard to this matter. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska, the chairman of the Committee on Printing, why it is that the previous volumes of this work have not been furnished us for distribution? They were ordered to be printed, it seems to me, a year or two ago. I have constant applications for them, and they are not in the document-room. Is there any reason known why they should not have been furnished long ago?

Mr. MANDERSON. There is none known to me. The consideration of that matter did not come before the committee in connection with this joint resolution. It may be that the volumes are not yet issued from the Printing Office. I shall be very glad to make inquiry for the Senator.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the printing of the reports of the Geological Survey, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 129) to authorize the printing of the reports of the Geological Survey, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to report a resolution continuing the Committee on Rules during vacation. I ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and is hereby, continued and authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, and that the necessary expenses thereof be paid out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Would that include anything more than the recess between the present session of the Senate and the called session of the 4th of March?

Mr. FRYE. I find the resolution all right upon examination; it speaks of the "recess of Congress." I move that it be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MAHONEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN and Mr. VANCE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALKER and Mr. PLATT submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALKER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. IVERS.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 6399) granting a pension to John H. Ivers, alias John H. Wilson, was indefinitely postponed, and that the case be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When was the action taken?

Mr. CONGER. I find that the report was made on the 24th instant.

I suppose the bill was reported on the 24th.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves to reconsider the vote indefinitely postponing the bill (H. R. 6399) granting a pension to John H. Ivers, alias John H. Wilson. The vote was taken on the 24th instant, and the Senator is in time, the Chair understands. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator from Michigan desire the bill to go on the Calendar or to have action upon it now?

Mr. CONGER. I desire to have it go on the Calendar. I stated that before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan desires that the bill, with the motion to indefinitely postpone, be placed on the Calendar. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2663) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act, and to provide for a settlement of the claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. The bill contains the provisions of a bill which has been popularly called the funding bill, dealing with the question of proper and further security for the debt due from the subsidized Pacific Railroads, with several amendments and changes which have been suggested by experience to Senators while that bill has been upon the Calendar. That bill stands as the order of business which I suppose would be next taken up in course, except the appropriation bills and the silver bill, but that statement indicates that it is very unlikely that it can be considered at the present session of the Senate. It is a matter which deserves and undoubtedly would receive great attention and considerable discussion.

I think, therefore, that it would be useless to have this bill referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I introduce it for the information of the public. I hope that before the first session of the next Congress this matter will receive full attention from the business men of the country, so that any suggestion as to its justice or injustice which they see fit to make may reach Congress. I move that the bill be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask consent that we may take up the bill (H. R. 48) providing for the erection of a building to contain the records of the library and museum of the Medical Department, United States Army. It is a bill that in substance and for the same amount has heretofore passed the Senate. It will not take two minutes to read it and have it passed, I think.

Mr. HILL. Has the regular morning business been concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not.

Mr. HILL. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Vermont. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is still in order.

Mr. INGALLS. It is important that there should be a brief executive session. I move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allison,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Pendleton,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Mahone,	Pike,
Bowen,	Frye,	Manderson,	Platt,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Chace,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Conger,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Wilson.
Dawes,	Lapham,	Palmer,

NAYS—23.

Bayard,	Gibson,	Jackson,	Slater,
Beck,	Gorman,	Jonas,	Vance,
Call,	Groome,	McPherson,	Vest,
Coke,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Walker,
Fair,	Harris,	Pugh,	Williams.
George,	Hill,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—22.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Brown,	Farley,	Lamar,	Sabin,
Butler,	Garland,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Canden,	Hale,	Maxey,	Voorhees.
Cameron of Pa.,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ILLEGAL LAND ENTRIES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Concurrent and other resolutions are now in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered on a previous day by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] which has not yet been laid before the Senate. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. HILL on the 24th instant:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish to the Senate copies of the reports of Special Agent of the Land Department Wilson T. Smith, with accompanying affidavits and papers, sent to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in August and September, 1883, which reports, affidavits, and papers referred to the illegal timber-land entries and fraudulent issuance of titles under the act of June 3, 1878, in the Humboldt land district, California, said entries being confined to townships 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 north, range 1 and 2 east H. M., and townships 7 north, range 2 east, and 13 north, range 1 east H. M., and embracing over 100,000 acres of redwood timber land.

Also copies of the reports of Special Agents George D. Orner and W. H. Goucher, of the Land Department, sent to the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the General Land Office, which refer to the same illegal timber-land entries in Humboldt County, California, and inform the Senate what action has been taken by the Commissioner and Secretary of the Interior, as to the cancellation of the illegal timber-land entries in the above-described townships, and if any patents have been issued by the Commissioner since June 1, 1883, under the act of June 3, 1878, for timber lands in the above-enumerated townships, to give the date of their issuance, name of entry-men, and description of land.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEBATE ON APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa, Mr. ALLISON, on the 24th instant, which went over under objection. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That during the remainder of the present session of the Senate it shall be in order to move at any time that debate on any amendment, or all amendments, to any appropriation bill then before the Senate be limited to five minutes for each Senator, and that no Senator shall speak more than once on the same amendment in form or substance. The question on such motion shall be determined without debate.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope that resolution will lie over. I think it will excite some debate.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, let it lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the consideration of the resolution be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we ought to ask that the Public Printer have the bill printed immediately, so that the committee may consider it this evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will give directions for its immediate printing.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. FRYE. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That, until otherwise ordered, the Senate take a recess each day at 6 o'clock to 8 p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the resolution be now considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it lie over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over and be printed.

ARMY MEDICAL MUSEUM.

Mr. MORRILL. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions," I ask for two minutes and a half of the Senate merely to pass a bill that has once been passed by the Senate and now comes from the House of Representatives. It will take no longer than to read the bill—not over two minutes probably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions that order is closed. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that House bill 48 be taken up for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 48) providing for the erection of a building to contain the records, library, and museum of the Medical Department, United States Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL OFFICERS' MILEAGE.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask leave to offer the following resolution, to be printed and lie over until to-morrow:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate on what character of evidence the claims of naval officers for mileage reported by him to Congress in House Executive Documents 35 and 193 of the present session have been allowed by the accounting officers.

The resolution pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and go over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, further insisted on its disagreement to the twenty-third amendment of the Senate insisted on by the Senate to the said bill, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. W. H. FORNEY of Alabama, Mr. R. W. TOWNSHEND of Illinois, and Mr. J. WARREN KEIFER of Ohio managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1609) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.

The message further announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the fifth amendment of the House to the bill (S. 66) providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MELVIN C. GEORGE of Oregon, Mr. OLIN WELBORN of Texas, and Mr. R. S. STEVENS of New York managers of the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1810) for the erection of a public building at Sacramento, Cal.;

A bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla.; and

A bill (S. 2009) granting a pension to Isabella Turner.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, Mr. VEST, Mr. VOORHEES, and Mr. WILLIAMS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported two amendments intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCPHERSON and Mr. MAHONE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8179, being the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8179. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] as amended.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield for a moment that I may ask consent to take up the bill I reported from the Military Committee this morning and put it on its passage.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not ask that until we have finished this bill. Then there will be no trouble.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no interest in it. The result will be that it will not come up at all. That is all there is of it.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the pending amendment is taken up I ask unanimous consent to offer two amendments of the Committee on Appropriations which were omitted and to present some which were submitted to the committee last night. On page 5, line 109, I move to insert "two hundred" after the word "thousand;" so as to read:

One clerk in the folding-room, at $1,300.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent pending the present question to offer an amendment on page 5, line 109, after the word "thousand" to insert "two hundred." Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now on page 32, line 767, I move to strike out "five" and insert "four."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to amend the bill on page 32, line 767, by striking out "five" and inserting "four;" so as to read:

Four copyists and counters.

Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 768, I move to strike out "one" and insert "two" where it first occurs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Iowa that in line 767, the word "copyist" should be made plural. If there be no objection the word "copyist" will be made to read "copyists." It is agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Let me ask the Senator about line 768.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 768, I propose to strike out "one" and insert "two" and add the letter "s" to the word "messenger;" so as to read "two assistant messengers."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent, in line 768, to amend by striking out "one" and inserting "two," and after "messenger" to insert the letter "s;" so as to read "two assistant messengers." Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 60, I offer this amendment: In line 1461, I move to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

For the actual and necessary expenses of the judge, marshal, and attorney, when traveling in the discharge of their official duties, $2,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I also move to amend the bill on the same page, after line 1461, by inserting:

For rent of office for the marshal, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is received and agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1464, on the same page, I move to strike out the words "one thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "three thousand;" so as to read:

For incidental and contingent expenses of the Territory, to be expended under the direction of the governor, $3,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 82, line 2015, I move to strike out "one thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

For professional books for Department library, $2,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to amend the bill on page 82, line 2015, by striking out "one" and inserting "two;" and in line 2016, after the word "thousand," inserting "five hundred;" so as to read:

For professional books for Department library, $2,500.

Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I have one more amendment. On page 56, line 1357, in the appropriations for the mint at San Francisco, Cal., I move to strike out "sixty" and insert "forty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to amend the bill on page 56, line 1357, by striking out "sixty" and inserting "forty;" so as to read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, $40,000.

Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment to come in on page 31.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must inform the Senator from Maine that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] is still pending. These amendments of the Senator from Iowa have been made by unanimous consent pending that question.

Mr. HALE. I thought the road was clear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not clear.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have consent of the Senator from Virginia to offer an amendment which has been several times before adopted by the Senate. On page 19, after line 451, I move to insert:

To enable the Librarian of Congress to arrange, select, edit, and prepare for publication the historical manuscripts in the Library of Congress collected by the late Peter Force for the publication known as the fourth and fifth series of the American Archives, not heretofore published, and to incorporate such additional manuscript or rare unpublished materials relating to the period embraced as may be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library, the same to be printed in folio form, at the Government Printing Office, under the supervision of the Librarian of Congress, $4,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving and agreeing to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say just a word so as to impress upon the conferees who will represent the Senate in this matter the importance of this proposition. This amendment has been four times reported by the unanimous vote of the Committee on the Library, composed of many different Senators and Members of the House as well. These documents for the continuation of the American Archives, a well-known work, have been prepared and should be now collected, and we have arranged to print one volume a year, so that in ten years the archives will be completed.

Mr. BECK. I rise to ask unanimous consent to reconsider an amendment on page 65, beginning in line 1594, and going down to and including line 1606, striking out the provision of the House relative to the Territory of Wyoming. I do this on a statement made to me by the Delegate a moment ago, which I have not had time to lay before the committee. The last Legislature failed to make an apportionment of the Territory. The Legislature elected last fall was illegal, and has been so declared by the legal authorities. New counties have been organized that have no representation, and others have grown until their representation is not one-third what it ought to be. The legislation in the House bill is absolutely necessary to give them a Legislature at all. I was not aware of it until just now.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say to the Senator from Kentucky that that is a seriously controverted question about which there is great division in the Territory of Wyoming, and it is a party question.

Mr. BECK. I did not know that.

Mr. ALLISON. And this is legislation. So I shall have to object to a reconsideration.

Mr. BECK. I can bring it up in the Senate and move to insert the clause because they have no Legislature there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator from Kentucky is entitled to make a motion to reconsider. The Chair is informed there was no division on this question; and the Chair therefore thinks the Senator from Kentucky has a right to move now to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BECK. I move to reconsider the vote whereby this amendment was agreed to, striking out the provision of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves to reconsider the vote of the Senate agreeing to the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations to amend the bill by striking out from line 1594 to 1606 inclusive. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator to postpone his motion for a few moments, as I am called out on a conference committee and desire to offer an amendment, or to ask unanimous consent, as I do, to offer an amendment at this time to come in on page 31, at the end of line 751.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent pending this question that the bill be amended on page 31. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 751 it is proposed to add:

That the port of Mount Desert Ferry, in the town of Hancock, in the State of Maine, be, and the same is hereby established as a port of entry, subject to the same regulations, privileges, and facilities as other ports of entry in the United States: Provided, That the official duties of said port shall be performed under the direction of the collector of customs for the district of Frenchman's Bay and by a deputy detailed by him for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator before he objects hear me for a moment?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator give way for one moment so that I may ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will request unanimous consent for action on that bill when this is disposed of.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Very well.

Mr. HALE. I have offered this amendment at a place in the bill where the Senate inserted a clause of this nature making a port of entry. The amendment which I have offered has passed the Senate in a separate bill after having been regularly considered by the committee having the subject in charge, and it is offered now in the terms and language of that bill which has already passed the Senate. I should not have thought of offering it had not the Senate put on the provision that immediately precedes line 751. Under these circumstances I hope the Senator from Iowa will not feel called upon to object.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall feel constrained to object to that amendment if I have the power to do it.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator raise the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order.

Mr. HALE. It is the precise subject-matter which the Senate has considered and has passed upon, and so far as it can has made an enacted law.

Mr. FRYE. At the present session.

Mr. HALE. At the present session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa makes the point of order. Does the Senator object to unanimous consent?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the amendment being offered at this time, but I make the point of order whether it is admissible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Maine offering this amendment, another question being pending at this time? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa makes the point of order that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine conflicts with the rule regarding legislation. The Chair submits that question to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read. The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. HALE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment of the Senator from Maine in order? The Chair submits it to the Senate for the reason that the Senate in acting upon the body of the bill appears to have been of opinion that certain clauses should be retained. The Chair therefore leaves it to the Senate to decide whether this species of legislation is in order.

Mr. FRYE. The only ground of course under which by any possibility the amendment could be held to be in order is the portion of Rule XVI which authorizes and makes in order as an amendment to an appropriation bill a resolution or bill under certain circumstances which has passed the Senate during the same session.

I will take advantage of the opportunity to say a word touching the merits of the amendment, as that seems to be usual in the Senate. The Maine Central Railroad, the leading New England railroad, last season extended its road to Mount Desert Ferry, which is the best harbor probably on the coast of Maine. As soon as the road was extended there the company built extensive buildings and depots, and an immense trade has sprung up between that port and the ports of Canada. There are now in progress negotiations for a regular steam line between there and Europe. The regular port of entry is forty miles above, away up a river. It must be a port of entry in order to enable vessels carrying a foreign flag to discharge their cargoes at Mount Desert Ferry. The amendment is entirely in the interest of the Government; it is entirely in the interest of our revenues.

Mr. HALE. It has been submitted to the Treasury Department.

Mr. FRYE. It has been submitted to the Committee on Commerce, was unanimously reported by the committee, was submitted to the Treasury Department, was recommended by the Treasury Department, and has been passed by the Senate without division, after a full understanding. There is no objection to it anywhere. It has been submitted to a committee elsewhere and unanimously regarded favorably there. There can not possibly be any objection to it. It is an absolute necessity to commerce. I hope the Senate will allow it to go on to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in order?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that by unanimous consent the amendment will be put on, and that we shall not be called upon to vote on the proposition of order. I have no objection to its being put on by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. Suppose the Senator asks for unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do. I ask it now.

Mr. ALLISON. I made the point of order on the amendment. I wish to know whether it is in order or not. I will simply say to the Senator from Maine and other Senators that there are a great many bills here and a great many suggestions that are not in order which I should be glad to insert on this bill. The Senate during the last session passed a bill with absolute unanimity increasing the compensation of the judges of the district courts of the United States; and there is an item of appropriation in the bill for the compensation of those judges; yet under the rules of the Senate we can not appropriate the sum necessary to properly compensate those judicial officers, because it is not within our rule. If we can put on these things by unanimous consent, I think we ought to put on as many of the bills that the Senate has passed as possible, in order that they may reach the other House for consideration.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator if he does not think the attitude of the Senate different, after it has deliberately, upon a yeas-and-nays vote, admitted a clause of this kind coming from the House of Representatives creating a port of entry and delivery? Has not the Senate thereby declared that legislation of that kind for the time being is appropriate in an appropriation bill? But for that I should not have offered the amendment. It was only in accordance with the will of the Senate expressed on this particular bill that I introduced a germane amendment.

Mr. FRYE. A full Senate did it yesterday.

Mr. HALE. The Senate has been doing it all the time, for that matter.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate can do it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in order under the rules of the Senate? On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 21, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—21.
Brown,	Gibson,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Call,	Hale,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Jackson,	Palmer,	Williams.
Coke,	Mahone,	Pike,

Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate holds that the amendment is not in order. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to reconsider the vote of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations on page 65, striking out the words from line 1594 to line 1606.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate on a motion to reconsider, the rule says, is not in order.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask if I can renew my motion in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question can be raised again in the Senate.

Mr. BECK. Then I do not care about it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas have it, and the motion to reconsider is not agreed to. The Senate resumes consideration of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President—

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator from Virginia will allow me before he proceeds I desire to state that I suggested last evening an amendment which will not occupy much time, and I trust the Committee on Appropriations will assent to it. I think it will be a pleasure for the Senate to assent to it. In line 99 I propose to move to strike out "$2,592" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000." That is for the compensation of Amzi Smith, who is in charge of the document-room of the Senate.

I trust that while we are adding to the number and increasing the salaries of other officers we shall at least pause long enough to do justice to Mr. Smith. Every member of the Senate knows probably more than I can say in behalf of this proposition. No more valuable man is connected with this branch of the Government—only one other man possibly. He is like Mr. Spofford, the Librarian, and like the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Amzi Smith stands as those two gentlemen stand. We are paying $2,220 to clerks in this body who really do no public business, as every member of the Senate knows.

Mr. PLUMB. Cut them down.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Cut them down! No, sir; you can not do that. Why do not the members of the Committee on Appropriations seek to cut them down? That can not be done; but do not let that prevent us from doing an act of stern justice. The loss to the Senate of the three men whom I have named would be a public calamity greater than the loss of two or three Senators; I mean those who do not belong to the Committee on Appropriations, of course. It would be a public calamity to the country.

I do not even know what State Mr. Smith is from. I do not know his politics. He is not asking for this proposed increase, neither does he know that this little amendment is to be offered; but I trust now that when a man who has made himself so valuable, and is wearing his life out very evidently in the document-room, the Senate will not refuse to increase his pay. Every Senator has been benefited by the value of his services. Take the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Spofford the Librarian, and Mr. Smith, and you can not measure the services of such men in dollars. I trust the Senate will not hesitate a moment to do to this man this little act of justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent at this time to offer the amendment indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I object just for the moment. I think we had better dispose of the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, the proposition before the Senate is to amend the amendment which undertakes to put certain clerks of committees on the roll of annual clerks. Three amendments to that effect were proposed by their respective committees in conformity with the rules of the Senate; they were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee thought it wise and expedient to leave them out. Those propositions of amendment have now come before the Senate. The Senate has substantially given evidence of its intention to adopt two of the propositions, and in the amendment which I offer on behalf of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I ask the Senate to adopt the third. I wish only to say that it will occur to the Senate, I think, that there is as much propriety in making the clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds an annual clerk as there is in making the clerks which have already been in substance adopted as annual by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after the words "the clerk of the Committee on Territories, and the clerk of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry," to add the words "and the clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Before the question is put, after the word "grounds" I propose to insert, as an amendment, "and the clerk of the Committee on Manufactures."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will not be in order until the question is taken on the pending amendment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to reserve the right to offer it then.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why is it not in order? This is only an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that an amendment to the amendment is now pending.

Mr. COCKRELL. How is it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the clerks that the pending amendment is an amendment to an amendment. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] has been amended, and now a second amendment is pending to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana, and until the question is taken upon the amendment to the amendment no further amendment is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I think, sir, we ought not to adopt any of these amendments. I do not think that any one Senator on this floor would like to put himself in the attitude of discriminating between the clerks of these committees, and especially discriminating in favor of those who do the least work. That is what we are doing now. I can take the very committees the clerks of which it is proposed to increase the pay of, and I can demonstrate from the record of those committees that they do the least work of any in this body.

If there should be a proposition here to increase the pay of all the committee clerks and make them all annual clerks I should vote for it; but I am not willing for one to take the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, from which committee there have been four bills reported during this whole session, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which meets possibly once a week, and to say that they shall have annual clerks, and that the clerks of all the other committees now excluded from the annual list shall be per diem clerks. I am as liberal as any Senator on this floor, but I am not liberal to the extent of giving the man the most money who does the least work. If there shall be brought in a proposition from the Committee on Appropriations to make all the committee clerks annual I shall vote for it.

Mr. MAHONE. I should like to be allowed to interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to his colleague?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Certainly.

Mr. MAHONE. It seems to me he would be singularly falsifying his position in proposing to amend this amendment by putting on the Committee on Manufactures which he told us yesterday met once in two years. I doubt very much whether he has seen his clerk in the last three months.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Very well and very playfully said, Mr. President. I am not trying to take care of my clerk. If he is not here, possibly he is boarding. I am not asking the Senate to increase his pay;

I am not asking the Senate to make him an annual clerk. I am opposing making an annual clerk of him who is the clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. But I say that if we are going to make one an annual clerk, let them all be annual clerks. Why should we make the clerk of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry an annual clerk? I should like to have some Senator assign a reason for it except the mere fact that the proposition is made. Why should we make an annual clerk of him who writes for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds? Make them all annual clerks or leave them just as they are. I undertake to say that if the yeas and nays are called on a proposition of this sort the Senate will not adopt any of these amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONEY] to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. MAHONEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the negative). I voted in the negative, forgetting for the moment that I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Aldrich,	Conger,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,
Blair,	Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,
Bowen,	Dolph,	Lapham,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Fair,	Mahoney,	Sewell,
Call,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Chace,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Wilson.

NAYS—30.

Bayard,	Gorman,	Mazey,	Saulsbury
Beck,	Groome,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Slater,
Coquitt,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Vance,
Dawes,	Hawley,	Pike,	Vest,
Frye,	Jackson,	Platt,	Walker.
Garland,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Gibson,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,

ABSENT—22.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Butler,	Farley,	Lamar,	Sabin,
Camden,	George,	Logan,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	McMillan,	Williams.
Cameron of Wis.,	Hoar,	Manderson,
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana as amended.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suppose now the amendment which I presented last night, and which has been printed, will be in order, to insert after the word "Senate," in line 72, the words:

And clerks to each of the other standing committees of the Senate.

That, I think, will commend itself to the idea of equity which ought to prevail in this body. I do not desire to prolong the discussion which followed upon that proposition last night when my amendment was ruled out of order. Because of that ruling I submitted it and had it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Nebraska that the amendment would not now be in order. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana is in a different part of the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The same part, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A previous line. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana is in line 71, after the words "Indian Affairs," while the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska comes in on line 72, at a different place.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Secretary state where the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is to be inserted?

The SECRETARY. In line 71, after the words "Indian Affairs."

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mine comes in on the next line, after the word "Senate." It is germane to this amendment and was intended to be an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be offered as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, if the Senator desires.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I trust there will be no point on that.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make the point of order on this amendment. I understand it was simply referred by the Senator from Nebraska, and was not the report of a standing or select committee of the Senate. I presume, therefore, it is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska offer the amendment as a Senator, or does it come from some committee?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not from a committee. I offered it yesterday as a Senator in this body, and had it printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the sixteenth rule it would not be in order unless it came from a committee. The rule will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XVI.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

1. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then do I understand that a Senator has no power to offer an amendment to an appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] reported from the committee of which he is chairman the amendment proposed by him, and that was in order; but the motion of the Senator from Nebraska is not in order unless he has authority from a committee to report it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is it not in order to present an amendment to the amendment presented by the Senator from Indiana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be in order, the Chair thinks, but for the fact that the same rule governs amendment to amendment as original amendments; the proposition must be reported from a committee. Such the Chair is advised is the practice.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then do I understand that a member of the Senate, as an individual, has no power at any time to offer an amendment to an appropriation bill? Is that the rule, and has that been the practice of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is as stated by the Chair, and such has always been the practice of the Senate, that an amendment can not be offered by a Senator if it involves a new appropriation or an increased expenditure, unless it is reported by direction of a standing or select committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I submit whether this is not carrying out the rules and regulations of the Senate already. The Senate have directed the appointment of certain committees of this body, and as an incident to that they have appointed clerks to those committees. The Senate have done this. From the fact of the establishment of the committees first and from the fact of the appointment of clerks to those committees is not as a necessary incident thereto this matter properly in order? The only question is for what length of time the clerk shall be compensated. Everything else has been provided for, the establishment of the committee and the appointment of its clerk. Now, this amendment merely proposes to make a little more effective what the Senate has already ordered to be done.

I think it is important we should take the sense of the Senate on this matter. Some Senator has said, particularly to the Committee on Appropriations who have charge of this matter, that we had better reduce expenses and level down salaries. That would do very well; but that will never be done. The only way of reaching a just and equitable and honest distribution is that we shall put it in such a shape that the Senate will be forced or the Committee on Appropriations will be forced to do a little nearer justice in this matter.

Now I ask unanimous consent that this amendment, of which notice was given yesterday, be received and considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to offer this amendment at this time.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Making annual clerks to all the other committees?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the Chair is of opinion that it is not now in order. Does the Senator from Nebraska appeal from that decision?

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] as amended.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the words "Indian Affairs," in line 71, it is proposed to add:

Clerk to the Committee on Territories, and clerk to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Before the vote is taken I may be pardoned, perhaps, for asking of the Chair how one objection can control the Senate of the United States on a matter that goes only to a rule of the Senate. I perfectly understand that the limit of legislative authority is fixed by the Constitution of the United States, and it is not fixed by any rule of the Senate, and no one objection is equivalent to a majority vote of this body. I submit that now as a proposition, not from the foundation, but from the top down. If when a Senator here offers an amendment to an appropriation bill the objection of one Senator shall say that it is not in order, then there is no use of our being here. I say that a majority of this body fixes its own rules—let him who will deny that proposition—and the only limit to our authority here is fixed by the Constitution itself.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Allow me to suggest that the trouble with the arguments of the Senator from Virginia is that the Senate has fixed its own rules, and under those rules the amendment to which he refers was not in order. The Senate can alter or amend those rules so that such amendments may be in order, but it has not done that yet.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The trouble with the Senator from Wisconsin is that he does not seem to comprehend the difference between what one Senator does and what another tries to do.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Oh, yes; I have discovered that.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am glad of it. I care not how many rules the Senate may adopt, they can not limit or fix a limit to the action of the Senate. Why, sir, if I may be permitted to do what members of a committee here do, violate one of the fundamental principles of parliamentary law and tell what transpires in committee, which is often done here, I may be permitted to say that I went to the Appropriations Committee last year and I found not only a rule of the Senate but what they called a courtesy obtaining between the two committees of the two Houses of the United States Congress, and they said to me, "You must go to the House of Representatives and get the imprimatur of the chairman of the committee there before you can have an appropriation here."

The point that I want to make is this—and if I give away this point I and every other Senator here had just as well be at home and leave all the business to the Committee on Appropriations—that no rule can be prescribed outside of the Constitution itself that binds any Senator on this floor, and no one objection can prevent me from offering and having entertained by this body an amendment to an appropriation bill. I insist upon it, sir, that no rule can be prescribed by this Senate or any other that will inhibit the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. I care nothing about his amendment. I should vote against it; I shall vote against all these amendments; but I am not willing for one to say that there can be a rule which can circumscribe my action here; and there can be no valid rule under which the presiding officer can say that I am not entitled to any privilege that any Senator on this floor has, whether I be a member of one committee or another.

Sir, I submit that any amendment offered to this bill is in order and no one objection can preclude it; no one objection can defeat it. A majority of this body alone can say whether an amendment is to be put upon the bill or not. That is the point I am making.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not see that the Senator from Virginia presents any point of order. The Chair is trying to enforce the rules as he finds them. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] as amended. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 23, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Blair,	Fair,	Lapham,	Pike,
Bowen,	George,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Chace,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Williams,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,

NAYS—26.

Bayard,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Slater,
Beck,	Groome,	Morrill,	Vance,
Camden,	Hampton,	Platt,	Vest,
Coekrell,	Harris,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Jackson,	Riddleberger,	Wilson,
Colquitt,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Gibson,	McPherson,	Sherman,

ABSENT—27.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Maxey,
Allison,	Edmonds,	Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,
Brown,	Farley,	Kenna,	Plumb,
Butler,	Frye,	Lamar,	Ransom,
Call,	Garland,	Logan,	Sabin,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	McMillan,	Walker,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Manderson,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the vote upon the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be taken in gross?

Mr. BECK. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment on page 65 striking out of the bill the lines from 1594 to 1606, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be reserved.

Mr. ALLISON. Unless some other amendment is reserved, I hope the question will be taken on the other amendments in gross.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question on concurring in all the amendments except the one reserved at the request of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reserved amendment will now be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In Committee of the Whole the Senate struck out the following clause:

Provided, That on the first Monday of September, A. D. 1885, or within ten days thereafter, the governor of the Territory and the presiding officers of the houses of the last Legislature shall meet and reapportion the Territory in accordance with the population, as ascertained by the best possible means; and that in accordance with such new apportionment members shall be elected to the Ninth Legislative Assembly, on the second Tuesday of November, 1885, in accordance with the election laws of the Territory; and the members of the council and house of representatives so elected shall be the legal members and constitute the Ninth Legislative Assembly of the Territory.

Mr. BECK. I think it was a mistake to strike out that provision, and for reasons which I shall state.

The last Legislature of the Territory of Wyoming failed to pass an apportionment law; and a Legislature was elected last fall which is believed by nearly all the prominent people in the Territory to be illegal, and I believe it is illegal. Unless this provision is made the Territory of Wyoming can have no Legislature next year. The provision which the House inserted allows a proper apportionment to be made and a legal Legislature to be elected under that apportionment. New counties have been organized within the last few years that have no representation at all at this time, while other counties have grown far out of proportion to other parts of the Territory since the last apportionment.

I have a letter in my hand addressed to Hon. M. E. Post, the present Delegate from Wyoming, from, I suppose, the leading Republican lawyer of that Territory, Mr. Corlett, who was at one time the Delegate here, in which he expresses the belief that the last election for a Territorial Legislature was illegal and unwarranted, and that to avoid any question provision ought to be made, which he drew himself and sent to the present Delegate, who offered it in the House. This letter shows all the facts; and the Delegate laid the correspondence before the House of Representatives, and the House inserted in this bill the provision which the Senate has stricken out.

The reason why the Delegate brought it to me, I assume, is that I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations and that I have been in the habit of going to that Territory for the last three or four years, having a son residing in Northern Wyoming.

The county of Johnson, where he resides, illustrates pretty well what the necessity of this legislation is. The county of Johnson has grown up from a population of two hundred in the last four or five years to somewhere near 5,000 actual, bona fide settlers, opening farms, irrigating the land, raising crops, with sheep and cattle and everything that farmers have about them. That county has grown, perhaps, more than any other three counties, but there being no apportionment it has only one representative, while perhaps it is entitled to three. The county of Carbon, which has been organized since that, has none, although it is growing very rapidly.

I do not see why we should not authorize an apportionment to be had and representatives elected in accordance with law, so as to remove all doubts and allow the people of that Territory to pass legislation for their own good. Their legislation is generally confined to the building of bridges, the establishment of school-houses, and to doing matters which will aid them in their material advancement. There is very little politics in it as far as I know or believe.

It seems to me that in view of these facts the Senate ought to agree to the provision made by the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the particular matter that is thought to affect the legality of this Legislature?

Mr. BECK. The Legislature that adjourned two years ago failed to pass an apportionment bill to apportion the representation in the Territory, and their failure to do this is believed to have made the last election illegal.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, if I understand it, it is upon the basis that the apportionment once made does not continue until it is changed by a new apportionment?

Mr. BECK. I judge not, from the letter that Mr. Corlett, who is the best lawyer there and a former Delegate, wrote to the present Delegate. I have not had time to make a personal investigation of the subject, but knowing these gentlemen and relying upon them I believe that is the fact. That is all there is in the case as far as I know. I think we had better agree with the House. It can not do any harm, I think.

Mr. HARRISON. So far as I know—and the Senator from Kentucky will correct me if I am wrong—this proposition has not been submitted to the Committee on Territories of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. Not that I know of. I am not aware of it.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think it has been in any form. I do not know how it is that the emergency for this legislation has been so recently discovered. I do not know how it may have come about; but if there was this condition of things in that Territory, it is strange that the people should not have been advised of it in time to enable the Committee on Territories to consider the question and to report some appropriate legislation.

The proposition here is to give to certain executive officers of the Territory, and to the presiding officers of the two houses of the Territorial Assembly power to make an apportionment. In an exigency where the Legislature had for some reason or other lost control over this subject, of course a resort to that method to secure a new apportionment might be justifiable; but I think the Senator from Kentucky will agree with me that it is not a good method of apportioning a Territory for legislative purposes. It gives a few persons, some of them appointed to executive offices, the right to apportion a Territory, and upon their apportionment the next Legislature is to be chosen. There may be always in that case some risk of partiality or unfairness of one sort or another, at least they are not the chosen representatives of the people to do this sort of thing. The Legislature of the Territory of Wyoming is the proper body to make an apportionment for the Legislature that is to succeed it, and I do not see myself that there is in this case, such an exigency as to justify us, without any information from the committee that has this subject in charge, in authorizing these men to make a reapportionment for legislative purposes.

I may say that, without any personal knowledge of the subject at all, there has been placed in my hands this morning by Judge Carey, the Delegate-elect from the Territory of Wyoming, a telegram signed by a dozen or more individuals, whom he represents to me to be leading citizens, in which they protest against this measure as an injustice and a needless expense to the Territory. I do not myself know what the facts are, and I do not know upon what line the citizens of that Territory are divided upon this question. I do not know whether it is a political division or upon what lines they divide, but it seems clear that they are divided in opinion as to whether this ought to be done. And it seems to me that, aside from the objection of the Appropriations Committee, that they are charged with a matter which appropriately belongs elsewhere, and that there has been an insufficient investigation, the committee ought to adhere to the same rule they applied in the case of Dakota, namely, strike out the provision. The legislation in the case of Dakota, which provided for an increase of the number constituting the Territorial council and house of representatives, the committee have stricken out. That legislation had been favorably reported by the Committee on Territories, and the necessity for it was apparent, for, as the Senator from Kentucky knows, there are probably 500,000 people in that whole Territory, and they are governed by a council that consists of twelve men and a house that consists of twenty-four.

The Senate can see how inadequate the representation of the people must be in a Legislature representing so vast a Territory and so large a population; and yet the Committee on Appropriations have stricken out that legislation here, though it had secured the support of the particular committee of this body having the subject in charge, and we have made no resistance. Though we think that legislation ought to be passed we have not sought to retain it in this bill. In the other case there seems for some reason to be a divided sentiment in the Territory of Wyoming as to whether the legislation ought to be had, and it is a question that no one here seems to have investigated sufficiently to justify putting it in the shape of law.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know anything personally of this matter; but I received yesterday a telegram from a gentleman a resident of that Territory who has resided there some time, a former resident of Massachusetts, whom I know to be a man of great intelligence and integrity, and who knows as well as any one man can the interests of the Territory, and he very strongly urges that this measure be rejected. He is very much opposed to the proposition contained in this clause of the House bill. He has identified himself and has for some time been a leading citizen of that Territory, and expects it to be his home for the future. Identified with its interests, he is very much opposed to this measure.

Mr. BECK. I am not able to answer whether there is any political matter in this or not. The Senator from Iowa thought there was. My only information comes from the Delegate from the Territory [Mr. Post], who handed me the papers which I have submitted to the Senate. Both he and a former Delegate and the lawyers of that Territory who understand their Territorial laws believe that the Legislature purporting to have been elected last fall was illegally elected and can not therefore act as the Territorial Legislature. If this is so, it ought to be remedied. The county of Carbon, to which my attention has been called, has no representation; a former Delegate from the Territory in the House, evidently a fair man, says there is no representation from that county. Another county which is entitled to three members has only one. If the Legislature elected can not meet because of illegality, the defect ought to be remedied. The House has remedied it; but the Senate has stricken out the clause proposed by the House. I think it was a mistake to do that. I believe the clause ought to be allowed to remain.

I know personally the importance of very much legislation by that Territorial Legislature. Actual settlers are going in there with their families, many of them people of means, people of education. They want bridges over their rivers and streams, public highways, and many other things that the Legislature must provide for. If because of the illegality of the last election they are to be deprived of the right of having a Legislature for two or three years to come, there being only biennial sessions, it will be a great deprivation to those people. While a protest comes to the Senator from Indiana on the ground of expense, it should be remembered that the expense is a very small matter compared to the benefits to be derived from it. That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. HARRISON. In referring to the legislation in this bill in reference to Dakota I did it without more than glancing at it. I find the legislation contained in the bill was to enable the Territory to apportion their members of the council in single districts instead of as now two in a district, something that of course ought to be done, but it was obnoxious to the rule of the Senate and went out of this bill. We did not retain it notwithstanding it is undoubtedly wise legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand this question—and the Senator from Kentucky can correct me if I am mistaken—a Legislature of Wyoming was elected at the last election and will be known as the Ninth Legislature. This provision in the bill legislates that Legislature out of office and provides that next year a new apportionment shall be made and a new Legislature elected which shall be the Ninth Legislature. In view of the fact that there are serious difficulties in the way, and in view of the fact also that a very large number of the people of Wyoming, including the Delegate-elect, protest against this legislation and insist that the Legislature already elected is the proper Legislature of the Territory, it seems to me rather dangerous for us to interfere with the subject on an appropriation bill. If I am mistaken in my facts, the Senator from Kentucky can correct me.

Mr. BECK. I am advised that the reason for the House legislation is that while there were members elected to the Legislature last fall, that election was in fact illegal, null, and void by reason of the law requiring an apportionment to be made before an election could be had. If that is the case, nothing will come of the election.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator must see that the gentlemen who have been elected claim that the election was legal; and I think there is in the committee-room of the Committee on Appropriations now a telegram from one of the members elected to this Legislature to that effect. We are undertaking here without a hearing and without full information of the facts to annul the election of last year and provide for an entirely new election next year. I do not think that ought to be done in this summary manner.

Mr. CALL. It seems, on the statement of the Delegate from Wyoming and the action of the House in the bill now before the Senate, that there has been an election in the Territory of Wyoming under an apportionment law which has ceased by its terms to exist, and that that election has left a very large portion of the people of Wyoming unrepresented. The letter read by the Senator from Kentucky was from a Republican lawyer of eminence, as I understand, in the Territory of Wyoming, a former Delegate; and I understand it to be very largely the wish of the people of that Territory that there should be left no doubt as to the legality of the election of the Legislature that is to meet. The bill of the House simply proposes to add to that Legislature a representation made upon an apportionment of the population so as to make it a full representation.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not so understand the provision. It provides for the election of an entirely new Legislature and says that shall be the Ninth Legislature of the Territory of Wyoming.

Mr. CALL. But only for the purpose of introducing the new representation of people who have not been represented in the apportionment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, striking out the words which have been read.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask whether an amendment striking out the word "ninth" would be in order. I shall make that motion if it is in order, because I do not like to pass here by my vote on the question of whether the existing Legislature is a legal Legislature or not, but I am in favor of making some provision for another Legislature upon a new apportionment, inasmuch as a doubt exists as to the legality of the present Legislature. If it is in order, I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which word "ninth" does the Senator from Delaware move to strike out? There are two words "ninth."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move to strike it out in both cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware moves to amend the paragraph proposed to be stricken out by striking therefrom the word "ninth," occurring in two places, in line 1601 and in line 1605.

Mr. SAULSBURY. By adopting my amendment and retaining the clause we do not pass on the question of the legality of the existing Legislature, but make provision for the election of another Legislature under a new apportionment; and that is what I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CONGER. If the amendment should prevail and the Senate should insist upon striking out, then these two words would be left in the bill, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the motion of the Senator from Delaware prevails those words will already have been stricken out. Then if the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole should be agreed to, all the rest of the words would be stricken out. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to strike out the word "ninth" in two different places.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole to strike out the whole paragraph, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON. My pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] has been transferred to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Garland,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Gorman,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Chace,	Harrison,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Conger,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Hoar,	Pike,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,

NAYS—15.

Bayard,	Coke,	Jackson,	Vest,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Maxey,	Walker,
Brown,	George,	Sanbury,	Williams.
Call,	Hampton,	Vance,

ABSENT—28.

Bowen,	Farley,	Kenna,	Morgan,
Butler,	Gibson,	Lamar,	Pendleton,
Camden,	Groome,	Logan,	Pugh,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	McMillan,	Ransom,
Cockrell,	Hill,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Dolph,	Jonas,	Mahone,	Slater,
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 137, I ask that the footing may be corrected to correspond to an amendment agreed to by the Senate. Before the word "hundred" I move to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so as to read "$51,821.80."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 769, I also wish to change the footing to correspond to the action of the Senate. Before the word "hundred" I move to strike out "nine" and insert "eight;" and before the word "dollars" to strike out "ninety" and insert "ten;" so as to read "$88,810."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I now ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to increase the compensation of the superintendent of the document-room, Amzi Smith, named in the bill. In line 99, I wish to move to strike out "$2,592" and insert "$3,000." I have already made some suggestions to the Senate in that behalf, and the matter was laid over on the request of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill be amended, in lines 99 and 100, by striking out "$2,592" and inserting "$3,000;" so as to read:

Superintendent of the document-room (Amzi Smith), $3,000.

Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Amzi Smith is a very competent and worthy officer, but I think I shall be obliged to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Iowa. Does the Senator from Iowa object?

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the amendment can not be received.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1609) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add as an additional provision to said House amendment the following: "And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed in any event to increase the cost of the site and building, including approaches, when completed, beyond the sum of $300,000, as provided in this section;" and the House agree to the same.

WM. MAHONE,
ANGUS CAMERON,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
JAS. H. HOPKINS,
EDWARD BREITUNG,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 338) providing for printing additional copies of the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 339) providing for printing the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 340) providing for printing monograph 2 of the publications of the United States Geological Survey; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 342) to authorize the printing of 400,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1885.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7373) for the relief of Sarah A. Burchfield;

A bill (H. R. 7696) granting a pension to Thomas D. Fitch;

A bill (H. R. 7769) granting a pension to Joseph R. Dodds; and

A bill (H. R. 7869) granting a pension to Emeline L. Fitch.

COINAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to strike out section 5 of the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from Vermont if he will not yield to me to take up a little bill.

Mr. BECK. I desire the yeas and nays upon the motion to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is hearing the Senator from Illinois on another request.

Mr. BECK. I thought the bill was up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is up and the question is pending, pending which the Senator from Illinois rose to address the Chair.

Mr. CULLOM. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont if he will not allow the bill to be informally laid aside so that I may call up House bill 7659.

Mr. BECK. I object before hearing the title of the bill. I do not know what the bill is, but I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The regular order is called for. The pending question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out section 5 of the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, on which the yeas and nays are demanded by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe upon that, or upon the pending question, whatever it is, I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes that the Senator from Ohio has the floor on the pending question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have that section read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be read which it is moved to strike out.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee it is proposed to strike out section 5, which is in the following words:

SEC. 5. That in case no such treaties as aforesaid shall have been made and ratified prior to August 1, 1886, then and thereafter so much of the act of February 28, 1873, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," as authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase from time to time of silver bullion, at the market price thereof, not less than two million dollars' worth per month nor more than four million dollars' worth per month, and cause the same to be coined into such dollars monthly as fast as so purchased, shall be suspended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out the words which have been read, on which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it has been so long since this bill was before the Senate for consideration that no doubt the Senate have lost much of their interest in it. The feeling has prevailed that it would be ineffective to press upon the attention of the Senate the important questions involved in the silver coinage of the United States. Still if the Senator from Vermont thinks it is possible to pass any bill upon the subject at this session I desire to submit some remarks, but I do not wish to do so merely for the sake of making a speech. My views upon this question are pretty well understood, and I certainly have no desire to agitate the question unless it is the intention of the Senate to vote upon the bill.

This is a House bill, which has been amended and greatly improved by the Senate Finance Committee, and as it now stands I should be willing to support the bill in the amended form. It presents only two questions, both of which are important from the amount involved and also from the principles involved.

The first question is whether the trade-dollars should be redeemed at their par in gold. The second is whether the coinage of the standard silver-dollar should be discontinued in August, 1886. Upon these two questions only do I wish to make my observations. On account of the lapse of time that has occurred I propose, in order to condense my remarks, to confine myself mainly to what I have written, although I shall be very willing at any time as I proceed to answer any question that may arise in the progress of my remarks.

The House bill as it came to us is based upon the assumption that the United States is under a moral obligation to receive and redeem without exception or limitation all the trade-dollars issued under the coinage act of February 12, 1873.

I am convinced that no such obligation exists on the part of the United States; that the trade-dollar was coined for dealers in silver bullion at their expense, for their benefit, to enable them to secure a better market for their bullion by putting it in convenient form for exportation; that the only obligation assumed by the United States was to guarantee that each dollar issued contained 420 grains of standard silver; that the limited legal-tender quality given to these coins was repealed before they were in circulation in the United States, and that, with few exceptions, those now in the hands of the people were coined after they ceased to be a legal tender, and when they were what their name denotes, silver bullion in convenient form, for which the United States was no more liable than for the silver bars issued from the mints and assay-offices of the United States, and that these dollars in the hands of the holders should be taken only at their market bullion value, or be exported according to the object of their origin.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator at that point allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; if it will not tend to prolong my remarks.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator states that these coins were not in circulation in the United States prior to the passage of the joint resolution of 1876. Is it not a fact that they were in circulation before that time, at the close of the year 1875, on the Pacific coast, and that the Senator, while he was Secretary of the Treasury, so stated in a letter which was communicated to the public?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly they were in circulation to a limited extent, but to a very limited extent, indeed; and I shall show hereafter the reason why they were not in circulation.

As the various petitions to Congress asking for the redemption of the trade-dollar at its nominal par in gold indicate a strong and no doubt sincere opinion that the United States is bound in honor to so redeem these coins, and some of these petitions charge the Government with fraud and repudiation for its neglect to do so, I deem it proper to more fully state the grounds of my opinion that neither honor nor public policy require or would justify Congress in giving to silver bullion in the form of trade-dollars any preference, advantage, or value over other forms of silver bullion daily purchased at its market value.

The coinage of this dollar was authorized by the coinage act of February 12, 1873, in words as follows:

That any owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at any mint to be formed into bars or into dollars of the weight of four hundred and twenty grains troy, designated in this act as trade-dollars, * * * and the charges for converting standard silver into trade-dollars * * * shall be fixed from time to time by the Director [of the Mint], with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, so as to equal, but not exceed, in their judgment, the actual average cost to each mint and assay-office of the material, labor, wastage, and use of machinery employed in each of the cases aforesaid.

As its name indicates, the purpose of this coin was for trade, not for circulation, though by classifying it with other silver coins the law made it a legal tender to the amount of $5 in any one payment.

At the time of the passage of the act the actual value of this dollar, including the charge of 1½ cents for coinage, was a little more than $1.04 in gold, or $1.18 in United States notes.

Under such circumstances there could be no object for the owner to put the coins into circulation, and consequently they were exported mostly to China, where, from lack of a circulating medium, these pieces, convenient in size, and bearing the guarantee of a great Government as to their weight and fineness, obtained an extensive circulation, and created a market for the silver of the Pacific States, as intended by the act.

After a few months, however, an unforeseen depreciation in the value of silver bullion occurred, and in the early part of 1876 this depreciation reached such a point that one dollar in gold would purchase more than the necessary amount of silver for a trade-dollar and pay for its coinage.

Under such conditions dealers in bullion found a profit in putting trade-dollars into circulation at par in the Pacific States, where the currency was upon a gold basis, but the coin being a legal tender for only $5, its circulation was necessarily limited in amount as well as restricted in locality.

The people of the Pacific States, however, objected to its use at all for circulation, and the attention of Congress having been called to the matter, on the 8th of May, 1876, Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, introduced into the House a bill the third section of which repealed the legal-tender quality of these coins.

On the 10th of June following, Hon. S. S. COX, of New York, reported the measure to the House, urging its adoption.

No objection was raised, and it became a law July 22, 1876, without modification or an opposing voice or vote in either House, and is as follows:

That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit from time to time the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

Mr. President, remember that up to this date the people of the United States east of the Nevada range had taken no interest in the trade-dollar. It was the people of the Pacific States who demanded the coinage of the trade-dollar to enable them to convert their silver bullion into a convenient form for exportation. When a few of these coins were issued and circulated among the people of the Pacific coast they remonstrated against that, and it was upon their remonstrance that a bill was introduced by Mr. RANDALL in the House and finally passed taking away from the trade-dollar all quality whatever as money, leaving it to stand where the law made it, a trade-dollar, to be coined for the benefit of the merchants or the owners of bullion and to be transported to China for the Chinese trade.

Up to that time probably no single citizen east of the Nevada range had the slightest interest in or care for the trade-dollar, for the simple reason that up to the time when the legal-tender quality was taken away from it it was worth from 10 to 15 per cent. more than the currency of the United States, and therefore it would not circulate East. What I said at the beginning is absolutely true as a fact, that up to the time of the taking away of the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar there were none in circulation east of the mountains. All that were circulated east of the mountains and all that were coined after the 22d of July, 1876, were made at a time when the trade-dollars were not received by the Government, were not paid by the Government, and were not practically a legal tender to the extent of a single farthing.

Mr. McPHERSON. Would it interfere with the Senator to answer a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not wish to interfere with the continuity of the Senator's remarks, but there is one question which suggests itself.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does not interfere, except that it tends to the prolongation of the few remarks I proposed to submit.

Mr. McPHERSON. There is one question which suggests itself to me right here. The Senator admits that Congress had passed a law providing for the coinage of the trade-dollars and making them coins of the United States; that from 1873 to 1876 they were coins of the United States and a legal tender. I wish to ask the Senator if he thinks it was honorable on the part of a great Government to take away the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollars without providing for their retirement at the time of the passage of the law of 1876.

Mr. SHERMAN. To have talked about the retirement of the trade-dollar at that time would have been simple folly. At the time the legal-tender quality was taken away from it the trade-dollar was worth 13 cents more than any dollar of the money of the United States then in circulation. Perhaps it would have been better if Mr. RANDALL had provided in his measure that the holder of the trade-dollar might convert it into a greenback, but that would have been simply a ludicrous and ridiculous proposition which would have been rejected with scorn, because the trade-dollar was then worth 13 cents more than the paper dollar.

Mr. MCPHERSON. But I submit to the Senator that if the greenback currency or national-bank currency, or any of the paper money of the United States, was worth less than gold at that time, that is no reason at all for the Government commencing the coinage of a monetary metal, and then in the end demonetizing it or robbing it of all its value as a circulating medium.

Mr. SHERMAN. On and after the 22d of July, 1876, it would have been folly to call the trade-dollar money. It was money neither by law nor by custom.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Did the Government continue to coin it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am afraid I shall never get through if my friend continues to interrupt me.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to make my meaning plain, and I hope the Senator will bear with me. After the passage of the joint resolution of 1876, which only robbed the trade-dollar of its legal-tender value and still left it a coin of the United States, the Senator says it had no value at all, and that people should not have received it. What notice did you give to the people? Take the coin and the law, compare the two things together, and show me how any man in this country would know from either the coin or the law that it was not a legal-tender coin of the United States to the extent of $5.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator propounds quite a number of questions. What notice did we give the people? We gave them the notice of the law. What notice can Congress give to the people except in the law plainly written? Under the law as it stood after the 22d of July, 1876, the trade-dollars ceased to be a legal tender. They were only issued upon the demand of the holders of bullion, who brought their bullion to the mint, and at their cost, for their benefit, without any profit to the Government of the United States, those trade-dollars were issued, under a law which expressly made them the private property of the individual depositor, and under a law too which took away from them the temporary quality they had had of being a legal tender.

Mr. MCPHERSON. As to those issued prior to 1876?

Mr. SHERMAN. As to those issued after that time the law gave notice, and except those which have been brought back from China—there may be a few exceptions here and there—all that were issued after the 22d day of July, 1876, were issued simply upon bullion owned by private parties.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the Senator will bear with me a moment more, the Director of the Mint in his report in 1879 reports that of the number of trade-dollars issued up to that time, something like fifteen million in amount, about twelve million had been exported, showing plainly and clearly that under that issue three million were in circulation among the people of the country. The people certainly were deceived as to the three million that had not been exported. As to the twelve million of which the Senator speaks as being designed expressly for export, they were designed no more for export than the three million which remained in the country. What matters it, let me ask the Senator, as to the issue prior to 1876, if every one of them had been exported and returned to the country the next day, or the next week, or the next month, they were coins of the United States of a legal-tender value, and for the Government to repudiate them seems to me to be very strange.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only objection I have to an interruption, because I am a very patient man and I can take it very leisurely and it does not disturb me, is that it tends to prolong the discussion and scatters my argument instead of confining it, as I wish to confine it, to as brief a period as possible.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the Senator will make that thing plain, I shall not interrupt him again.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not object to the interruption, and I intended to go on and state the points to which the Senator has called my attention.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I hope the Senator will make that thing plain. If he will do that, I shall certainly not interrupt him again.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make a marked distinction between the trade-dollars issued before the 22d of July, 1876, and those issued afterward. Before the 22d of July, 1876, they were a nominal legal tender, and the Government had pledged its faith to receive them to the extent of $5 in a single payment, and that was all; but after that time the Government of the United States did not undertake to do anything with them except to issue them to the holders of bullion who brought their bullion to the mint and to give them back in trade-dollars the identical silver that they brought to the mint, unless they preferred or were in a hurry to get an advance payment, when they would be paid out of the trade-dollars on hand.

The fact must not be forgotten that the Government of the United States never received the trade-dollar into its Treasury; it never paid out a trade-dollar from its Treasury after the act of July 22, 1876; it never put these dollars in circulation except as it coined them for the benefit of the holders of silver bullion. This day any citizen of the United States has a right to go to the mint and have his gold coined and have the identical bullion put into coin without cost and receive it; and also any citizen I believe (it used to be the law and I think it is so yet) may go to the mint and get any coin of the United States in order to preserve it in a collection, merely by paying its actual cost.

I have here a table which is familiar to all Senators of the amount of coinage of the trade-dollar before the legal-tender quality was taken away and afterward. These coins were issued as follows:

During the fiscal year ending June 30—

1874.....	$1,588,903
1875.....	5,697,500
1876.....	6,132,650
1877.....	9,162,900
1878, but prior to October 20, 1877.....	11,378,010

Total..... 35,959,360

It will be seen by this table that the total amount of trade-dollars issued prior to the passage of the law of July 22, 1876, was a little over 15,000,000, and it can be safely asserted that these, with the exception of a small number in circulation on the Pacific coast and a few held as curiosities at a time when coin was not in circulation, had been exported to foreign countries. If they are now in the United States they must have been imported since. A Senator stated that 80,000 trade-dollars, issued while they were a legal tender, were in the hands of a banker in New York. If so he probably imported them since July, 1876. More than 20,000,000 have been coined since, without any pretense whatever that it was a legal-tender coin of the United States for any amount, or that it bore the sanction or credit of the United States, except the guarantee that it contained 420 grains of standard silver, issued under a law which confined it to an amount sufficient to meet the export demand for silver. In this respect it was regarded by the law and the mint precisely like silver bars, as to which no pretense is made that the United States is bound, except only as to their weight and fineness; but substantially the whole of the trade-dollars now in circulation in the United States are part of the $20,000,000 issued since the legal-tender quality was taken away from them.

Owing to the appreciation of the paper currency, however, in the fall of 1877, the trade-dollar became of less value than the paper dollar, and in December of that year a large number of them were put into circulation, at their face value, at a profit to the owners of the bullion.

Apprehensive of such misuse of the coins, on the 15th of October in that year the Secretary of the Treasury ordered the discontinuance of their coinage at the mint at Philadelphia, and four days later at the other mints.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What year was that?

Mr. SHERMAN. In October, 1877. At that time they first commenced appearing in our circulation, because under the policy then adopted the notes of the United States were rapidly appreciating in value. The notes soon rose above the market value of the trade-dollars, and a year or more after the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollars had been taken away dealers and people, who could make a little money by getting the trade-dollars or taking bullion to the mint and having it coined into trade-dollars, began to issue the trade-dollars because they could make a little money by doing it, the paper money of the country having advanced above the market value of the trade-dollar.

Then they commenced circulating in our country. It was for the purpose of profit that the owners of silver bullion then rushed their silver into the mints and had it converted into trade-dollars, and issued those trade-dollars, and the people took them, although there was no law which justified their being passed as current money. They were issued because they were cheaper to the bullion dealer than the paper money of the United States—they could pass them off on a par with the paper money of the United States, and thus make a profit. There was the commencement of this trouble.

Appreciating that, the Secretary of the Treasury, in October, 1877, under the law which I have already read, stopped the coinage of them; but in the few months from the 1st of July, 1877, to the 20th of October, 1877, when the then Secretary of the Treasury discontinued the coinage, there had been issued $11,378,010 in those three or four months, in order to make the difference between the market value of the trade-dollar and the current value of the United States notes. The coinage was then stopped. Since that time no trade-dollars have been issued except occasionally as keepsakes or as curiosities, &c.; for under the law now anybody can go to the mint and get any of the coins of the United States in that way.

This is the history of the trade-dollar. I must confess my desire to oblige the many people who hold these trade-dollars; I appreciate their feelings; I know they are hearing me now; I sympathize with them in their loss; but I say, in spite of all that, they have no more right to complain of us or to call upon the Government to repair their losses in a failing speculation than they would if they had invested their money in wheat, or corn, or barley, or rice. To all the world except so far as the United States were concerned after the 22d of July, 1876, the silver in the trade-dollars was bullion, and if it fell in market value it was like other silver bullion mined by the miner, or held by anybody else, and it ought to have been so treated. The Government of the United States had no part or lot in this matter after the 15th of October, 1877.

Sometimes tables are misleading, as was shown in the case of even my friend from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], who is usually so very accurate in his remarks. In his remarks on this bill I agree, except that he made a mistake in the date; he supposed that this coinage was continued until 1878. It was continued into the fiscal year 1878, because the fiscal year 1878 commenced on the 1st of July, 1877; but the coinage of the trade-dollar was discontinued on the 20th of October, 1877, in Philadelphia, and three or four days afterward in California, as soon as by course of mail the order to discontinue might reach the mint at San Francisco.

In the use of the trade-dollars as money the United States has never had any interest or derived any profit. For the expense of their coinage the owner of the bullion reimbursed the Government, and this ended the connection of the Government with the transaction. At no time and on no account have they ever been received or paid out by the Treasury, and it is a cause of regret that so many of our people should have accepted them at more than their bullion value, thus enabling their owners to put them into circulation at a considerable profit.

The coinage act does not authorize their receipt or payment. The Government has uniformly treated them as bullion put in convenient form for the use of private parties. It has had no agency in their issue except to stamp them of legal weight and fineness. There is no equitable ground upon which the Government could be held to pay them, to redeem them, or to receive them except as four hundred and twenty grains of standard silver. Their market value has been ascertained and stated by the Director of the Mint from time to time. They are purchased at the mint as other silver bullion at current market rates.

This, so far as I am concerned, would end my argument on the silver question, but I know that a great many plausible arguments have been introduced. It is said that the credit of the Government is involved. I am sure if I thought so I would rather spend $5,000,000 than to vote to tarnish it in the slightest degree. But where is the credit of the Government involved? Where has the Government after the act of July 22, 1876, promised to pay the trade-dollars in anything? Indeed the law was plain and known to everybody. It was published all over the world. These dollars circulated around among the people, although they were tarnished and fell sometimes more or less below the par line. Then they got in large masses into the hands of persons who received them as an inducement for trade and held them as bullion, believing either that they could be passed off by being exported or that the Government of the United States would redeem them.

Sir, I have myself seen, as you have seen, published in the newspapers "trade-dollars received at par." Why was that done? It was because legally they had fallen below par. They were bullion, they were not at par, and as inducement to trade, especially by the butchers, by the grocers, and by the various retail dealers of the country, they were invited in as an inducement for trade, and probably a little extra price was put on the article sold. That would be the natural order of things.

Bullion dealers bought them as silver bullion. They were always worth a little more than their weight in other silver, because there was an indefinite idea that the Government would redeem them; but from 1876 to 1882, a period of six years, there was no demand made upon the Government of the United States to redeem the trade-dollars, although during all that time they were more or less falling in value. But when they had become aggregated by the refusal of the banks to receive them and they were then being bought up in masses and held, this demand was made upon us for their redemption.

I do not speak about our being bound to redeem them in clear law, because there is no pretense that there is any legal obligation to redeem them; but if we are bound in honor to redeem them, if we have deceived our people, if we have misled them, or if the Government had ever said anything in the world that would indicate that it was bound to pay the trade-dollars in gold coin or in its equivalent, I should vote to pay them if it took the last dollar in the crib. But there was no such obligation made; it is all inferential. If you choose to pay $5,000,000 to redeem the trade-dollars, well and good; it will make good some bad bargains of bullion dealers; that is about all there is of it.

There were 35,000,000 trade-dollars issued. They are worth now about 85 cents on the dollar, although one very intelligent and able gentleman, whom I respect very highly, tells me he thinks they are not worth that much now in market value. I assume that they are worth about 85 cents on the dollar as bullion. The Government has taken them as bullion. We have bought some of them as bullion, just like any other bullion. Ever since the passage of the law of 1878, in the purchases of silver which have been made in the last six years we have bought more or less of these trade-dollars as bullion. We have fixed their price. The Director of the mint has from time to time fixed their market value and announced it, and they are taken as bullion.

If the holders of the trade-dollars wish, they can now turn every one of them into the Treasury at the bullion value fixed every month by public advertisement, I may say; that is, at the lowest bid every week for the purchase of bullion to be coined into money. There is no difficulty now in the holder of bullion converting this form of bullion into money, and that will stop the interest. Some of these gentlemen say they have held this bullion so long that they have lost more in interest than the difference between the market value and the nominal value. That is their fault. The Government was willing to buy trade-dollars at the bullion price always. Still I say if there could be shown any moral obligation because of any false inducement made by the Government or even by the officers of the Government I should not hesitate at all to make good their losses. But there is none, sir.

My desire is, if possible, to avoid any controversy with any holder of anything bearing the impress of the eagle of the United States, but I have come to the conclusion that there is no moral obligation on the part of the United States to buy this bullion at any other price than is paid for that of the miner. Why should we?

It is admitted on all hands that three-fourths, yes, four-fifths (I think the Senator from Kentucky has insisted, and most of those who believe that this measure ought to pass have insisted, that four-fifths) of these trade-dollars are in foreign lands, and yet it is proposed to pay $1 in gold, I may say, or the equivalent of gold, for 420 grains of silver in the hands of the Chinese and the Japanese and the other foreign nations which hold these coins and in the hands of our own bullion brokers, while we will only pay $1 for 485 grains in the hands of the hardy miner who digs this precious metal from the bowels of the earth.

In other words, we discriminate against our own miners, our own citizens, our own workmen, and give a higher price for bullion in the hands of the money-dealers here and in foreign lands. It is true the Senator from Kentucky seeks to obviate that, and to the extent he goes I am willing to vote with him, by providing that wherever the Chinese have stamped the trade-dollar with their own insignia in order to give it additional credit there it shall not be redeemed. Although I do not see any reason in morals why if one ought to be redeemed the other ought not to be redeemed, yet, as I am opposed to the redemption of any, I am inclined to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, because that will lessen the number to be redeemed. He seems to think that many of these coins have gone into the melting-pots or have been stamped by Chinese characters, and that where they are so marked we can avoid the redemption of them; but in morals, if we are bound to redeem any one of them, we are bound to redeem them all, those in the hands of the Chinese as well as those in the hands of Americans.

There is another ridiculous feature about this measure. I think my friend from New Jersey was guilty of the solecism of suggesting that we do not propose to pay them in gold, but we propose to pay them in the standard silver dollar of 412½ grains. So say some of these gentlemen, "We will not redeem them in gold, but we will give you another dollar which contains 412½ grains." If that was all the value in the standard dollar of 412½ grains you could not get the Chinaman or anybody else to exchange 420 grains for 412½ grains. Such a bargain as that would all be on one side; it would be laughed at as frivolous and ridiculous. But we know very well that the coin of 412½ grains of standard silver means more than 412½ grains of silver; it means a dollar in gold, unless we intend to go back to the silver standard in this country. Four hundred and twelve and one-half grains of silver are worth about 84 cents in gold. It would be no favor to the holders of the trade-dollar to pay them 412½ grains for 420 grains, but it is because that standard dollar has an artificial value growing out of the fact that we maintain it at par with gold, that we receive it for all purposes, that we practically make it a legal tender, the equivalent of gold; it is because that standard dollar represents not only 412½ grains of silver, but it represents the promise and faith of the United States to make it as good as gold. Then the proposition to convert the 420 grains of silver in one form into 412½ grains in the other becomes a very different proposition. It involves the strange solecism of saying, "Oh, well, we will only give them 412½ for 420," when we give them in addition to the 412½ grains a promise of the United States to make it good, because the 412½-grain dollar is a legal tender, receivable for all public dues.

Mr. President, I would not care so much about this bill, nor would I have detained the Senate to make a speech upon it, if the trade-dollar were all there was in it. If Senators choose to give anywhere ranging from one and a half million dollars to five million three hundred thousand dollars to the holders of the trade-dollars, well and good; the Government can stand it; it will not break us up.

It is thought, and by my friend from New Jersey especially, that nearly all these dollars are circled around Philadelphia. That is the place of a great many good things, and nearly all the trade-dollars, I believe, now have in the course of commerce probably come within a radius of one hundred and fifty or two hundred miles of Philadelphia and New York, taking them together. They are held there as bullion in large masses, and I have no doubt that Senators representing those communities are very sensitive now about the honor and good faith of the United States, but I think they are far more sensitive to the interests of the constituents they represent. I do not blame them at all. If the Senate chooses under all the circumstances to redeem the trade-dollars, well and good; it is only a matter of dollars and cents.

If the bill stood as the House sent it to us I would not vote for it, but as it is now amended on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] it contains a proposition of infinitely greater importance than all this dispute about the trade-dollar; that is, it declares that after the 1st of August, 1886, the standard silver dollar shall no longer be coined.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him before he passes from the consideration of the other question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator stated that this coin is largely held in and about Philadelphia, and in that connection he stated that it is held as bullion. Is the Senator not informed of the fact that a very careful inquiry was made in respect to the holding of this coin in Pennsylvania since the subject has been under consideration and while it was under consideration in the House of Representatives, and that as the result of that inquiry it was found from the returns from bankers and business men and people at large in Pennsylvania that of $2,500,000 held in that State less than $100,000 had been taken at less than their face value?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have seen in the Philadelphia papers which have been sent to me that they were taken at par nominally, and some of the largest dealers there advertised that they would take them at par as an inducement to trade. In that way they were taken at par; but the bullion dealers never dealt with them at par. They never bought them at par. The market men and the clothing men and barbers and the liquor-sellers and a great many other classes of people took them as an inducement for business.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me I will inform him of the fact, at least as I understand it, that before the trade-dollar came into the hands of these dealers so largely as they may now be in their hands, this inquiry was made by actual communication, by letter, with persons who hold that coin, persons all over the State of Pennsylvania, in almost every county, I think, and that the computation was made from the facts as stated in those letters by a member of the House of Representatives, who himself made the inquiry.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I have said all I care to say about the trade-dollar.

All business transactions in the United States, both foreign and domestic, are now based upon the gold dollar, weighing 25.8 grains of standard gold.

The silver dollar, worth in market value .859 in gold, is maintained at par in gold by a limit to its issue, and its receipt into the Treasury for all debts, public and private. The market value of silver bullion has been slowly and steadily declining since the passage of the act providing for the coinage of the standard dollar. No serious effect has thus far been caused by the widening difference between the two standards of value, but it is manifest that if the result of this difference should lead to the large exportation and hoarding of gold, the sole standard of value would in time be based upon the market value of the silver bullion in the standard dollar. Already the occasional exportation of gold is one of the causes of financial stringency. By a law as immutable as fate, the gold dollar, demonetized, would then be quoted at a premium, and all current business transactions would be based upon a silver standard alone.

What would be the effect of this? The immediate effect would be a contraction of the currency so sharp and abrupt as to extend its shock to every village in the country. Gold is now held here in such vast sums that it might not at once be exported, but it would be hoarded and sold only at a premium, while the volume of silver and paper money redeemable in silver being insufficient to meet the current wants of business would be used for the payment of all labor, but its purchasing power would gradually decline until it reached the level of its market value measured by gold—illustrated by what occurred in 1877-'79. This depreciated currency would then take the place of the hoarded gold and gold certificates, and yet be insufficient for the wants of business.

We would then have a monometallic currency composed of silver alone as the standard of value of United States notes and bank notes, and another standard of value. Gold coin and certificates based upon such coin would be quoted at a premium. The laborer will receive his hire in the depreciated coin. The capitalist would stipulate for gold. All foreign commerce would be based upon gold. The pound sterling would be quoted at $5.56 instead of $4.84. All domestic exchanges would vary according to the kind of coin used in payment. In regions where the silver dollar is so greatly favored by popular opinion they would be paid in such dollars and be cheated in the purchasing power of their dollar. The mysteries of exchange which have been the basis of nearly all the financial fallacies of mankind will lead them to sell their productions at gold prices and buy their supplies at silver prices, and the bankers and brokers—the middlemen, who can see at a glance the chance of a profit—will make the difference. Then after the injury is done we will have an outcry for the redemption of the standard dollars in gold just as we now have for the redemption of the trade-dollars.

And that cry will be just and right. The standard dollar, unlike the trade-dollar, was issued by the United States to maintain the bimetallic policy, at the profit of the United States as the coequal of gold coin, to be received and paid in all respects and for all purposes like gold coin. If it is issued in excess of the demand, or for any reason falls below its coequal standard, then the United States are bound in honor as well as policy to redeem it or put enough silver in it to make it equal in the market to gold coin. Now the silver dollar represents 85 cents in actual value and 15 cents in faith that the United States will not allow it to fall below the gold coin. If that faith is doubted, the silver dollar will decline. If that faith is broken, then it will fall to 85 cents, and we will have two metallic standards.

I assume that in any event the Government of the United States would not willingly debase the standard of value upon which all contracts made since 1837 have been based. This unquestionably has been the gold dollar, the unit of value, which though for a time not in actual circulation, yet has always since been the nominal basis of silver and minor coins, and of all forms of paper money as well as of all contracts between private citizens. To take advantage of the fall in the value of silver bullion and base our contracts upon silver alone would be to reduce the commercial value of our dollar compared with the coin of other nations, derange the purchasing power of all annuities and of all bonds and securities, and enormously contract the currency by converting gold and gold certificates into articles of merchandise instead of active agents in commercial exchanges, and, whether designed or not, to bring dishonor upon the public credit and public securities.

The changing relations between gold and silver have continued for near four hundred years—since the discovery of America. During all that time, with slight pulsations, silver has steadily declined. Nations have many times changed the coinage ratio between the two metals. It is a matter of reproach that despotic governments have taken advantage of this change to reduce the standard of value in order to supply the extravagance of the court and waste of war, but it is hardly to be supposed that the United States, a free Government, founded upon the consent of the people, and desiring only to do equal and exact justice to all, would resort to an expedient so damaging to its own credit and so injurious alike to the laborer and the holder of property.

It is the true interest of all classes and all industries to maintain a circulation of both of the precious metals. The aggregate of both is necessary to form the basis of money, but it must be coined according to their respective market value, as near as may be. The miner sells his bullion according to its market value, and the Government should coin it according to the same value. To purchase it at market value and coin it at a fictitious value, known to be above its real value, with a view to make a profit on coinage, would seem to be bad alike in morals and in public policy. To debase the coinage, or to adopt the cheaper metal merely to make profit to the Treasury, can not be defended. The silver coin, in order to be freely taken, exported, or dealt in, must have the full, equal market value possessed by the gold coin. This alone constitutes bimetallic money. Any departure from this rule fills the market with cheaper money and drives out the better money. It is believed that the demonetization of either of the precious metals would be a wide-reaching calamity, extending to all quarters of the globe.

If there is any pressing question pending in our politics it is this question of making our standards of coin equal to each other according to their market value. This can only be done either—

First, by an international agreement with other nations to maintain a free coinage of silver at a fixed ratio; or

Second, by suspending the coinage of silver until it is demanded by the wants of business; or Third, by the adoption of an American bimetallic policy of the free coinage of silver and gold according to their market value.

The Committee on Finance does not seem inclined to meet this broad economic problem, though, in my judgment, it is wise at this moment not only to suspend the coinage of the silver dollar, but boldly to proclaim the purpose of the United States to maintain bimetallic money, even if it stands alone in that position among the nations of the earth. As the chief producer of both gold and silver we are better able to establish this new policy than any other country. France did it in 1795 and, with the aid of the Latin nations, preserved the equilibrium upon a given ratio of silver and gold for two generations. The same policy adopted now will, I confidently believe, secure steadiness in the relative market value of these two metals for a long period of time.

If any slight change occurs, the metal too highly valued will be retained here and the metal too cheaply valued will be exported. Slight mutations in this exportation between the two metals may from time to time exist with no material injury, but the substantial convertibility of one into the other in all the multiplied business of our country and the uniform steadiness of our paper money based upon both metals, including certificates based upon the deposit of both gold and silver, will secure us a currency of uniform value and steadiness, both of coin and paper, greatly superior to that enjoyed by any other nation in the world.

But the policy I have indicated is, perhaps, at this time in advance of the sentiment of the country and of Congress, and, therefore, I do not seek to press it now, but am content to deal with such propositions as will give us some safeguard against what I regard as the great threatened evil, that of the demonetization or hoarding and exporting of gold.

I do not have much faith, and never had, that we could negotiate for an international ratio, for the first step in such a negotiation with the Latin nations would be to stipulate for the old ratio of 15½ to 1. Without the concurrence of Great Britain such a ratio could not be obtained, and I have no hope of such a concurrence, nor do I believe such a ratio is wise or could long be maintained. What we want now is to give to our own people assurance and confidence that we intend to maintain our silver and gold coins as equal and convertible standard—that a dollar of one shall be equal to a dollar of the other. In the absence of such an assurance, and in view of the enormous accumulations of silver coin in the Treasury and the evident disposition to select silver coin and silver certificates for payment to the Treasury, there is danger that a continued coinage of the silver dollar may precipitate its decline in market value.

To check this tendency the Finance Committee propose by the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to renew negotiations with the Latin Union and with other foreign powers to secure such co-operation as will enable these nations to open their respective mints to the free coinage of silver at an agreed ratio, and it provides that in case such treaties can not be concluded prior to August 1, 1886, then the coinage of the silver dollar of the United States shall be suspended. This important amendment will, in my judgment, arrest the tendency of the depreciation of the silver dollar by giving assurance that within a limited time the threatened danger will be averted. With this amendment I should vote for the bill, though it involves the payment of the trade-dollar, a measure of preference of one form of silver bullion to which it is not entitled.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I had expected that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] would reply to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and I shall detain him but a few moments.

I am prepared to stand on the argument I made the other day, but since the Senator from Ohio, who has himself been a distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, has reasserted with great emphasis that we are under no sort of obligation to retire the trade-dollar, that no one was misled by it, that no one has the trade-dollars except speculators and men who obtained them at less than par, and who want to substitute standard silver dollars for them, I desire to read what Hon. Charles J. Folger, late Secretary of the Treasury, in his report to Congress on the 3d day of December, 1883, said in regard to this matter, and there I will leave it between the two Secretaries, both distinguished representatives of the party that I differ with in many things. Mr. Folger said:

Here I may speak of "the trade-dollar," the debased coin to which attention has been drawn by public clamor and discussion. Doubtless the legislative purpose in creating it was to make a piece of money that would find favor with Asiatic people, and not one for use at home. That purpose was not made known, however, by the letter of the law under which it issued from the mint. The act of 1873, under which the coinage of it began, has these words: "The silver coins of the United States shall be a trade-dollar; a half-dollar, or fifty-cent piece; a quarter-dollar, or twenty-five-cent piece; a dime, or ten-cent piece." The act further declares that the relative proportion of pure metal and alloy in the trade-dollar, and the devices and legends upon it, shall be the same as those of the other coins of the United States. That act, and a later one of 1877, made it a crime to counterfeit any of our coins, and, as the trade-dollar was declared to be a coin, made it a crime to counterfeit it.

The act of 1873 made the silver coins of the United States, and hence the trade-dollars, a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not over $5. Thus the reading of the laws taught the people that the trade-dollar was a coin of their sovereignty, and for the redemption of which, at an unabated value, their Government was bound. The real legislative purpose is to be blindly sought for in tradition or in the record of Congressional discussion, and is indicated in the joint resolution of 1876, which took away from this coin the legal-tender quality of it, and held down the coinage of it to the call for it for exportation. It is plain that a busy people, finding this coin afloat in the channels of business styled a coin of the United States, would readily believe that it was an authentic issue of the Government, and to be redeemed by the Government the same as other money put out by it. From time to time, however, as it suits scheming men and the occasion fits, a hue and cry is raised against it; it is discredited in the market, and unwary holders suffer loss or inconvenience.

As it is a coin of the United States, having the image and superscription thereof, sanctioned as such by penalties upon the counterfeiting of it, and once dignified as a legal tender in payment of debts and dues, it should be restored to its first state, or called in at its nominal value and melted. In the judgment of this Department, it should be thus called in and melted. And why not? First: It has been claimed officially that it did not go into home circulation until after the passage of the joint resolution above spoken of, whereby the legal-tender quality of it was taken from it. Hence, it is said it is no duty to our people to redeem it at more than the value of it as silver bullion."

Then he says:

The first of these contentions—

The one I have read—

The first of these contentions is too technical and close for use in dealing with so practical a matter, and one in which the prime action and continued silent enfeeblement of the Government has been so misleading.

That is the way he disposed of that argument. Again he said:

It is calculated that five-sixths thereof went abroad in the beginning, and it is believed that but a small part of that has come back, and that there is now held by our people but from five to eight millions. Of that which remained abroad there is good authority for saying that much of it found its way from China to India, and into the melting-pot at the mint in Calcutta, and has been there cast into the coin of that country.

That is all I care to take the time of the Senate in reading on that branch of the question. The Secretary proceeded:

A thorough and effective redemption of it can be brought about in this way: Let authority be given by Congress to the Treasury Department to barter for trade-dollars at their nominal value standard dollars at their nominal value, and melting the trade-dollars to recoin them into standard silver dollars, counting the trade-dollars got in this way as a part of the silver bullion which the act of 1876 empowers and directs to be bought and coined monthly.

That is precisely what I propose to do in the amendment referred to by the Senator from Ohio and precisely what the Senate Committee on Finance report, following the recommendation of Secretary Folger. Again that Secretary said:

This Department would rather see all the trade-dollars that are afloat anywhere brought in and made bullion of, even at a cost to the Government, if thus we may be rid of a discredited and debased coin; but if this may not be, it still will wish that those in the hands of our people be redeemed in the mode recommended, with safeguards against foreign holders.

That is what my amendment to the original bill proposes, and not to readopt those which have been stamped by foreign nations as their own. Again the Secretary said:

And if the receipt of the trade-dollars by the exchange in any month shall be, when treated as bullion, more in sum than would be a purchase of two millions' worth of bullion, then the excess thereon can be carried forward from month to month, so far as need be to keep within the direction of the act of 1873 for monthly purchases.

And we have guarded that in the amendment applying only $500,000 a month.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to know if the whole proposition as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury was not to pay a small premium of about 2 per cent.

Mr. BECK. No, sir. The Senator from Vermont the chairman of the committee will see before I am done reading—and I will only read a little more—that he proposed to take them dollar for dollar and exchange standard dollars for them. I have read that already, he repeats it again in a passage which I will now proceed to read.

Mr. MORRILL. That was the position of the President—I was thinking about his message—and of the present Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BECK. This is the report of Secretary Folger in December, 1883, to the Congress of the United States:

And if the receipt of the trade-dollars by the exchange in any month shall be, when treated as bullion, more in sum than would be a purchase of two millions' worth of bullion, then the excess thereon can be carried forward from month to month, so far as need be to keep within the direction of the act of 1873 for monthly purchases. And this would be more or less likely to come into play as the limit of time for redemption is shorter or longer. If, indeed, no limit of time was fixed, or it was made as long as a twelvemonth, this Department could be empowered to refuse redemption in one month of a sum more than enough to meet the requirement of that act, and still make full redemption of all that is likely to be brought in therefor.

If it be said that much of this coin—

As seems to be now the scarecrow that is being used by gentlemen who oppose the view I take—

If it be said that much of this coin, discredited and practically debased, is in the hands of speculators who have taken it at a discount, and that they would profit by legislation which would increase the actual value of it, while it may not be denied that lamentably this is too far the case, still it is to be answered that such is the luck brought by all debased coin when at last it is fairly redeemed. Speculators will make by a depreciation and following appreciation. A law for a fair redemption must have, with its good, the evil of helping some to gain who ill deserve it. The fault is not much more with the speculative trader than with the legislation that has given him the chance for ignoble gain. His profit is a light incident, calling slightly for attention, because of the great general good to come from calling in a discredited coinage.

Besides, leave this coin unredeemed, and by and by, when public attention is at a lull again, it will be once more set afloat at nominal value, to be in fullness of time once more discredited and lowered in purchasing power to the harm of good people. Moreover, the information which I have from practical and reliable men, who are at the sources of knowledge on this head, is that those known as tradesfolk, and most of the working people not in straits, uncompelled by necessity to part with the trade-dollar at a loss, have held it during panics, looking and waiting for action by the Government; and that the amount stored by brokers is a small part of what is in domestic ownership, the larger part being held by those who took them at full face for labor and in traffic in legitimate and honorable dealing. It is best, once for all, to call it in and put it out of possible use.

That is the opinion given us by the Senator from New Jersey, and by others who appeared before the committee and by facts that have been exhibited, that there are many thousands of trade-dollars coined before 1876 yet held by the people who took them then, and this is the bill that I have advocated and now advocate. The Secretary concludes:

This Department does not recommend that a legal-tender quality be again given to the trade-dollar, to the sudden increase of the legitimate silver money of the country, with the inconvenience and incongruity of two dollars circulating together, of the same metal, of unequal real value and of different devices, yet of equal value in payment of debts and of purchase of property. It recommends that authority be given for the redemption of the trade-dollar in the standard silver dollar dollar for dollar of nominal value—for the recoinage of the metal so received into a standard silver dollar to accord with the law for that coin, and for a reduction of the amount of silver bullion resulting from the exchange from the quantity of bullion required to be got by monthly purchases, for the purpose of coining under the act of 1873. In the judgment of this Department that legislation is safe, and is demanded by the character of this issue, and by the need of the people for relief from the confusion and exposure to recurring loss caused by its presence in the monetary system of the country.

Does the Senator from Vermont hear that declaration with emphasis by the Secretary?—

Mr. President, I lay the plain, practical, honest views of that Secretary of the Treasury before the Senate as a full answer to all that has been said by the Senator from Ohio.

In regard to the section sought to be stricken out, I do not care to argue it any further than to say that whatever may happen hereafter this Congress should deal with the question carefully after full examination, but in the last hours of this Congress we ought not to be striking down our silver coinage in the mode proposed by telling foreign nations that if they can so far intervene as to keep the Latin Union or the silver-using countries from agreeing with us, then England and Germany shall have their way against silver and strike it down. And far less do

I think of any proposition that is being made to say to any President that he may in his discretion suspend or strike down the coin of the country, which every State, and every municipality, and every corporation, and every individual has a right to have coined by the United States. It was because the States and the people believed the United States would coin silver that they gave that power to the General Government. I would as soon think of giving to any President, no matter how much faith I might have in him, the power to declare war as to give him the power to strike down or suspend the coinage of this country; and I am glad to be able to say that there is no danger of its being done; that elsewhere in a body that has power, on an attempt that was made this very day, it has failed and failed unmistakably.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in replying to Senators who have in this debate advocated the extraordinary amendment proposed by the Finance Committee to the pending bill I must take up successively some of the points which they have made, and this will necessarily give to my remarks somewhat of a desultory character.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] praises the Secretaries of the Treasury for "pushing and industrious zeal" in attempting, as he thinks unsuccessfully, to get silver into circulation. Among these displays of zeal does he count the acquiescence of successive Secretaries in the action of the New York Clearing-House, the principal point of Government payments, in the rule adopted by it on the 12th of November, 1878, under which neither silver dollars nor silver certificates were to be received at all for clearing-house balances?

Does he regard this assent of the Treasury Department to the tabooing of silver as money, at the place where the bulk of the Government disbursements is made, as being compensated for by its show of favor to the silver dollars, in sending them to the few people who may happen to make special application for them? In what light does he regard the action of the Treasury Department in 1882, and down to the present time, in tacitly agreeing, and in strictly acting upon its tacit agreement, not to offer silver in discharge of its balances at the New York Clearing-House after the New York banks had been compelled by Congress to repeal the rule under which silver was made non-receivable? Did this show a "pushing and industrious zeal" in circulating silver, or even a decent regard of the Treasury Department to the law-making power?

The violation by the banks of New York of the plain intent of the act of 1882 in respect to the settlement of clearing-house balances in silver certificates and the palpable connivance of the present Secretary of the Treasury and of his immediate predecessor in this misconduct of those institutions have been many times pointed out in this Chamber. An occurrence which took place on the 9th of this month adds to their misdoings very aggravating features of evasion and hypocrisy. On the day referred to, and as is believed by a preconcert between the banks and the Treasury Department, the assistant treasurer at New York tendered to the banks in part settlement of the clearing-house balances a small sum in silver certificates, stated by the New York papers to be $120,000, and the banks accepted it.

The local editor of the New York Tribune, a paper which has been distinguished for its zeal in supporting the refusal of the banks to receive silver certificates, gives in that paper of February 11 the following account of the motives of the banks in seeming on the 9th to have relaxed in their exclusion of silver:

It is understood that the Monday payment by the subtreasury was intended to accomplish two objects, to soothe any jealousy on the part of country banks and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to answer satisfactorily the Congressional inquiry whether any national banks or clearing-house associations refused to accept silver or silver certificates. As the New York Clearing-House has now accepted silver in payment of balances, both it and the subtreasury have complied with the Federal law. It is generally understood by bank officers that payment in silver will not be repeated except in cases of emergency.

This acceptance of silver certificates on the 9th instant is thus admitted to have been partly a temporary sham to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to answer troublesome inquiries from Congress, and partly a soothing measure to keep banks in other cities from complaining that they are compelled to take silver certificates, while the New York banks are paid in gold and Treasury notes.

The country will understand, as this writer admits that the New York bank officers understand, that the New York Clearing-House will not hereafter be asked to accept silver certificates "except in cases of emergency," and that things will run along in their old course after Congress adjourns, unless the new administration shall enforce the act of 1882 in good faith, which is evidently not expected by the banks.

But is the Senator from Vermont quite sure that with all the ill-will to silver of successive Secretaries of the Treasury, apparently most malignant on the part of a free-trade doctrinaire and ex-London and New York banker who now presides over the Treasury by a mysterious dispensation of the power of President Arthur, there has been no success in getting silver into circulation? With all his painstaking attention to figures, is it not remarkable that the Senator from Vermont has overlooked the fact that of the silver dollars so far coined no greater proportion is owned by the Treasury Department than it owns and holds of the existing gold money, and that as great a proportion of the silver is in circulation, outside of the Treasury, in either the metallic or certificate form, as there is of the gold money?

At the close of business on the 31st of January, 1885, the Treasury held and owned of gold, after deducting the amount belonging to the holders of outstanding certificates, $125,187,578, while it held and owned of the silver dollars, deducting the amount belonging to the holders of outstanding certificates, $36,783,343. If we adopt the estimate that there is now in the country $610,000,000 of gold money, and it is generally regarded as a correct estimate, one-fourth of it, within a minute fraction, was held and owned by the Treasury January 31, and only three-fourths of it was in circulation. But at the same date, of the $192,000,000 of silver coined, a little less than one-fifth was held and owned by the Treasury, and slightly more than four-fifths was in circulation. And, furthermore, of the silver dollars and silver certificates outside of the Treasury, nearly the whole was in circulation from hand to hand, because the banks as a rule make it a point to keep as little silver as possible among their reserves; whereas of the gold outside of the Treasury a large part is locked up in the vaults of the banks.

Even if he has not examined the figures, how can the Senator from Vermont have failed to know, what is a matter of universal observation and knowledge, that the rarest thing to be seen in the circulation this side of the Pacific coast is a piece of gold money?

As a part of his objection to the silver dollar the Senator from Vermont takes occasion to say that "all of our people prefer a paper-money currency, if it is only the equal of our standard coins."

That is exactly what the framers of the silver law of 1878 knew and acted upon when they provided that the holders of silver dollars could, at their option, have them represented by silver certificates in "money-note form" of the denomination of $10 and upward. Nothing can be more nearly equal to standard coin, and more perfectly combine the convenience of paper with the safety of coin, than a certificate of gold or silver deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and required to be kept unused until the owners call for it.

During the last session of Congress I submitted a bill making such description of paper, backed by coin dollar for dollar, a legal tender. I have only been restrained from pressing it by the belief that the Senator from Vermont and those who act with him upon questions of currency would oppose it by all the resources of legislative delays.

It is certain that President Arthur, both the Secretaries of the Treasury of his appointment, and numerous other official and unofficial persons, with whom the Senator from Vermont is in the habit of acting, have recommended, in addition to stopping the further coinage of silver dollars, that the issue of certificates for such dollars already coined shall not be hereafter permitted. I have reason to believe that the Senator from Vermont will support these recommendations when I notice that he stigmatizes the silver certificates as a "queer form of paper money," and says that it is a form of money which is "rapidly increasing and usurping the place of United States notes as well as of national-bank notes," and finally declares that "it is by far the dearest and most expensive paper currency ever invented."

There is no mistaking the animus of a Senator who denounces as "queer" a currency of silver certificates when he has been since 1863 an assenting and supporting party, in either this or the other branch of Congress, to legislation providing for gold certificates, which are identical in character and principle with the silver certificates.

There is no mistaking the animus when he asserts that silver certificates are "usurping the place" of United States notes and national-bank notes, when the plain truth known of all men is that they have not taken the place of either class of notes, but have been a useful and much-needed addition to both. Within a few weeks after the passage of the silver law of 1878 Congress fixed absolutely by law the volume of United States notes, and it has not been varied by one single dollar from that day to this from the usurpation of their place by silver certificates, or in any other way.

The circulation of bank notes to-day is about the same in volume as it was when the silver law of 1878, with its provision for silver certificates, was enacted. During the time which has passed since 1878 the volume of bank notes first increased and has since decreased, but neither the increase nor the decrease was caused by the existence of silver certificates or of gold certificates. Their volume is now declining, but, as everybody knows, it is from the high premium which Government bonds have attained and from the small profits to be made from purchasing such bonds at their present prices as the basis for bank-note circulation.

Among the other amazing declarations made by the Senator from Vermont is the following, which I read in the exact language in which it appears in the RECORD: "Certainly no one has ever pretended that it [the silver law of 1878] could be successful without the co-operation of other nations, and it should not be charged to the friends of bimetalism (the supporters of the silver law of 1878) that they intended an insidious measure to separate the United States from the great commercial nations of the world by fastening upon us the silver standard of monometallism."

It is true that the supporters of the silver law of 1878, who were the great body of the people and of the representatives in Congress of the States and the people, did not intend by the law of 1878 to fasten upon the country "the silver standard of monometallism." It is also true that that law has not produced any such result, but that, on the contrary, the volume of gold in the country has more than doubled since the law was passed, and that the prospect for an indefinite future is that it will continue to increase. But the supporters of the silver law were and are determined that a gold "standard of monometallism" shall not be fastened upon the country, and as one of them I declare for myself that if we must have monometallism in any form, which I do not believe and to which I am opposed, I prefer silver monometallism to gold monometallism, because the latter will most completely sacrifice the interests of producers, laborers, and tax-payers to aggrandize the moneyed creditors and income classes.

When the Senator from Vermont says that the supporters of the silver law of 1878 believed its success to be dependent upon the co-operation of the "great commercial nations"—by which he means England and Germany—or that the law must be abandoned, unless we could make a bimetallic treaty with some of the nations of Europe, which is constantly becoming a less important part of the world, he must have totally forgotten the discussions which preceded and attended the passage of that law.

In the report of the United States monetary commission, appointed by Congress in 1876, the concluding language of the majority who recommended the remonetization of silver was:

The commission believe that the facts that Germany and the Scandinavian States have adopted the single gold standard, and that some other nations may possibly adopt it, instead of being reasons for perseverance in the attempt to establish it in the United States, are precisely the facts which make such an attempt entirely impracticable and ruinous. * * * The attainment of such a standard becomes difficult, precisely in proportion to the number and importance of the countries engaged in striving after it; and it is precisely in the same proportion the ruinous effects of striving after it are aggravated.

The provision for an international monetary conference with European powers was voted on as an amendment (February 15, 1878) of the bill for silver coinage sent up by the House. The vote on the amendment was yeas 40, nays 30. Of the Senators in favor of a gold standard, and who finally voted against the bill after the amendment was adopted, twenty-one voted in favor of the amendment, and only one [Mr. EDMUNDS] voted against it. Mr. EDMUNDS objected that the proposed conference was limited to an effort to regulate a double standard, whereas he was opposed to a double standard, and believed that the conference should be empowered to agree upon a single standard. His language was:

The commission is tied up; the matter is decided in advance to the theory of a double standard of value, which the experience of this country and every other has shown from the beginning to be only fraught with disaster to everybody who engages in it.

Of the Senators in favor of silver coinage, and whose votes passed the bill at last over the President's veto, 19 voted for the amendment and 29 voted in the negative. It thus appears that the amendment was carried by the unanimous votes, with one exception, of the Senators opposed to silver remonetization, combined with the vote of a minority of the Senators who were in favor of silver remonetization.

One view taken by the Senators who were in favor of silver coinage, and who voted against the amendment, was, as the record of the debate will show, that the amendment might be construed as an admission that the success of silver coinage in the United States depended upon European co-operation, which they utterly denied and repudiated. Another view was that it was unwise to fetter by treaty stipulation the free exercise at all times of the constitutional power of Congress over the coinage of money.

As respects the great body of the Senators who were in favor of silver coinage and who voted for the amendment, there is no reason to doubt that their opinions were fairly expressed by Senator Ferry, of Michigan, who said: "My view is that it is desirable to secure the co-operation of foreign powers, but if they decline it we can stand alone." How extraordinary it will appear in the face of these authentic evidences of the opinions of the supporters of the silver coinage during the struggle which preceded the law of 1878 that it shall now be said that nobody ever maintained that we could coin silver in this country unless certain European nations, such as England and Germany, should also agree to coin it, or unless the larger part of the specie-paying European nations could enter into bimetallic arrangements with us!

Undoubtedly the supporters of silver money in the United States would have been willing in 1878 to admit that without some foreign co-operation silver could not be supported as one of the moneys of the world. But it was true then, as it is true to-day, that silver is the exclusive metallic money of the larger part of the human race; and it is impossible that the supporters of silver coinage in this country could have doubted in 1878, or that they now doubt, the entire feasibility of sustaining silver, with the assured aid of Asia and of the great and advancing countries south of us in North and South America, and in the presence of the further fact that there is in Europe, which can not be exchanged for gold, more than eight hundred million dollars in full-tender silver coins.

The Senator from Vermont affirms that the law of 1878 has been "of no benefit to our silver mines," and that it "has not sustained the price of silver," by which he means the value of silver in exchange for gold, or, in other words, the gold price of silver. But if there is any undisputed truth in political economy it is that the prices of everything depend upon the play against each other of the two forces of demand and supply, and it would be a waste of words to combat the proposition which the Senator advances that a new demand at our mints for silver to an extent of more than one-fourth of the world's total product has not helped to sustain its price and has not benefited the miners. To prevent a fall of 10 per cent. when it might otherwise have been 20 per cent. is a benefit to producers equal in importance to that which would arise from raising it 10 per cent. British India, the principal silver market in the world, absorbed during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1878, the extraordinary amount of $73,331,675 of silver, while it absorbed during its fiscal year ending March 31, 1879, only $19,853,475.

It was the unusually great India demand during the year immediately preceding the American silver law of February 28, 1878, which brought up the price of silver from the point of depression which it had reached in 1876, and which was lower than it had reached before or has reached since, to the comparatively high point at which it stood when our silver law was passed. The price fell in 1878, after February 28, because the Indian demand fell off by a greater sum than the amount of the coinage at our mints, and the price would have fallen very much more if our coinage of silver had not prevented it. If the Senator really expects to carry his plan of closing our mints to silver by making either Congress or the country believe that a monthly demand of our mints for $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion does not sustain the price of silver, and does not benefit those who mine it, he has undertaken an enterprise in which, with all his ability and all his perseverance, he will certainly fail.

The Senator admits that silver certificates, and of course silver dollars, which can at any time at the option of the holder be converted into silver certificates, are at a parity with gold, but he says that is only because the Treasury receives them "on the par of gold in the payment of duties." Without doubt the receivability of silver for all Government debts and taxes, including custom-house duties, assists the currency of silver, and so does also the function of being a legal tender for private debts assist it; but it is no more true of silver than it is of other descriptions of money that their currency and acceptability as mediums of exchange depend upon the functions of legal-tender and tax-paying power with which the law endows them.

But without following the Senator into the mazes of a theoretical discussion of the causes of the actual parity of value in the markets between silver and gold coined money, it is sufficient that he admits that the parity exists, and that he also admits that men of business are constantly exchanging gold for silver certificates at the United States Treasury offices on equal terms, dollar for dollar, on account of the superior convenience in the use of such certificates.

But while admitting that silver dollars are to-day, and have been during the seven years since the coinage was resumed, of equal value with gold dollars, he not only insists that this equality can not long exist, but he undertakes to fix the date beyond which it can not be expected to be maintained. Disclaiming the intention of being an alarmist he declares that the depreciation of silver, the expulsion of gold, and the bringing the country to a silver standard may not happen "in the present year, possibly not in the next," thus indicating that it is only barely "possible," but by no means probable, that the calamity can be averted beyond the end of 1886, but he abstains, and it seems to me very prudently abstains, from stating the reasons which have led his mind to that conclusion.

At the present rate of coinage we will have coined at the end of 1886 246,000,000 silver dollars. Is it conceivable that that number of silver dollars will depreciate when they are receivable on the par of gold for the taxes of every description of a government with an annual revenue of $300,000,000, and when they are a tender for all the private debts of 57,000,000 of people who have no equals on the face of the globe in the activity, number, and magnitude of their industries, exchanges, and credit transactions? And especially can we conceive of this result when we know that France, with only two-thirds of our population and one-eighteenth of our territorial area, does to-day sustain, at a perfect parity with gold, $537,000,000 of full-tender silver coins, containing 3 per cent. less of silver, as compared with its gold coins, than is contained in the silver coinage of our mints?

The Senator says that "the Latin nations have kept silver on a par with gold by a limitation of its coinage, or by ceasing to coin it in excess." But neither France nor any other of the Latin nations has found by experience that its silver coinage was "in excess," and no one of them has melted down or withdrawn in any way any part of its silver coins. It is true that they have stopped their silver coinage at certain limits (and that this limit in the case of France was fixed at the amount of $537,000,000) from mixed motives, of perhaps excessive caution, and of antagonism to Germany, whose operation of exchanging silver for gold the French people preferred rather to obstruct than to facilitate. But can it be gravely argued that because France has, from whatever motives, suspended its silver coinage at a certain limit, we ought either now or eighteen months hence to suspend our coinage, when we are not within twenty years of reaching that limit at our present rate of coinage, taking into account relative differences of area and population and the rapid growth of this country in all the elements of numbers, trade, and wealth which occasion a demand for money?

What evidence is there that there is an "occasional surplus" of silver in France which "has to be gathered up and held as is done by the Bank of France?" What French or other authority does the Senator cite in support of the statement that the Bank of France was ever obliged to gather up and hold a single dollar of silver because silver dollars were in excess, or ever took in a dollar of silver except in the course of its business and for the purpose of protecting its own safety, solvency, and solidity as a coin-paying institution? There is no such evidence and there is no such fact.

While there is no public man in France who suggests the withdrawal of either the whole or any part of its coined silver money, the Bank of France has been from the beginning and is to-day the sturdiest and most pronounced opponent of any such impossible and suicidal policy. Instead of regarding the silver of France as a burden, which the Bank of France must carry, its managers regard it as the best bulwark of the safety of the institution over which they preside and of the finances and prosperity of their country.

I do not charge the Senator from Vermont, who has served so long, so usefully, and so honorably in the highest councils of his country, with any set purpose of exciting alarms, false in themselves and dangerous to public confidence. Nevertheless his declaration that "silver certificates may ultimately prove less valuable than United States notes" must have the effect with those who believe that the declaration has any good foundation to induce them to receive such certificates with reluctance and to impair their acceptability and usefulness as a currency.

But it is too plain that a certificate promising to pay silver dollars, and also promising to keep always on hand and unused the full amount of silver dollars promised, can never be less valuable than a note which is redeemable in silver at the option of the same Government, but for which the silver in which it is redeemable is not kept on hand. The act of 1875 directing the resumption of specie payments January 1, 1879, ordered the greenbacks to be then and thereafter paid in coin. There is not the slightest ground for pretending that at any time or in any act the Government ever made any promise, express or implied, to pay them in gold; and any Secretary of the Treasury who should dare to pay them in gold, if that method of payment was more onerous to the country, ought to be impeached and punished for it.

The notes of the United States are a perfectly safe currency, but they can not become a more valuable currency than silver certificates until our laws relating to currency and finances are fundamentally changed.

The Senator from Vermont says that "the vital spark in business industries is the solid and unchanging character of the money in circulation."

Without doubt frequent changes in our monetary system are attended with many mischiefs, and they can rarely be necessary; but the remark which I have quoted seems hardly a suitable one to come from a Senator who is the reporter and leading manager of a proposition to unsettle all that was deliberately done in 1878.

That proposition is to strike down the only coin we have ever had under the Constitution of the United States which has never been changed in its essential feature. The amount of pure silver which it contains, originally fixed by Alexander Hamilton at 371½ grains in 1792 is the same now as it was then. The gold eagle has been twice changed in the amount of pure metal which it contains, but the silver dollar has never changed in that particular, and has therefore come to be naturally regarded and spoken of as the "standard silver dollar."

If we have any old and time-honored landmark in monetary and financial affairs it is the silver dollar.

It is as old within three years as the beginning of George Washington's first Presidential term, and yet we have a proposition to destroy it from a Senator who tells us that nothing is more essential to business industries than the "unchanging character of the money in circulation."

If the efforts of the Senator from Vermont to introduce changes can be defeated, as I feel assured they will be, it can be said of this Congress that it left the currency laws as it found them, and that if it had done no good in that particular it had done no harm.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] has favored this body with a speech upon the pending bill. Rather more than half of it was devoted to a demonstration that this Government is not under the slightest obligation to redeem the trade-dollar at more than its bullion value, but closes with a declaration that he was ready to vote to pay for them at their nominal value, at a cost or loss to the Government of something like $1,500,000, for the purpose of giving the country a moral lesson of some kind or other. I have never heard before that Congress had any right to appropriate the money of the tax-payers except to provide for carrying on the Government and paying its debts. No warrant is found in the Constitution for appropriating money for the purpose of giving moral lessons to anybody. The Senator from Delaware will doubtless explain to the Senate, and to his constituents, in his own way and at the proper time, on what political or ethical basis he will vote $1,500,000 to individuals whom he says have no just claim to it.

A part of the speech of the Senator from Delaware is in support of the proposition to stop the coinage of silver dollars, to the resumption of which in 1878 he was one of the strongest opponents, and which he has never ceased to denounce from that day to this. He reiterates statements which have been shown over and over again to be completely erroneous, and principles of political economy which are not supported by a single good authority, and which are incomprehensible as a matter of reasoning.

He says that the standard silver dollar, as compared with the trade-dollar, is "confessedly less in actual value," when all market quotations and the knowledge of everybody proves it to be about 15 per cent. higher. The trade-dollar is worth a good deal less than a gold dollar, but I do not believe that the Senator from Delaware ever purchased a standard dollar at less than its face value in gold, or that he can name any market in the United States where it can now be purchased for less. If there is anybody who has confessed that the silver dollar is of less "actual value" than the gold dollar the Senator from Delaware does not name him. I am certain that no supporter of the double standard has ever "confessed" that the actual market and exchangeable value of the silver dollar is inferior to that of the gold dollar, or believes that it is likely to become so for an indefinitely long period to come.

If confessions of that kind have been made it must have been by the clearing-house bankers of New York or similar classes of persons.

The Senator from Delaware quotes, adopts, and indorses the statement of Mr. McCulloch, the Secretary of the Treasury, that the Government is under certain gold obligations. That statement is wholly gratuitous and without a shadow of foundation.

From the Secretary of the Treasury, who is an executive official, and bound to obey the laws enacted by Congress, it was an unwarrantable statement, inasmuch as Congress declared seven years ago that the silver dollar should discharge all public debts except where it was otherwise stipulated in the contract, and neither Mr. McCulloch nor anybody else has or can show any existing bond, contract, note, or other obligation in which the Government has stipulated to pay gold.

The Senator from Delaware also quotes, adopts, and indorses the prediction of Mr. McCulloch that unless the coinage of silver is soon stopped it will cause the total disappearance of gold by export or hoarding, or both, and a "severe contraction," which the Senator himself enlarges and emphasizes by predicting "a most severe contraction, convulsing all business."

And to fortify these ominous predictions the Senator declares that they are confirmed by his correspondence from the money centers, doubtless meaning by that such sources of intelligence as Chestnut street in Philadelphia, State street in Boston, and last, but not least, Wall street in New York.

The following is an account in the Senator's own language of the statement of these letter-writers:

They all say to me that there is a great apprehension that the evils depicted by Mr. McCulloch of the contractions to follow our embarkation upon the monometallic basis of silver will convulse business, and the other evil, that the prices of what is needed by the laboring classes necessarily will be increased by the measurement in the less valuable metal.

Elsewhere in his speech the Senator adopts his own and amplifies the theory that while the expulsion of gold will contract currency and convulse business, it will at the same time raise prices by causing them to be stated and estimated in a less valuable kind of dollar. To quote his exact language:

What will measure prices when gold is gone? In what will be the estimate of the cost of living for these for whom I am sure our hearts are anxious? Sir, the measure of prices will be in silver, and silver being of lesser value, those prices must be nominally increased to make up for the deficiency of real value. The scale will be higher.

It is not unnatural that the Senator from Delaware and his correspondents from the "money centers" whose "hearts are anxious" for the laboring classes should have had their fears concentrated upon the one point that a silver standard would increase the prices of the necessities of life. It is nevertheless plain that if prices rise as a consequence of the depreciation of money, the prices of everything, luxuries as well as necessities, will be raised, and that wages, the price of labor, will also be raised.

The mere statement of these propositions of Mr. McCulloch, of the Senator from Delaware, and of his correspondents from the "money centers" shows how untenable they are.

The coinage of silver can not possibly tend to contract the volume of money. On the contrary, to the extent of it the tendency must be to expand the volume of money in the world and to make our share of it absolutely greater. The coinage of silver will be followed by the expulsion of gold under only one or the other of the two following conditions:

First. That our silver coinage shall so expand our prices relatively to prices abroad as to cause an unfavorable balance of trade. We know that the balance has been since 1878, and still is, heavily in our favor.

Second. That the banking and moneyed interests hostile to silver coinage shall by deliberately concerted action create a panicky fear of an impending depreciation of silver and a belief that the hoarding of gold would result in a profit from the premium upon it within some near period, and thereby cause the locking up of large quantities of gold.

In respect to a withdrawal of gold from circulation by hoarding, it is not impossible that it might be brought about to some extent if the banking classes should combine as a unit and instigate others who are under their influence to co-operate with them. But bankers as a body have too much prudence and know too well how large a share they must themselves bear of any calamity falling upon the business interests of the country to be concerned in getting up a panic in respect to an approaching premium on gold.

The hoarding of $610,000,000 of gold for the purpose of profiting by an expected premium upon it would cost the banks and individuals engaged in it $30,500,000 annually in interest, if we count it at 5 per cent. At the same time there would be no certainty that such a hoarding would of itself cause a premium on gold. Silver, greenbacks, and national-bank notes perform all the offices and answer all the purposes of money for domestic uses. Until there arose some demand for gold for foreign purchases and payments nobody would have any inducement to pay a premium on it. The present state of our trade enables us to pay gold abroad at less cost, by the method of using bills of exchange, than by shipping gold; and the time when gold will be in demand for foreign shipment is indefinitely remote.

The loss of interest in hoarding it is a certainty. The gain is prospective, doubtful, and really improbable. Bankers, who are not apt to be governed by their passions, will be slow to embark in such an enterprise considered in the aspect of a plan for making money.

In all events, if the gold now in circulation is expelled, in whatever way it may be done, the money remaining in circulation, which will then consist of silver and of paper representing silver, must increase largely in value and purchasing power, because the total volume of the circulation will have been largely reduced. It is not enhanced prices of commodities which we shall then see, but prices lowered, and to such a degree that gold would flow here from all parts of the world.

It was not my intention to address the Senate at length at this time on the questions involved in this bill and in the amendments proposed by the committee. I presented my views upon the general subject somewhat fully at an earlier day in the session.

In closing, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the unadvisedness of attempting to dispose of such an important measure, affecting as it does the volume of the currency, and to the impossibility of doing so even if it is advisable, in the closing days of the session.

The pending bill was reported to the Senate on the 27th of January, when there remained only thirty-one working days of the life of this Congress, and with no warning or reason to expect that the Senate would be called upon during the brief remainder of this session to discuss any such measure as that of suspending either absolutely or contingently the coinage of the standard silver dollar. On the 27th of January, when the committee agreed to report the pending bill with amendments relating to entirely different subjects, it did not have before it by any reference made by the Senate the question of the continuance or discontinuance of the silver-dollar coinage.

At the beginning of the last session that question was before the committee by reference of a bill submitted by the senior Senator from Vermont (Mr. MORRILL), covering various things connected with the mints and the coinage, and containing among its provisions one for the suspension of the silver-dollar coinage. In the course of the last session the committee acted upon and reported that bill after having stricken from it that part which suspended the coinage of silver dollars, and by no subsequent vote of the Senate, within my knowledge, has that subject been referred to the committee. I feel justified, therefore, in saying that their report on the 27th of January of a silver-dollar suspension law was without warning; that it was gratuitous and unauthorized, and, as it seems to me, violates good parliamentary practice, by attempting to foist upon a bill referred to it a measure not germane and relating to a totally different subject-matter.

The trade-dollar was wholly deprived of the monetary function in 1876, and has since then formed no part of the money of the country. The bill sent up by the House proposes the purchase and withdrawal of the trade-dollar on certain terms, and has no provision in it relating to the currency to which such a proposition as arresting the further issue of legal-tender silver dollars can by any possibility be germane. The bill, with the amendment proposed, was for the first time called up for consideration with only twenty-three working days of the session remaining, with the Calendars of both branches of Congress loaded with important measures, and with some of the most important of the regular appropriation bills for the support of the Government as yet scarcely touched.

It must be quite obvious that under such circumstance very little time can be given to the consideration of the bill and proposed amendment in the Senate, and still less time to the consideration in the House of the amendment if it should be adopted here and sent to the other branch of Congress for its concurrence. The repeal or, what is the same thing, the suspension for an indefinite period of the silver-coinage law of 1878 is a measure of as much importance as the original passage of that law. It involves the same points of discussion; and unless the deliberations which preceded that enactment were protracted beyond all reason, the time now proposed in which to consider the repeal is totally inadequate.

The law of 1878 was debated by two successive Congresses, and it was considered inexpedient to take final action until a monetary commission had been appointed to hear such testimony and suggestions as might be offered from any part of this country or from foreign countries, and until that commission in addition to reporting such testimony and suggestions had submitted their own opinion in an exhaustive and able review of the whole subject.

How thorough and elaborate the debates in Congress were may be judged from the fact that during the session when the law was passed there were forty-one set speeches made in the Senate upon the law as a whole, in addition to the discussion of the various amendments proposed to it. It was not then considered that too much time was given to the subject, because everybody saw that it involved all the questions of a sufficiency of the money volume, of the prices of land, labor, and commodities, of the pressure of public debts, of the interest of tax-payers, and of the preservation of justice and equity in the relations between classes and geographical sections. All these questions are involved, and in an equal degree, in the repeal of the law of 1878, which is now proposed to be accomplished by a side blow in the form of an amendment of a bill on another subject.

With no disposition to impute motives to committees or members of this body, it is true and it is proper to be said that if not so intended the late day at which this measure has been sprung upon the Senate is calculated to favor a plan which may have been formed in certain quarters to secure snap judgment in this body and in the other House against the coinage of silver by the aid of the machinery which exists in such quarters for sounding and resounding false intelligence and false alarms through subsidized, unscrupulous, and widely circulated daily newspapers. Abundant motives for such planning and plotting are found in the enormous gain which would result to banks and bankers and creditor and income classes generally from that appreciation of the value of the money certain to be caused by confining coinage to the single metal, gold, the total current production of which from the mines is now swallowed up by consumption in the arts.

The pending bill as it came from the House, and when it was confined to the trade-dollar, was very objectionable and could not have failed to have provoked lengthy debates in the Senate. I refer to the proposition to give a price gratuitously enhanced 15 or 20 per cent. for approximately eight millions of trade-dollars, the present holders of which obtained them as a rule, although doubtless with some exceptions, at not more than their bullion value.

President Arthur and Mr. Folger, the late Secretary of the Treasury, both recommended that no more should be offered for the trade-dollar than a slight premium above its bullion value, barely sufficient to induce the holders to bring them to the mints.

Objectionable as the bill was as it came from the House, the amendment proposed by the Finance Committee in respect to the trade-dollar makes it very much worse. The House bill gave a 15 or 20 per cent. gratuity to the holders of the trade-dollars, but not at the expense of the Treasury or the tax-payers. By making the standard dollars coined out of the trade-dollars an addition to the present coinage of standard dollars it gave the gratuity to the holders of trade-dollars out of the profit upon the additional number of standard dollars. But the amendment of the Finance Committee throws the burden of the gratuity, which will be approximately one and a half millions of dollars, upon the Treasury and the tax-payers. A proposition so offensive as that, and presented in this sudden way, after the bill itself to which we are asked to attach it had been held back in the Finance Committee for nearly a year, ought to be more thoroughly scrutinized than there is time for during the closing days of the Forty-eighth Congress.

If there is any justice in treating the trade-dollar as part of the money of the country, and not merely as so much stamped bullion, let the question be considered on its merits and by itself. It is in any view we may take of it a matter of but slight importance, except to a comparatively few persons who hold these dollars. The amendments proposed by the committee involve the monetary system and the monetary policy of this Government, and their hasty consideration may lead to disastrous results.

Mr. ALDRICH. The familiarity of the Senator from Colorado with these questions, and the fact that he is accepted as the representative of a particular class of the friends of silver, gives great weight to his opinions on these questions; and I should be very glad if he would permit me to ask him one or two questions. I should like to ask him if I understood him aright to say that he believes the United States can, unaided or aided only by the countries using a single silver standard, maintain a parity between silver and gold with the free coinage of silver at the present ratio?

Mr. HILL. I will say in reply to the Senator that I do not make that statement. I did not go so far as to say that we could sustain the parity of the coins with the free coinage of silver under the existing conditions. I believe, however, that within a very short time, and as soon as arrangements can be made with certain other countries which use silver money mainly or solely, we could maintain such parity. I do not know that the Senator's question will cover the remark I propose to make now, but in my belief at the present rate of coinage we alone can sustain permanently a parity between the value of the gold and silver coins of this country for any length of time.

Mr. ALDRICH. One other question. Did I understand the Senator correctly to say that if it had not been for the limited coinage provided by the act of February, 1878, the price of silver bullion would have declined at least 20 per cent. more than the decline which has taken place since the passage of that act?

Mr. HILL. I did not make such a statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. I certainly so understood the Senator.

Mr. HILL. As an illustration, I said if the coinage of silver had prevented a decline of more than 10 per cent. when it would otherwise have been 20 per cent., it was equivalent to raising the price 10 per cent. No one can say what the decline would have been if we had not coined silver under the law of 1878.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator to give it as his opinion that a further decline of 20 per cent. would have taken place in the price of silver bullion had it not been for the legislation of 1878.

Mr. HILL. No; I did not intend to make such a statement. It would be presumptuous for any one to say definitely what the decline would have been.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the House bill "for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar" meets my approval. The holders of this coin have in my judgment a right to the relief proposed, to wit, to receive standard legal-tender silver dollars in exchange for the trade-dollars held by them. Rather than see a failure to pass any bill on this subject I am willing to accept the bill so far as it relates to this subject as amended by the Senate committee. The fourth section of the amendment to the House bill, authorizing the President to renew negotiations with the States of the "Latin Union" and other foreign powers for the purpose of securing the co-operation of those States in the free coinage of silver with full legal-tender power at an agreed ratio to gold, I favor because the object is a desirable one.

But the fifth section of the Senate committee amendment, which provides that in case no such treaties as are provided for in the fourth section can be made and ratified prior to August 1, 1886, the coinage of silver under existing laws shall from that date be indefinitely suspended, I am opposed to, and if not stricken out I shall oppose the entire bill. We have made repeatedly such efforts as section 4 provides for, and have always failed. While I am willing to renew the effort, I am not willing to make the continued coinage of silver dependent upon the contingency of its success. I do not propose to go into a discussion of the silver question, as I have on two occasions since I have been a member of this body addressed the Senate at length on that subject, and have nothing now to add to what I have heretofore said.

I rise now simply to say that my opinions have undergone no change, except to be confirmed and strengthened, and that the experience of the country under the act of 1878 remonetizing silver has to the fullest extent vindicated the judgment of the advocates of that law and falsified the predictions and refuted the arguments of those who opposed it. That this is true is notorious, yet we find in the debate on this bill the same old stale and exploded theories and arguments rehearsed and rehabilitated by the same Senators who urged and pressed them in opposition to the bill enacted into law in 1878. If there is anything fixed and settled and irrevocably determined in the minds of the great body of the American people it is that the silver dollar of 412½ grains is and shall continue to be legal-tender money.

No one doubts or questions but that this is the well-considered and immovable judgment and will of the American people. Notwithstanding this, we find on every occasion, in season and out of season, the national bankers who opposed the remonetization of silver, and the Senators on this floor who used every possible means to defeat the act of 1878, agitating the question of repealing, or what amounts to the same thing, suspending the law providing for the coinage of silver. The Finance Committee of the Senate has never, within my knowledge, had an opportunity to strike a blow at silver money that has not been delivered promptly and with all the force it could command, with one single exception, and that was the last session of this Congress.

The House bill providing simply for the redemption of trade-dollars in legal-tender silver dollars, which the committee propose to substitute with the pending bill, came from the House and was referred to that committee on the 3d day of April, 1884. Congress sat until in July some time, and instead of reporting it so that it could be passed the bill was permitted to sleep in committee until this session. It is now reported with an amendment suspending the coinage of silver. The year 1884 was Presidential year, and the people were scanning the merits of parties and aspirants preparatory to their choice in November last, and it was not a propitious time for an attack upon a policy so highly favored by the people of all political parties, and for once the Senate committee forebore to strike; but since the election has passed, and another is four years distant, it is by the vigor of its assault now making up for lost time.

Why this attack upon silver now? Is it believed that this bill as it comes from the committee can be passed into law? No sane man can believe it or does believe it. The only argument against the further coinage of silver, the sole reason alleged for suspending the coinage of that metal, is that the bullion out of which the silver dollar is coined is worth in the market only about 85 cents as compared with gold; all the other arguments used are simply corollaries from this. Is our silver dollar worth as much as the gold dollar? Will it buy as much of any commodity in the market as the gold dollar? These questions all men will answer in the affirmative, because it is true that the purchasing power and the debt-paying power of the silver dollar is, in all respects and every particular, equal to that of the gold dollar.

Nobody denies this. Fifteen and one-half grains of silver to 1 of gold is the ratio throughout Europe, while our ratio is 16 grains of silver to 1 of gold. Our silver dollar contains a greater proportion of pure silver than any other silver coin in the world except that of Mexico. Throughout Europe the silver coin circulates by the side of gold at par and without discount. The bank of France, which regulates the circulation in France, as we are informed by the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, has in its vaults $205,837,867 of silver and only $210,927,912 of gold, while in our Treasury there is by the latest official report of the Secretary of the Treasury, from which I read, as follows:

	Total assets.	Liabilities.	Available assets.
Gold coin and bullion.....	$222,536,360 43
Gold certificates.....	32,477,750 00
	255,014,110 43
Less gold certificates outstanding.....		$120,343,320 00
Standard silver dollars and silver bullion.....	147,573,221 89		$134,670,790 43
Silver certificates.....	30,814,970 00
	178,388,191 89
Less silver certificates outstanding.....		131,536,531 00
			46,851,660 89

From this statement it will be seen that France circulates very much more silver in proportion to gold than we do, and that the silver in our Treasury is represented by $131,556,531 of silver certificates outstanding against it and in active circulation among the people, performing all the offices of good money, while the gold, largely in excess of the silver, is represented by only $120,343,320 of gold certificates. In the face of this fact, so clearly shown in his report, the Secretary of the Treasury on the very next page of his report makes the statement I now read, which, while literally true as to the amount of silver in actual circulation, is utterly erroneous and misleading in the impression made on the country when it is remembered that the silver certificates in circulation represent the silver dollars in the Treasury which he says can not be circulated. I read the statement and leave the Senate to judge from it the character of warfare made on silver by the high officials of our Government.

The coinage of silver dollars under the act of February 28, 1878, has now reached the very large amount of $184,730,829, being an increase of $28,009,590 for the year ending November 1, 1884. The amount of these dollars in actual circulation is $41,326,736. The increase in the circulation for the year has only been $1,260,346, against an increase of $4,136,321 for the previous year. These figures of themselves are an insuperable argument against the continued coinage of silver dollars.

Why did not the honorable Secretary of the Treasury tell the country that the silver in actual circulation is very greatly in excess of the gold in actual circulation—perhaps four or five dollars of the former to one of the latter? And why did he not say, what is true, that neither metal is much circulated in actual coin, but is stored away in bank and Treasury vaults to make good and current and redeemable the more convenient and portable paper circulation of the country, and that for this purpose silver is as good as gold?

Not only is the silver dollar in every conceivable aspect as good and valuable as the gold dollar, but silver certificates, redeemable in silver dollars, are frequently preferred to gold, as is shown by the response of the Secretary of the Treasury to a Senate resolution of January 14, 1884, in which that official states that from December 31, 1880, to December 31, 1883, $79,754,000 of gold coin was received into the Treasury in exchange for the same amount of silver certificates. These silver certificates, it may be observed, represented on the 31st December, 1883, about half, or nearly so, of all the silver dollars coined up to that time. If the honorable Secretary had covered the time up to the 31st December, 1884, with his statement, it doubtless would have appeared that more than half of the silver certificates issued have been exchanged for gold.

The honorable chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. MORRILL], not to be outdone by the Secretary of the Treasury, makes in his speech of February 4 a statement, remarkable as an illustration of the power of language literally true to convey an impression absolutely erroneous and untrue. I read from page 5 of the speech:

In eighty-five years, or up to 1878, the whole amount of silver dollars coined at our mints was only $3,045,838, and the amount in circulation must have been far less. Since 1878 we have coined the immense sum of $191,947,194, and have got into circulation, according to the Director of the Mint, $41,320,040, or about five times as much as was ever coined in all our previous history. If this does not show a pushing and industrious zeal on the part of the Treasury Department to get the silver dollar into circulation I know not what would.

No man uninformed on the subject can read the first clause of that statement without concluding that the $3,045,838 of silver, which is correctly said to be all the silver dollars coined during the period named, without concluding that the amount named was our entire stock of silver money, and even all of that is said not to have been in circulation. Now, the whole truth on this subject, as was conclusively shown by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] in his able speech on this bill a few days ago, is that during the period named by the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee, while we did coin only the amount of standard silver dollars named, we also coined $100,000,000 of half-dollars, $40,000,000 of quarters, and a sufficient amount of smaller coins to make in all $184,280,941.40 up to 1877, and all of it, with a large amount of the Spanish milled dollars, was in circulation.

The second clause of the statement, to the effect that out of $191,947,194 we have been able to force into circulation only about $41,350,040, is made in the face of the fact shown in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, before adverted to, that silver certificates representing the silver dollars in the Treasury are in active circulation among the people, maintaining the prices of property, the wages of labor, and doing good service as ready instrumentalities in the business and commerce of the country. If anything were needed to complete the fullness and rotundity of this most remarkable statement it is found in the next proposition of the speech, in which it is said:

It is evident that all of our people prefer a paper currency, if it is only the equal of our standard coins. It is far more convenient, as the whole commercial world have ascertained, and the whole world, therefore, has not suddenly changed its habits, notwithstanding the oversanguine expectations of the promoters of the silver bill of 1878, who were unquestionably honest in their zeal, and who will be ready to claim that it has accomplished a great and important service.

Is not the fact that about one-half of the silver certificates issued have been exchanged dollar for dollar for gold coin evidence that this form of paper money is acceptable to our people and that it is "the equal of our standard coin?"

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to say a word?

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. Does not the Senator from Texas know that the silver certificates would not be in circulation except from the fact that they are the equivalent of gold in paying duties upon imports?

Mr. COKE. Neither would gold be at par or worth anything unless it was money and could be used as such in paying debts and public dues.

Mr. MORRILL. Not one dollar of these certificates will ever be redeemed in silver, but they will all be used for the purpose of paying duties where gold is required otherwise.

Mr. COKE. I will proceed.

This great fact can not be explained away, nor its significance be clouded. It makes no difference why it is true; the fact remains that it is true, and that is sufficient. Silver certificates measure fully up to the standard for good paper money prescribed by the honorable Senator. It is an axiom in mathematics that "things equal to the same thing are equal to each other." Silver certificates, the representatives of and redeemable in silver dollars, for which gold coin is every day being exchanged on equal terms, can not be held otherwise than as the equal in value of the gold coin.

If the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee had really desired to force the actual silver coin into circulation why did not he and his coworkers bring in a bill retiring all notes of denominations under $10 or even under $5. This would force silver dollars and small gold coins into circulation if enacted into law. It is in this way that such coins are maintained in circulation in Europe. This would increase the demand for both silver and gold, but would to that extent supersede the necessity for bank notes, and of course will not be recommended by those who in the interest of the banks bitterly opposed the remonetization of silver and have in every possible way disparaged it since that metal was remonetized.

The European quotations for silver bullion control the price of that commodity in the American market. Silver bullion is as cheap there as here. When their silver coin in the ratio of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold maintains itself without discount in circulation by the side of gold, ought we to be alarmed about our silver dollar of 16 of silver to 1 of gold? It seems to me not.

The fact has been adverted to in this debate that many of the European states have ceased to coin silver, and the conclusion is drawn that we should also cease for the same reasons. The conditions surrounding this country are widely different from those prevailing in Europe. The states of Europe reached their highest point of development many years ago. They are now stationary in population, in commerce and production, while this country is advancing with wonderful rapidity in all those respects. Europe has enough of silver to answer all the needs of trade and population, and is content for the present. The United States, with enough for to-day, must provide an increased amount for increased population, increased commerce, and increased industrial activities certain to need it the next year, and so on with each recurring year as this vast country and its teeming wealth is populated and developed.

On page 33 of the latest report of the Secretary of the Treasury that official says: "The production of gold is diminishing; that of silver has practically reached its maximum, and there are strong indications that from this time the yield of both gold and silver mines will speedily decline." The insufficiency of the world's supply of gold as a basis for the necessary supply of paper circulation is admitted on all sides. The decline in its production, if silver is discarded as money, will necessarily restrict the paper circulation, which is based upon it as a redemption fund. A contraction of the circulation means an increased purchasing power for money, lower wages, lower prices for property, an increased oppressiveness for debt; in a word, that the rich are made richer, and the poor made poorer. It is the duty of this Government to do all that is possible to avert such calamitous consequences, and the wisest and best method of preventing them is to continue its coinage of silver, thereby insuring a sufficient metallic basis for a safe, redeemable, and adequate paper circulation.

We coin only $28,000,000 per annum, and this the Senate amendment proposes shall cease, because forsooth the silver bullion in the dollar is worth only about 85 cents, when, as I have shown, the silver dollar and silver certificates are in every respect equal in value to the gold. European governments preserve the interconvertibility of silver and gold, notwithstanding the discount on bullion, by limiting, regulating, and at times stopping the coinage of silver. Adopting this idea, the remonetizing act of 1878 placed the limitation upon silver coinage, under which a fraction over $2,000,000 per month has been coined. The facts to which I have adverted show conclusively that the limitation was unnecessarily restrictive, and that the industrial progress, the advance in population and wealth, and the enterprise in this country would equally well have maintained interconvertibility between silver and gold had the amount coined been much greater, or indeed if the coinage of silver had been made free.

The power of the Government brought to its aid in this way would also have buoyed and appreciated the value of bullion and destroyed the margin between it and coin. It has been asserted in this debate that if silver coinage is not suspended the result will be to transfer our gold to Europe, and that we will be left with an exclusively silver currency. This argument is met and refuted so completely in the able speech of the Senator from Colorado, Mr. HILL, delivered a few weeks ago, that I will content myself with reading what he says:

It is often said that in dealing with European nations we must liquidate in gold the balances of trade when they are against us, because silver has no rights of coinage, and is therefore not a money metal in Europe; and that, on the other hand, when the balances of trade are in our favor we will be paid in silver. Paying Europe in gold but being paid by Europe in silver would sooner or later transfer our gold to the other side of the Atlantic. But in truth Europeans can no more pay us in silver than we can pay them in that metal. They could pay us in our silver dollars if they possessed any, but they have none, and they can not get any except at the price of gold dollars. Their own silver coins can not be disposed of in this country at a better rate than 80 per cent. of their value at home. As to silver bullion, it is as commercially impossible that it should be sent here from Europe as that coals should be sent to Newcastle.

We are the chief silver-mining nation in the world, and our total home demand for silver in the arts and at the mints (with our annual coinage of $28,000,000) is less by about ten millions annually than the home production. The excess, whatever it is, must be sold abroad, and must always be, as it is now, put at a price which will force its sale in foreign markets. During the three fiscal years ending June 30, 1884, the excess of our exports of silver over imports was $29,584,783, or at the rate of about $10,000,000 annually. The flow of silver from the United States to the London market will continue constant until all the facts of the situation are changed. It is as idle to apprehend an import of silver coin or bullion from Europe as to apprehend an import from the same quarter of timber, wheat, petroleum, naval stores, or cotton. No silver from Europe will ever be "dumped" upon this country until commodities move from dearer to cheaper markets.

The necessary effect of the whole situation is what we know as a fact of observation, that the money balances due to us from Europe are received always in gold, and in nothing else. The other kinds of money which we use, namely, silver dollars, greenbacks, and national bank notes, would be accepted by us with equal readiness, but foreigners possess neither, and can not obtain either at less than their face value in gold. Our position is precisely like that of France, in which silver francs are, at home, of the same value as gold francs, but are worth only four-fifths as much anywhere outside of the Latin Union. When the state of the exchanges requires the transmission of money from Paris to London, or to New York, it is only gold which can be sent, because it is only gold which will be accepted. But it is equally true that when London and New York send money to Paris it can only be gold, because they have no French silver francs.

I remember well in the debate in 1878 it was vehemently predicted that silver, being the cheaper metal, would expel gold from the country just as this reason is given now with great emphasis for repealing or suspending the law of that date, when the official reports show since that time an increase net of three hundred and fifty million seven hundred and ninety-three thousand five hundred and thirty dollars in the stock of gold in this country. Not only is this true, but the same official reports show that our monthly imports of gold in payment for balances due on our foreign trade, together with the product of our mines are largely in excess of our monthly silver coinage, more than double, thus maintaining up to the present moment the same ratio of increase of gold that has obtained ever since the silver law of 1878 was passed. If the law of 1878 had not been enacted—and it was enacted over the earnest and combined opposition of those now demanding its repeal—the condition of this country in respect of its currency would have been most deplorable. I read from the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury:

It will be noted that the circulation decreased $25,156,432 during the year. The bonds deposited to secure circulation, which decreased $9,613,350 in 1883, were still further reduced $25,442,200 during 1884—a reduction of $35,055,650 in two years.

The 3 per cent. bonds of the United States have now been reduced to less than two hundred millions, and they will be further reduced through the operations of the sinking fund by nearly fifty millions each year.

The market prices of the 4 per cent. and the 4½ per cent. bonds of the United States have declined somewhat during the past year; but that these bonds are still too high to enable banks to base circulation upon them at a profit is plain, from the fact that the circulation has been voluntarily decreased more than $25,000,000 during the year.

Among the measures of relief recommended in the last report were an increase of the issue of notes to the face value of the bonds deposited, a bill to authorize which passed the Senate during the last session of Congress; the acceptance of the 3.65 per cent. bonds of 1924 of the District of Columbia, the payment of which is guaranteed by the United States; and a repeal of the tax on circulation. I earnestly commend these propositions to the wisdom of Congress, believing that, if adopted, they will enable banks which now contemplate a surrender of their circulation in consequence of the calling of their 3 per cent. bonds to maintain it on the long-time bonds with a small profit, or at least without loss.

Inasmuch as about $135,000,000 of the circulation of banks is based upon our 3 per cent. bonds, which are now redeemable and being rapidly redeemed, remedial action can not be postponed beyond the present session if a rapid reduction of our bank-note circulation is to be avoided. The subject is a very important one, and should receive immediate attention.

This statement shows a contraction of bank circulation for the last two years of $35,955,650. It shows that of the less than two hundred millions of 3 per cent. bonds $135,000,000 of them are the basis of bank circulation, that all of them are now redeemable and "being rapidly redeemed," and that they will continue to be redeemed at the rate of $50,000,000 a year. It urges some vigorous action at this session of Congress in order to arrest a ruinous reduction of bank circulation. The law providing for the recoinage of silver has taken monthly from the dead surplus buried in the vaults of the Treasury a little upward of $2,000,000 for the purchase of silver bullion and put it in circulation.

The silver has been coined and put in the Treasury, but silver certificates representing it have been issued and put in circulation, making $2,000,000 more monthly, the two amounts aggregating about fifty millions a year addition to the circulation. This process has been going on since 1878, and has made a difference of about $300,000,000 in the active circulating medium of the country, about one hundred and eighty-five millions of it, the coined silver, being a permanent addition to our stock of money. While the banks have been reducing their circulation silver and silver certificates have been much more than making up the loss. Had it not been for this constant addition to our circulation under the silver law, it is morally certain that the country would have suffered all the evils which flow from an insufficient circulation.

I presume I will be told that if the silver law had not passed the banks would have supplied the needed currency; indeed we have been informed to that effect by the report of a Secretary of the Treasury, not the present incumbent, but one of his predecessors. Exactly; and the meaning of this ceaseless war on silver is to put that metal and silver certificates out of the way, and leave the entire field clear to the national banks, so that they may furnish our currency on their own terms and contract or expand it at pleasure. These institutions fought savagely against the remonetization of silver, and when their representatives meet, as they do annually, in convention, they always denounce silver money and demand the repeal of the law. They are about as incessant and determined and untiring in their attacks as the Senate Finance Committee, except that they are not discreet like the latter in being silent just before Presidential nominations are made, for at their convention last summer they demanded a repeal of the silver law.

The denunciations of these people and the tirades in the messages of the Presidents, the reports of the Secretaries of the Treasury and of the Comptrollers of the Currency, have done more to discredit silver and degrade it than all other agencies combined, creating the apprehension that it could not be maintained as money against such powerful influences. It is simply wonderful that silver bullion under such combined and powerful assaults is not depressed to a lower point than it has yet reached; and that the silver dollar is still current and at par with gold and silver certificates preferred to gold is still more wonderful. If the same efforts had been directed to the maintenance of silver money that have been made to destroy it in the confidence of the world, and the banks had recognized and sustained it in their operations as the law requires them to do, and had not, in open violation of a positive law and with the consent and acquiescence of the Secretary of the Treasury, whose duty it was to enforce the law, kicked it out of the New York Clearing-House, silver bullion would to-day, in my judgment, and in that of others more competent than myself to form a correct opinion, be at par.

After waging a war upon silver which could only result in reducing it below par, the same persons now make the fact that it is discounted the chief, indeed the only, argument for discarding it; for that is the real purpose of the Senate amendment pending before us.

Now, Mr. President, if the amended bill before the Senate should pass, in what predicament will the country be left in respect to its circulating medium? I have read from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury that an annual contraction of fifty millions of the national-bank circulation is bound, under the operation of laws now on the statute-book, to ensue, and he urges remedial action at this session of Congress. This bill responds to his suggestion by contracting the currency fifty millions more per annum from the date when the suspension of silver coinage commences.

When asked to provide against contraction already commenced and certain to continue if we pass this bill, we have simply doubled the evil we are called on to avert. We then will be called on to refund the national debt in such way as to enable the national banks to issue and maintain an adequate supply of currency for the country, at least such will be the next step in the programme of those who would discard silver, and the outcome would be that the banks would have won the fight they have been making for years, and find themselves in possession of a clear field, with all the people and wealth of this country to operate on in their own way and on their own terms. Believing this, I shall oppose to the end the fifth section of Senate amendment to the House bill. I believe the people engaged in national banking are neither better nor worse than other people. They are a fair average of American citizenship.

I will never by my vote intrust them or any other living men with the unrestrained power over the prosperity of the country and the property and values and products of labor of the people which they would possess if permitted to dictate the amount and character of money to be used in this country, as they will have if we abolish the use of silver. God gave us gold and silver; the Constitution of the United States recognizes both metals, and declares that no State shall make any other a legal tender. Human labor is required to dig these metals out of the earth and human skill to refine and coin them, and when coined they are labor capitalized and represent intrinsic value. When these coins are stamped with the devices, and invested with the legal-tender qualities of money, and come within the protection of the laws against counterfeiting and alteration, they represent units and standards of value as prescribed by the supreme power of the Government. They differ from the bullion, out of which they are made, as the finely wrought fabric differs from the crude raw material from which it is worked. They are too far removed from the dirty ore, or the crude bullion, for the market values of the latter to determine their intrinsic value. This is as true of silver as it is of gold. These metals, both of them, are not more than sufficient to support the volume of redeemable paper money necessary for the trade, commerce, and business of the country.

To discard either will necessitate a reduction of volume of good, solvent, redeemable paper money, and this will increase the value of all money, will lessen the value of all the products of labor, will reduce wages and bring down all prices, and make debts doubly hard to pay.

Those who are urging the destruction of silver money are, in my judgment, forcing these disastrous results, and, if successful, will inevitably build up a formidable party in this country favoring the issue by the Government of an irredeemable paper currency, for the simple reason that an insufficient gold basis now, with a rapidly declining gold product, if confined to gold alone as a redemption fund, will so reduce our volume of paper money that the country will not stand the contraction, and will demand and seek relief wherever it may be found. Seven or eight States in the northern and eastern sections of this Union, which hold three-fourths of the bonds, the credits, and the money and active banking capital of this country, which would be immeasurably enhanced in value by the destruction of silver as money and whose representatives in both Houses of Congress are pressing this measure, will not be permitted, as long as any reasonable avenue of escape is left open, to hold this vast country in a condition of financial vassalage such as would ensue from the success of the pending measure.

It is because I foresee these results that I am opposed to this bill. The $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes now in circulation, and the silver coin and silver certificates now in existence and annually increasing in a proportion not adequate, it is true, to annually increasing demands for money, are nevertheless a check upon the power of the banks and a reasonable provision against contraction which I will never willingly surrender.

I desire to see silver have a fair chance. It has been dishonored by our highest officials in the executive department of the Government and by the national banks—the Government's fiscal agents. The Secretaries of the Treasury have refused to pay this money to the public creditors, although our obligations, except about $122,000,000 of outstanding gold certificates, are payable in coin, and can and ought to be paid in silver as well as gold, and the national banks have refused to recognize it in their operations in violation of express law. These gold certificates are the only gold obligations due by this Government to anybody. All other debts, bonds, and obligations are payable in coin, and may justly and honestly be paid in silver coin or in gold, or in both, at the option of the Government. With the incoming of a new administration I hope to see the laws on this subject obeyed and enforced. If they are bad laws, the best way to get rid of them is to enforce them. If good, this course will vindicate them.

The friends of the act of 1878 remonetizing silver have never ceased to demand an honest enforcement of the law, and have ever been anxious to subject it to the test, with the fullest confidence that its beneficial results can not fail to be as great as they have claimed they would be. When the national banks are compelled, as they ought to be, to recognize silver and silver certificates, as the laws require; when the Secretaries of the Treasury pay public debts equally with silver and gold, as they should, and when the denunciations of silver money cease to come annually from the national banks, from the White House and the Treasury Department, and from the Finance Committee of the Senate, as they should, in deference to a public sentiment in favor of silver, believed to be fixed and immovable—when all these influences unite in sustaining silver coinage, as they are now and have been in breaking it down and dishonoring it, as they will be if the laws are obeyed and enforced, silver bullion will in a short time, both at home and abroad, in the opinion of many good judges, rise to par with the coined silver dollar, less the expense of coinage, thus removing the only pretext for suspending the coinage of silver.

The Senator from Alabama has proposed an amendment to this bill, reposing in the President the power at his discretion to suspend the coinage of silver. The framers of the Constitution deemed it wise to make the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government separate from and independent of each other. I believe it wise to maintain these departments thus separate and independent. Dictatorial power over a great subject like this should not be reposed in the hands of any man, and will never be by my vote. I believe as firmly in the wisdom and patriotism of the President-elect as anybody can, and it is no disparagement of him to say that I will not so far as I am concerned consent that Congress shall abdicate its just powers and turn them over to his exercise and discretion. Besides, it is unjust to the new President to saddle this responsibility upon him which belongs to and should be fearlessly met by Congress. For one, I propose to take my share of the responsibility.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for printing 25,000 extra copies of the report and proceedings of the commission to provide suitable ceremonies for the dedication of the Washington Monument, together with the engraved card attached thereto.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 78) for the erection of a public building at La Crosse, Wis.; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 2664) making an appropriation to preserve the works on the Mississippi River and to continue the improvement of said river; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 338) providing for printing additional copies of the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 339) providing for printing the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 340) providing for printing monograph 2 of the publications of the United States Geological Survey; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 342) to authorize the printing of 400,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1885.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM, Mr. HOAR, Mr. PIKE, and Mr. VOORHEES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARLAND, and Mr. JONES, of Nevada, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT DEDICATION PROCEEDINGS.

The following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives was referred to the Committee on Printing:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 26, 1885.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 25,000 extra copies of the report and proceedings of the commission to provide suitable ceremonies for the dedication of the Washington Monument, together with the engraved card attached thereto, be printed; 8,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 16,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; 500 copies for distribution by Lieut. Gen. P. H. Sheridan, United States Army, to the civil and military organizations which participated in the procession; 400 copies for the Washington National Monument Association, for distribution among its members; and 100 copies to Col. Thomas L. Casey, engineer, for distribution among mechanics and workmen employed in the erection of the monument.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. McMILLAN, it was Ordered, That John Jones, late ordnance sergeant United States Army and captain Third Minnesota Battery, have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in his case, subject to the rules of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES.

Several executive messages were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have three joint resolutions that have just passed the House which are identical with three Senate resolutions passed this morning, and I ask consent at this time to report favorably upon these resolutions from the Committee on Printing and have them put on their passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska reports at this time a joint resolution, and asks for its present consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 338) providing for printing additional copies of the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF ETHNOLOGICAL REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I also report from the Committee on Printing the joint resolution (H. Res. 339) providing for printing the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONOGRAPH SECOND OF GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY.

Mr. MANDERSON. I also report from the Committee on Printing the joint resolution (H. Res. 340) providing for printing monograph second of the publications of the United States Geological Survey, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLANTS FOR INAUGURATION DECORATIONS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the joint resolution being received at this time? The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution (S. R. 134) relative to the use of plants belonging to the public conservatories of the District of Columbia for inauguration ceremonies, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That it shall be lawful to use for the approaching inauguration ceremonies and the decoration of the Executive Mansion and other public buildings such plants as may be spared without material injury by the officers in charge of the public conservatories of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. What is that that is to be used? I did not catch it. Mr. VOORHEES. Let the resolution be read again; it answers better than I can.

The joint resolution was again read.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIA G. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the report will be received.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, to report it favorably:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Alice E. Underwood, executrix of the last will and testament of Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for the time and expenses of the said John C. Underwood, in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

DISTRICT TAX SALES.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 8236, Order of Business 1345, for present consideration. It is a House bill, which it is necessary should be passed immediately, as it is reported with amendments, in order to get the concurrence of the House in the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the Senate now consider Order of Business 1345, being the bill (H. R. 8236) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 10, after the word "deed," to strike out "shall vest in the grantee a good and valid title, and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has just been read.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to hear the bill read as it will be with the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the bill be read as it will stand with the amendment recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are two amendments. The last one ought to be read as well as the first.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be read as it will stand when amended in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that to be the request of the Senator from Connecticut. The bill will now be read as it would stand if amended as recommended by the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. As proposed to be amended by the Committee on the District of Columbia the bill will read:

That hereafter sales of real estate, after advertisement as required by law, by the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia, for taxes or assessments levied by the commissioners of said District, or by other lawful authority, shall entitle the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, if the property be not redeemed within two years from the date of such sale, as provided by law, to a deed from the commissioners of the District, which deed shall be presumptive evidence in all controversies in relation thereto that the property so conveyed was subject to the taxes for which the property was sold, that such taxes were not paid, that the property was not redeemed before the execution of the deed, and that the manner of levy, notice, sale, and all the other prerequisites of law were complied with necessary and proper to make such deed and title valid; and unless suit shall be brought within one year after the execution and record of such deed to annul the same, the same shall be conclusive evidence that all the steps in the assessment and collection of such tax were valid, and the said deed shall vest complete and valid title in the purchaser.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not observe in the bill that there was any saving for persons under disability.

Mr. HARRIS. I rose for the purpose of informing the Senator from Delaware that I held in my hand an amendment that I propose to offer containing the saving clause that the Senator thinks necessary. I quite agree with him that it is.

Mr. HOAR. Has consent been given to the consideration of this bill at the present time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent has been given that the bill be now considered.

Mr. HOAR. I did not so understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated the question distinctly and paused for objection.

Mr. CALL. I did not understand that it was taken up.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say that the amendment is offered by the Senator from Tennessee as the agent of the committee, and so far as I am able I am willing to accept it.

Mr. HOAR. My attention was called away at the time, and I did not understand that unanimous consent was given. It seems to me a very extraordinary and severe bill, a provision that as against the landowner the deed of the commissioners shall be prima facie evidence of everything necessary to be proved in a tax sale. I was not aware such a system existed anywhere in the country.

Mr. GEORGE. We can not hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the bill may go over. I ask to have the bill read again as part of my remarks.

Mr. HARRIS. Before it is read I ask that the Secretary take the amendment that I shall propose when in order, and read that to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia will now be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment is, in line 10, after the word "deed," to strike out "shall vest in the grantee a good and valid title and;" and the next amendment is, at the end of the bill, to insert:

And unless suit shall be brought within one year after the execution and record of such deed to annul the same, the same shall be conclusive evidence that all the steps in the assessment and collection of such tax were valid, and the said deed shall vest complete and valid title in the purchaser.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] will now be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to add the following proviso:

Provided, That persons under legal disability shall not be precluded from bringing suit within one year from the removal of such disability.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the bill will not be pressed for consideration.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will withdraw his request.

Mr. HOAR. It is a very serious innovation on the present law to make as against the owner of real estate the simple deed of an official presumptive evidence, that is, I suppose, prima facie evidence, of the great variety of steps which are necessary to divest his title. It seems to me those things ought to be proved as facts. Here they are made conclusive evidence after the expiration of a single year, putting on him the burden of bringing a suit. A person in possession of real estate is made by this bill, as I understand it, subject to have his estate divested unless he is able to disprove the regularity of a variety of proceedings. It may be almost impossible to do it.

I trust the bill will be taken up at some time when the Senate can carefully consider it, and when the amendments proper to secure the rights of a citizen can be made. It seems to me, with great respect to the honorable Senator from Tennessee, that one year from the removal of a disability like that of coverture, or a disability like that of insanity, or a disability like that of infancy, is an exceedingly short time in which to have a conclusive presumption established. The party in possession of his estate all the time may never even have heard of the assessment or of the sale.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will withdraw his request to have this bill considered now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am willing the bill shall go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. INGALLS. There are at the present time in this District about $900,000 of delinquent taxes, and there is no possible power anywhere to enforce their collection. I know of no other community in which there is not some power lodged somewhere to enforce the payment of delinquent taxes, and I know of nothing that is more efficient than the issuing of a deed for property that is sold for taxes.

I heard the Senator from Massachusetts characterize this bill as vile and extraordinary. Sir, it is the mildest measure of the kind that I have ever heard of being recognized. Every guard that is possible has been thrown around the right of the citizen; the rights of those persons under disabilities are assiduously protected. The party has two years in which to set the deed aside.

Mr. HOAR. He may never have heard of it.

Mr. INGALLS. Who never has heard of it?

Mr. HOAR. He may never have heard of it.

Mr. INGALLS. True. If he never has heard of it that does not change the necessity of having some method of collecting taxes, I suppose?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for a question?

Mr. INGALLS. I do for the purpose of an interrogatory.

Mr. HOAR. The interrogatory is this: Does not the bill provide that a person within one year after the expiration of the disability of coverture or of infancy or of lunacy shall have his real-estate title divested by a conclusive presumption of the validity of these proceedings, the statute requiring no notice to the party whatever that they ever have existed, and there may be cases where they may never have heard of them?

Mr. INGALLS. In the schedule of human life I never have heard the payment of taxes considered as a luxury. I do not know that it can be counted as one of the comforts of human existence. I believe it is usually considered as one of the stern necessities. There is in this community as in every other community a class of people that do not intend to pay their taxes as long as they can help it. There is an abundance of property in this town loaded with delinquent taxes, allowed to remain there by persons amply able to pay them, who take the income from day to day and put it in their pocket rather than pay their taxes, because there is no way of enforcing taxes against delinquents.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Kansas if he is aware that he has not answered my question?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not intend to answer it, because it has no connection whatever with this subject. It is absolutely impossible to make any general law bearing upon this subject that does not hurt somebody. You can not enforce a law for the payment of taxes without in some way or other injuring somebody or hurting somebody's feelings. It is not a question whether somebody may be hurt by it, or whether somebody may be injured by it, or whether it may be inconvenient or uncomfortable to somebody to pay his taxes. It is a question whether there shall be machinery vested in the tax-levying power that shall be sufficient to compel the payment of taxes.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Kansas, as we can not finish this discussion to-night, yield to a motion for an executive session?

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator desires it. I do not wish to press this matter on the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. There are a number of nominations, a large list of military nominations, and the Committee on Military Affairs meets to-morrow morning, and if they are not referred to-night it will be difficult to get a committee meeting for their consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. With the understanding that this bill will be the unfinished business for to-morrow morning, I have no objection to an executive session.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator from Kansas to yield to me.

Mr. INGALLS. I said that with the understanding that this bill might be the unfinished business for to-morrow morning I had no objection to yielding to a motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Indiana or not?

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending which the Senator from Vermont calls for the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BAYARD. Allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to offer an amendment to House bill 1457.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw his motion?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I see the indications around are such that we shall be occupied for an hour, I think, if I do not insist on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate on the motion is not in order.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. What will be the pending or unfinished business in the morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will answer that question in the morning; he is not obliged to do it at this moment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now I should like—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not rise to debate—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business and declines to withdraw the motion.

Mr. HARRISON. If it is the desire of Senators to offer some amendments to pending appropriation bills that ought to be in to-night I have no objection to yielding for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. BAYARD. I will ask the Senator to withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw it for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana withdraws his motion, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. KENNA submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BAYARD and Mr. MORGAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 8236) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BOWEN, Mr. FRYE, Mr. GORMAN, and Mr. WILSON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COKE, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. LAMAR submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COINAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts insists upon the regular order, which is the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I trust the Senator will not insist on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please address the Chair and cease loud conversation to each other.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts in addressing the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators must address the Chair. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to strike out section 5 of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOAR (in his seat). Now I withdraw my call for the regular order, having found out what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is not recognized. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to offer three provisos as amendments intended to be proposed to the bill introduced this morning by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I offer them so that they may be printed, and I shall ask that for the present they lie upon the table, because if that bill is not to be acted upon, as it should be, at this session, as the Senator from Massachusetts has invoked the examination of the public to this matter, I desire that some other suggestions shall go out that the public generally may understand the status of the enormous debt of the Pacific railroads. These are three provisos. One is that no dividends shall be issued upon stock, and another is that the consolidation shall not be recognized. I ask to have them printed and laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks leave to submit sundry amendments intended to be proposed to the Pacific Railroad settlement bill, introduced this morning by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Chair hears no objection. The amendments will be printed and laid on the table.

COINAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to take the floor on the pending measure, and avail myself of my right to the floor long enough to express my astonishment at the very extraordinary response by the Chair to a courteous question as to what the pending measure would be to-morrow morning after the adjournment to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not feel called upon to make any reply. The Chair stated what the question was, and the question as to what will be the pending order to-morrow will depend upon the rules and will arise then. If the present occupant had been in the chair all the afternoon, and therefore had kept the run of the business, he would have been glad to have answered the question.

Mr. HOAR. I am happy to believe that no occupant of the chair since the organization of the Senate ever declined to answer that question before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This will then be the first precedent.

Mr. HOAR. And the last, I have no doubt.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask leave to offer a resolution at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no objection be made, the resolution will be received.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to compile a statement showing the number of public buildings constructed and authorized to be constructed under existing laws for each State, the amount expended or authorized for each such building from the first public building constructed to the 4th of March, 1895, and to report such statement to the Senate in December next; and for such purpose the said committee be authorized to employ a clerk at the usual compensation until the 1st of December next; to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 7 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1885.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that portion of the Journal not connected with the actual transaction of legislative business be omitted in the reading.

There being no objection it was ordered accordingly.

The Journal was then approved.

MRS. LIZZIE D. CLARKE, OF NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask, by unanimous consent, that I may be permitted to submit some reports this morning from the Committee on the Judiciary, not for present consideration but merely for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection?

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the bill (H. R. 8275) for the relief of Mrs. Lizzie D. Clarke, of New Orleans; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

APPELLATE POWERS UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported a bill (H. R. 8276) to extend the appellate powers of the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. TAYLOR WOOD.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported the bill (H. R. 8277) to remove the political disabilities of J. Taylor Wood, of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS R. WARE.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported the bill (H. R. 8278) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas R. Ware, of Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF PROBATE COURTS, DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8173) to increase the jurisdiction of probate courts of Dakota Territory; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask whether there will be any objection to putting on their passage the bills reported from the Judiciary Committee merely for the removal of political disabilities?

The SPEAKER. Unless they are privileged matters the Chair, under the rule, can not entertain the request.

DEDICATION OF WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to submit the report of the joint committee in relation to the dedication of the Washington Monument and for the passage of the accompanying resolution.

The report is as follows:

The commission organized under the joint resolution approved May 13, 1884, "in relation to ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument," as notified by joint resolution approved December 18, 1884, respectively report that at a meeting of said commission, held in the room of the Joint Committee on the Library, June 19, 1884, Hon. JOHN SHERMAN was designated chairman, E. J. Babcock secretary, and F. L. Harney assistant secretary. An invitation was extended to Hon. Robert C. Winthrop to deliver an address in the House of Representatives on the occasion of the dedication, which was accepted. The correspondence relating thereto is herewith communicated. Special invitations were sent to the distinguished persons described in the joint resolution, and an engraved card of invitation was sent to a great number of civil and military organizations throughout the United States, the Regents of Mount Vernon, relatives of General Washington, and distinguished persons, a copy of which is herewith communicated.

Selections from the letters of acceptance and declination are also communicated. The commission invited Lieut. Gen. P. H. Sheridan to act as marshal of the day, with an aid-de-camp from every State and Territory. This invitation was promptly accepted, and General Sheridan entered with zeal and activity upon the performance of the duties assigned him.

An order of proceedings for the dedication of the monument, for the procession from the monument to the Hall of the House, and for the arrangements at the Capitol was provided by the commission and approved by concurring resolutions of the two Houses. This order of proceedings was executed in all its details without any accident, interruption, or change.

The thanks of the commission are justly due to General Sheridan for the admirable manner in which the order of procession was executed.

The addresses, prayers, and ceremonies are herewith communicated in the order in which they occurred.

Your commission feel that they will not have fully discharged their duty without reporting to the two Houses a resolution of thanks to Col. Thomas Lincoln Casey, Engineer Corps, United States Army, for his skill, ability, and fidelity, and to his associates, and the workmen for the admirable manner in which they have performed their respective duties in the erection and completion of the monument.

A monument has been erected to the name and fame of George Washington more imposing, costly, and appropriate than ever before was erected in honor of any man, and without the loss of a life in its construction or any accident or event to mar the hearty satisfaction of the American people at its successful completion.

JOHN SHERMAN.
JUSTIN S. MORRILL.
WILLIAM B. ALLISON.
THOMAS F. BAYARD.
LUCIUS Q. C. LAMAR.

JOSEPH G. CANNON.
JAMES LAIRD.
W. W. CORCORAN.
JAMES C. WELLING.
JOSEPH M. TONER.
THOMAS L. CASEY.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution accompanying the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress are hereby tendered to Col. Thomas Lincoln Casey, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and to his assistants, and to the workmen for the admirable manner in which he and they have performed their respective duties in the completion of the monument to the name and fame of George Washington.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state there is a concurrent resolution from the Senate to the same effect precisely, which if acted upon will dispose of the whole matter.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Then let the resolution be laid aside and the Senate resolution taken up instead.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is on the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Yes; I ask the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was adopted.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. There is another resolution providing for the printing of the proceedings, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 extra copies of the report and proceedings of the commission to provide suitable ceremonies for the dedication of the Washington Monument, together with the engraved card attached thereto, be printed, 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 500 copies for distribution by Lieutenant-General P. H. Sheridan, United States Army, to the civil and military organizations which participated in the procession, 400 copies for the Washington National Monument Association for distribution among its members, and 100 copies to Col. Thomas Lincoln Casey, engineer, for distribution among the mechanics and workmen employed in the erection of the monument.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York by reason of the provision in relation to engraving it may be the House itself has not power to order that printing to be done, and therefore it ought to be a joint resolution.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. The view of the joint commission was that a concurrent resolution should be passed. The Senate has passed already this identical resolution.

Mr. HAMMOND. Why not pass the Senate resolution, then?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I am willing to do so.

The SPEAKER. This is not a concurrent resolution. It is a simple House resolution.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I submit, Mr. Speaker, the view in the joint committee was that concurring resolutions would be sufficient—not a concurrent resolution; but the Senate has passed such a resolution.

Mr. HAMMOND. Take up the Senate resolution, then.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I ask the resolution be amended so as to make it a concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to make it a concurrent resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it open to amendment? If so, I ask it be read as modified so we may see what it is.

The SPEAKER. The only modification is to make it a concurrent resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask it be again read.

The resolution as modified, making it a concurrent resolution, was read.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move to strike out "10,000" and insert "20,000."

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting 25,000 copies, with the ratio of distribution changed to conform therewith.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I now suggest that the other numbers in the resolution be correspondingly changed; that is, that the same ratio of distribution shall prevail as was originally fixed in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better suggest the numbers to the Clerk.

Mr. MILLS. What is to be the method of distributing these additional copies?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] is preparing an amendment to conform to the increased number ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMAS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask, in reference to the resolution offered just before this, whether it was a House or Senate resolution. I refer to the resolution just adopted.

The SPEAKER. It was a House resolution; the gentleman objected to the Senate resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it understood that this additional printing is to be proportionately divided?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is preparing an amendment.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I now offer the following amendment so as to make the distribution of the additional numbers ordered printed conform to the distribution heretofore provided in the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert: "Of which 8,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 16,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to know what became of the resolution preceding this.

The SPEAKER. It was passed. The question now is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DORSHEIMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I now move to reconsider the vote by which the former resolution was adopted—the resolution tendering the thanks of Congress to Colonel Casey and others.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. There is a question of privilege pending—a motion to reconsider.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I move to lay that on the table, and on that motion call the previous question.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not yielded the floor to the gentleman to submit a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] will proceed.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, the reason I move this reconsideration is that the resolution which has been adopted is a proposition to tender the thanks of Congress to this officer, Colonel Casey. It is admitted that his achievement is a great engineering achievement; but, sir, in all cases where Congress has granted its thanks heretofore it has been, with three exceptions, to which I shall presently refer, for great military achievements in the service of the country, and only in cases of that kind.

I think the thanks of Congress have been voted in thirty-eight different instances, and with the exception of three cases always for gallantry in the military service. These three instances were: In the first instance where a captain of an American man-of-war went into the harbor of Smyrna and demanded the release of Kosztá under the very guns of the fortress; next, the thanks of Congress were granted to the captain of an American man-of-war who rescued a transport loaded with American marines, and rescued a man-of-war which had been abandoned at sea; and again to Captain Dahlgren for the invention of the Dahlgren gun during the war. In all of the other instances this greatest of all honors was conferred for gallantry in action.

Now, the effect of this resolution, if adopted, is to extend the time of this officer on the active-list for ten years; and I want to know if this Congress is ready to grant this greatest of all honors that can be conferred upon an officer in the Army or the Navy and grant it together with all the privileges that go hand and hand with it, simply because he has succeeded in carrying out the plans of Capt. George W. Davis, which he admittedly did in the new foundation under the monument and completing it in accordance with the plans of Captain Davis. This resolution does not propose to give the thanks of Congress to Captain Davis, of the Corps of Engineers of the Army, who made and submitted the plan to the commission for its confirmation by which the foundation of the monument was strengthened and its completion made possible; but it proposes to give the thanks simply to a man who had executed that plan. I do not think, sir, it is right and proper. I think it is a step in the wrong direction. If the thanks of Congress are to be conferred at all, give them to Capt. George H. Davis, of the Army, who made the plans and furnished the specifications by which the foundations were strengthened, taking the old foundation from under the monument and replacing it with a new one more substantial and suitable.

Mr. HAMMOND. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. Who are embraced by the words of this resolution under "assistants" and "laborers"?

Mr. THOMAS. It is only those who were subordinates; but as far as they are concerned the resolution amounts to nothing. The precedents are that the thanks of Congress are granted to those who receive the thanks of Congress by name. What is the benefit to Captain Davis in passing a resolution of this character when his name is not mentioned?

I think he was the man who deserved the greatest credit for this great achievement.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT].

Mr. WAIT. Mr. Speaker, I agree most heartily in all that the gentleman from Illinois has said in regard to the marked ability and scientific attainments of Captain Davis, as well as in respect to the valuable service rendered by him in the construction of the Washington Monument. I have long known Captain Davis personally, for he is a native of my State and born in the district which I have the honor to represent. I believe him to be an intelligent and admirably trained engineer, who by his ability, rare skill, and scientific acquirements added greatly to the possibility of the successful work which was done on this monument.

If I have been correctly informed he has had the constant oversight of the work, and his suggestions, the fruit of his intelligence and admirable professional training, have been most invaluable to Colonel Casey. And, Mr. Speaker, let me here say that I do not mean to detract one iota from the ability of Colonel Casey or his well-earned reputation as an accomplished engineer, or the credit which is certainly due to him for most valuable service rendered in the prosecution of this great national work. It is a pleasure to me to unite with other gentlemen in paying every tribute to his ability, fidelity, and efficiency. But when it is proposed to amend the pending resolution by placing in it the name of Captain Davis as the able and faithful associate of Colonel Casey—and I call to mind the fact that he was the man upon whom Colonel Casey leaned for counsel and for aid from the beginning to the end of this great work, and also call to mind the extent and great value of his services—I do feel that the House should not for a moment hesitate to associate the names of these two distinguished gentlemen in this resolution.

If I understand the facts, and the gentleman from Illinois will correct me if I am wrong, it was Captain Davis who arranged and perfected all the elevating machinery that carried the stones one after another from the surface of the earth as they went up toward the sky in the construction of the monument. It was his skill and rare ingenuity that invented this machinery, which was so vitally important as a most efficient agent in the rapid and successful prosecution of the work. I have no hesitation in saying that in the important matter of strengthening and perfecting the foundation of the monument Colonel Casey, as an honorable gentleman, would say that the suggestions, the counsel, and the assistance of Captain Davis were invaluable to him.

Captain Davis is one of the most meritorious officers connected with the Engineer Department of the Army. Few, if any, men connected with that branch of the service rank higher in point of intelligence and attainments than he does; and I certainly think that we only pay due respect to him and show a proper appreciation of his ability and his services if we associate his name with that of Colonel Casey in the resolution which is now pending.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order. There is a great deal of confusion. I hope the House will be brought to order.

The SPEAKER. Order will be secured if gentlemen would resume their seats. Gentlemen will please do so.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] has doubtless drawn his precedents from some suggestions that came to us the other day in the Naval Committee as to thanking certain gentlemen connected with the Arctic expedition. We reported against giving them the thanks of Congress, because it tended to promotion in the first place, and in the second place because we did not want to make the thanks of Congress too cheap.

So far as I am concerned, I would give unstinted thanks to any one who has achieved anything very notable and great in connection with our people and our country; and I would not be quite so particular unless certain consequences followed. I do not believe in giving thanks merely for martial or for civic achievements. I believe that the engineering qualities of our time—the new forces that are being harnessed by civilization—call for some notice from the Congress of Americans sitting here in their connection with invention and physical progress. But there is nothing very great in this monument. In one respect it is the old Egyptian obelisk done over again and made a little higher. The lifting of these stones so praised by my friend from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] is not a very great mechanical feat. It does not belong to the muse of mechanism, like the Eddystone light-house and some other things that might be mentioned. It only belongs to the plain old system of masonry known from the time of Cheops down. Therefore I do not so much aggrandize what has been done. But if thanks are to be given at all, do not let us discriminate against the men or the man, Captain Davis, who originated this proposition, who gave the plan, who fixed the foundation on which this grand superstructure has been erected. Let us, if you please, and I suggest it to my colleague [Mr. DORSHEIMER]—let us include both men in the thanks of Congress if any—

Mr. DUNN (in his seat). And then lay the whole matter on the table.

Mr. COX, of New York. And then, if you please, on a fair vote table

it. But when a resolution comes in here so well considered, and on so patriotic an occasion, and for so grand an object, I would not, I say, be stinted in the praise which belongs to the men who have done the work among so many vicissitudes and in so short a time.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not wish to detract anything from the achievements of Colonel Casey. I would be the last man on earth to do that. But I think if the thanks of Congress are to be given, the one who merits them most should not be left out in order that honor may be done to another officer who happens to be the superior in rank. And it was on that ground that I made the motion to reconsider, and on the further ground that I do not believe it safe, proper, or just to our officers engaged in the military service of this country to give the thanks of Congress to a man engaged in a purely civil enterprise over the heads of men fighting on the frontier and doing legitimate military duty. I do not think it right that his term of service on the active list should be increased ten years for rendering this simple civil enterprise, while officers are fighting the enemy on the frontier without receiving the thanks of Congress. It is upon that ground I object to it.

If an amendment should be offered here including the name of Captain Davis, and if I could be allowed to offer a proviso that the length of service on the active list shall not be increased thereby, then I should not object so much to the resolution. But I do not think we can afford, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has said, to make the thanks of Congress, this greatest of our public honors, so cheap simply because a monument has been successfully erected to Washington.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] rose in his place a moment ago; if he desires to make any remarks I will yield to him.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I move the previous question on my motion.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] proposed to cut me off from debate a while ago.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I did not propose to cut you off.

Mr. THOMAS. You moved the previous question.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I did not. I moved to lay on the table, in order—

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, let the resolution be reported.

Mr. THOMAS. I am willing to yield five or ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] if he desires.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I wish the floor in my right.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I move the previous question.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Very well. Then I ask my friends on this side of the House to vote it down.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, is there any objection to having the resolution reported again?

The SPEAKER. It has been reported twice, and the question is not now upon the resolution; it is on a motion for the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division, there were—ayes 71, noes 50.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and 19 gentlemen voted in the affirmative—not a sufficient number.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers upon the motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and noes are refused, and the gentleman from New York demands tellers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. KEAN and others. Too late.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I insist on the point, Mr. Speaker. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The SPEAKER. The result has not been announced, and the Chair is bound to take notice of the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. THOMAS, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. DORSHEIMER.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is there enough in this to warrant filibustering?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Pending the count by tellers.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I should like a statement of this question. The tellers disagree.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated the question very plainly, but if the House will be in order, so that the statement of the Chair can be heard, it will be repeated. The question upon which the House is now voting is the demand of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] for the previous question upon his motion to reconsider.

Pending the announcement of the result of the vote by tellers.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, an agreement having been reached by which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] accepts time from me, I withdraw the motion for the previous question and yield him twenty minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate returned to the House of Representatives with amendments the bill (H. R. 5713) to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. SEWELL.

DEDICATION OF WASHINGTON MONUMENT, ETC.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, by a joint resolution of Congress a commission was created to carry out appropriate ceremonies at the dedication of the Washington Monument and to recommend to Congress whatever it might regard as suitable upon that interesting historic occasion. That joint commission, by a unanimous vote, recommended that Congress should grant a vote of thanks to the officer of engineers who has had charge of the monument since its construction has been in the hands of the Government, and accordingly a resolution of thanks has passed the Senate and is now upon the Speaker's table.

The propriety of this action is challenged upon two grounds: First, it is said that it will increase the term of service of the officer receiving it. I have to say that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] is entirely mistaken in making that statement. A vote of thanks by Congress does, under certain circumstances, operate to extend the term of service of a naval officer, but it does not extend the term of service of an Army officer. General Sherman received the thanks of Congress, but the term of his service was not extended an hour by that circumstance. It is also said that some one other than Colonel Casey was the author of the bold design upon which the foundations were removed from underneath the monument when it stood at the height of one hundred and eighty feet and larger foundations substituted. I know Captain Davis, and I venture to say that the statement of the gentleman from Illinois is made without any authority from him whatever, and he would be the first to repudiate it. The plans for taking out the old foundations were submitted to the committees of Congress by Colonel Casey in person and by designs which bear his name; and I now state that he claims those designs in general and in detail.

We have thought that the successful erection of the most important, the loftiest, the largest, and the most costly structure ever erected in human history to the memory of a man—erected under circumstances so extraordinary—was entitled to such a recognition as we now propose. When it was suggested in the Senate that this plan could be carried out the statement was met with incredulity and reproach. Senator ALLISON stated on the floor of that body that Colonel Casey was "singular among engineers" if he thought that his plan could be successfully carried out. But it was carried out, and with an infinitesimal loss in the height of the structure. I believe that the vast mass was held up in the air, its foundations removed, and the new foundations put in their place with the loss of only about an inch in the total height of a structure then 180 feet high and with no variation at all from the perpendicular, but on the other hand correcting in its result a slight deviation from the perpendicular which had been discovered in the monument as it stood.

The members of the House upon the joint commission, as well as the Senators, thought that a work so entirely without parallel or precedent in engineering was deserving of special recognition by Congress. Now that the joint commission of Congress has placed this resolution upon the records of this House, and in view of the fact that the Senate has by, I believe, a unanimous vote passed the resolution, I hope that we shall not stand here and refuse to give our proportion of the praise which is due this most skillful and meritorious officer.

In a debate on this floor a year ago the distinguished member from Indiana said that the officers of the Army of the United States, however skillful in war, had not won their fair proportion of the laurels of peace. Here is an instance in which a peaceful triumph has been achieved by one of the officers of our Army—a triumph which, as I have said, is without a parallel, and I hope there will be no hesitation on the part of the House in generously and with essential unanimity giving the thanks of Congress to Colonel Casey.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] to yield twenty minutes to me.

The SPEAKER. He did; but the remainder of the hour belongs to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. THOMAS. So I understand. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. About twenty-five minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall not occupy that much time.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, rose.

Mr. THOMAS. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] desire?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Three or four minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I desire merely to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois. If he will look at the Congressional Directory he will find that Col. Thomas L. Casey, Corps of Engineers, is in charge as engineer of the "State, War, and Navy building, and Washington Monument," and that he has two prominent assistants under him—one Capt. G. W. Davis, United States Army, designated for the Washington Monument, and the other Mr. B. R. Green, civil engineer and architect, for the State, War, and Navy building. Now I wish to suggest that in voting the thanks of Congress to Colonel Casey we are reflectively voting thanks to these gentlemen who have been his subordinates, and who are gentlemen of distinguished skill and accomplishments, worthy of being associated with Colonel Casey in these great works, each of them, I have no doubt, consulted by him in their respective assignments of work. I believe the thanks of Congress are due to Colonel Casey. He has finished the monument. It is one of the completed structures in the city of Washington; and he is pushing rapidly to completion the building of the War, State, and Navy Departments, which, when finished, will have occupied in its construction a shorter time than any public building that has ever been erected here, and at less cost, I have always understood, comparatively. He deserves the thanks of Congress as being the engineer who has had in charge the work on this monument; and by thanking him, as I have said before, you thank every one who has worked under his direction.

If you give the thanks of Congress to the general of an army, to whom does such a testimonial in effect extend? The thanks of Congress were given to General Grant for bringing about the surrender at Appomattox. Did not his subordinate generals and officers help him to plan that great campaign which ended in that surrender? So Congress extended its thanks to General Sheridan; but did not his subordinate officers aid him in arranging his brilliant campaign in the valley? So you gave the thanks of Congress to General Sherman for his "march to the sea." Had he not the aid of subordinates in planning that grand military achievement? So I say, Mr. Speaker, when you thank Colonel Casey you thank these distinguished men who aided in bringing to completion this great monument to the Father of his Country, and I think he should be thanked. Captain Davis, I am sure, will so understand this well-deserved compliment, and, my word for it, were he entitled to vote on this question, would do so most cheerfully for his chief, and would say to us that we are giving credit to the one entitled to it, and detracting nothing from his reputation as his assistant.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, if the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] were followed these subordinate officers might be called into the dining-room where the great chief feasts; but he alone is to be benefited by thanks of Congress as now proposed. Who will know five years from now that Capt. George W. Davis was the man who furnished the plans. I assert it again, and am borne out by the current literature of the day, the statement having been often repeated and so far as I have heard never denied before—

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, rose.

Mr. THOMAS. No, sir; not another word. This is the first time I have ever known the statement questioned that Captain Davis furnished the plans and was the officer who practically executed this work.

Now, if the thanks of Congress are given to Capt. George W. Davis at the same time they are given to his superior officer I shall not object so strenuously; but I do object to making fish of one and flesh of the other. I object to this officer in charge of the State, War, and Navy buildings and the Washington Monument receiving all the thanks of Congress, while the officer in charge of the Washington Monument is left out and barely permitted to shine by the reflected light of his superior officer. If this work entitles any one to the thanks of Congress it is Captain Davis, and the reason I move this reconsideration is that the resolution may be amended so as to include his name, and then he will not be compelled to stand while his superior officer feasts at the sumptuous table spread for him by a generous Congress.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Bring in a separate resolution for Captain Davis, if you will.

Mr. THOMAS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield for a question. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BLOUNT. What comes to Colonel Casey by reason of this vote of thanks by Congress?

Mr. THOMAS. I am under the impression it increases his rank, or rather increases his length of service on the active-list, but the gentleman from New York says I am mistaken about that. Without the statute before me I can not speak positively, but it has been my impression that if he receives a vote of thanks by Congress the term of service on the active-list of Colonel Casey will be increased not three years, but ten years.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman further whether he is making the point between Captain Davis and Colonel Casey?

Mr. THOMAS. In the first place, I question the propriety of conferring this greatest honor by Congress simply for civil services and achievements.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the gentleman is willing to waive his objection if Captain Davis is included?

Mr. THOMAS. I might have waived my objection if Captain Davis had been coupled with Colonel Casey in this resolution of thanks. I was compelled to move a reconsideration in order that the resolution might be brought before the House for amendment, so as to include the name of Capt. George W. Davis.

Mr. BLOUNT. Allow me one other question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the controversy between Captain Davis and Colonel Casey been passed upon by the commission?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know whether it has or not; but it does not preclude others who may have their own opinion in the matter. This can scarcely be regarded res adjudicata because Col. Casey may have made claim for the thanks of Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow the statute to be read?

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection to yielding for a minute to have it read.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. The only provision of the statute which relates to the thanks of Congress in relation to the retirement of an officer is section 1446. It is chapter 3, title 15 of the Revised Statutes, entitled "Retired Officers of the Navy," and this is the language of the section:

SEC. 1446. Officers on the active-list, not below the grade of commander, who have, upon the recommendation of the President, received by name, during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, a vote of thanks of Congress for distinguished service, shall not be retired, except for cause, until they have been fifty-five years in the service of the United States.

There is no provision whatever lengthening the term of an Army officer by reason of the thanks of Congress.

Mr. HAMMOND. I simply desire to know whether I correctly understand the gentleman's argument. As I understand it, the gentleman thought all this was wrong; but if he could get Captain Davis in, then he would be all right.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not say so.

Mr. HAMMOND. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS. Then you misunderstood me. I have denounced from the beginning the whole business of voting the thanks of Congress merely for civil services. They should be reserved, like the Iron Cross of Germany and the Victoria Cross of England, for distinguished and conspicuous gallantry and for successful military and naval achievements.

Mr. HAMMOND. You think it is all wrong?

Mr. THOMAS. It is all wrong, and the resolution should be voted down.

Mr. HAMMOND. If your fellow gets in, then it is all right.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not say that. It might palliate the wrong thing being done if by amendment the right man was included in the vote of thanks as well as the wrong one. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 93.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes 49.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The SPEAKER. It brings it before the House on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. THOMAS. And I have the floor, and have moved to lay the resolution upon the table. If necessary I will demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay upon the table is not amendable or debatable.

The resolution was again read.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 127, noes 64.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

Mr. THOMAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 229) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Key West, Fla.;

A bill (S. 1810) for the erection of a public building at Sacramento, Cal.; and

A bill (S. 2009) granting a pension to Isabella Turner.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report. I am directed by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, to submit the following report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8120) "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 11, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "And employed as train-masters, and in opening roads, and building wharves;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$675,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: On amendment numbered 23 the committee are unable to agree.

W. H. FORNEY,
R. W. TOWNSHEND,
J. WARREN KEIFER,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. B. ALLISON,
P. R. PLUMB,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the statement accompanying the report.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1886, submitted the following in explanation of the action of the conference committee as submitted in the accompanying report.

The bill as agreed upon in conference appropriates $24,014,032.50, being $405,000 less than as it passed the House, $65,000 more than as it passed the Senate, $440,397.50 less than the law for the current year, and $2,096,437.45 less than the estimates submitted for the fiscal year 1886.

On amendment numbered 23, which strikes out the provision contained in the bill as it passed the House, that proceedings of trial by court-martial shall be carried on during such hours as the court-martial shall determine, the conference committee have been unable to agree.

WM. H. FORNEY,
R. W. TOWNSHEND,
J. WARREN KEIFER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FORNEY. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. WELLER. Is there an explanation accompanying this, showing the effects of the amendments?

The SPEAKER. It has just been read.

Mr. WELLER. In the confusion I did not hear it.

The report of the conference committee was concurred in.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the House will agree to the request of the Senate for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. FORNEY, Mr. TOWNSHEND, and Mr. KEIFER as conferees on the part of the House on said bill.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Last night on the first call of the House I was present and answered to my name, as the RECORD will show. I consulted with the gentleman from Kentucky having charge of the bill then under consideration shortly afterward as to whether I would have time to get my dinner. I went and returned with as great speed as possible, and was in the lobby of the House at the time of the second roll-call. I listened to that call from the lobby, but was not permitted to enter the Hall. I am reported this morning in the RECORD as not having answered to my name on the second roll.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman answer?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I did not, because, as I have said, I was prevented by the officers of the House from being present.

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I have not finished my statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that the gentleman presents a matter of privilege. The gentleman states himself that he was not present and did not answer, and consequently there is no correction to make.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I stated that I was not present on the second call, being temporarily out of the Hall, but I think I have the privilege of asserting that I was prevented from being present when I was entitled to be present by the officers of the House and through no fault or neglect of my own.

Mr. KEIFER. The officers of the House did what they are required to do when a call of the House is proceeding. The doors were ordered to be closed and the gentleman was not entitled to come in, not having answered to the call.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I claim that I was entitled to come in and was prevented.

The SPEAKER. The officers executed the rule of the House and the order of the House. The rule may be wrong, but whether right or wrong it was being enforced under the order of the House, and the gentleman himself has shown by his statement that he was not present.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I was entitled to come in, having answered on the previous call, instead of being reported as absent as shown by the RECORD of this morning.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman had answered at the previous call he would be recorded as present.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I am so recorded; but claim that I was entitled to answer on the second call because I was present. I therefore ask that the RECORD be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The statement the gentleman now makes will go into the RECORD.

ANNUAL REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I rise to submit some privileged reports from the Committee on Printing.

I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the joint resolution (H. Res. 342) authorizing the printing of 400,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1885, and recommend its passage.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, &c. That there be printed 400,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1885; 300,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 70,000 for the use of members of the Senate, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture; the illustrations for the same to be executed, under the supervision of the Public Printer, in accordance with directions of the Joint Committee on Printing, the work to be subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Sec. 2. That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of the publication of said report.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the joint resolution (H. Res. 340) providing for printing monograph second of the publications of the United States Geological Survey, and recommend its adoption.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, &c. That there be printed at the Government Printing Office the usual number of monograph second of the publications of the United States Geological Survey, with the necessary illustrations, and to conform to the editions already issued by the Survey.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I am also instructed by the committee to report back the joint resolution (H. Res. 338) providing for printing additional copies of the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, and recommend its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c. That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, in addition to the number already ordered by law, 15,500 copies of each of the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series; of which 3,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Geological Survey.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the resolution (H. Res. 339) providing for printing the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, and recommend its adoption.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c. That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 15,500 copies each of the sixth and seventh annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, with accompanying papers and illustrations, and uniform with the preceding volumes of the series; of which 3,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Bureau of Ethnology.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I ask unanimous consent—
The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire to make a privileged report. I present the report of a conference committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 1609, to provide for the purchase of the site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add as an additional provision to said House amendment the following: "Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed in any event to increase the cost of the site and building, including approaches, when completed, beyond the sum of $900,000, as provided in this section;" and the House agree to the same.

S. M. STOCKSLAGER,

J. H. HOPKINS,

E. BREITUNG,

Managers on the part of the House.

WM. MAHONEY,

ANGUS CAMERON,

GEORGE G. VEST,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, with an additional provision which more certainly confines the limit of the cost of the building within $900,000. I am sure there will be no objection to the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, not to be considered now.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. GEORGE] rises to a privileged matter.

UMATILLA RESERVATION, OREGON.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the House insist on its amendments to the bill (S. 66) providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing on the Umatilla reservation in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WELLBORN, and Mr. STEVENS.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. COBB. I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7004, with amendments by the Senate, with a view to having the bill and amendments referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. NELSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COBB. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] moves to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill he has indicated and refer the bill with Senate amendments to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. VALENTINE. On that motion I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture.

Mr. PERKINS. I demand a second on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] has already demanded a second.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the amendments of the Senate should be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to have the amendments read. The Clerk will report them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 1, after "that," insert "section 2299 and;"

Page 1, line 1, after "32," insert "excepting sections 2275, 2276, 2283, 2286, and 2298;"

Page 1, lines 1, 2, and 3, strike out "and sections 2299 and 2309;"

Page 1, lines 4, 5, and 6, strike out "and all other laws allowing pre-emption of the public lands of the United States;"

Page 1, strike out all after "repealed," in line 6, down to and including "laws," in line 15, and insert:

"Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the 1st day of July, 1885, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitations, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed: And provided further, That any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the pre-emption law, and who has failed, from any cause, to perfect title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under the homestead laws, may make a second homestead entry in lieu of the pre-emption privilege hereby repealed: And provided further, That all outstanding certificates of deposit on account of surveys heretofore issued under the provisions of sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes and acts supplemental thereto shall be receivable as cash (except for fees and commissions) in the disposal of public lands at the land offices at which certificates are now receivable in commutation of homestead and pre-emption rights."

Strike out section 2 and insert:

"SEC. 2. That an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairies," approved June 14, 1878,' be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the 1st day of July, 1885, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed."

Strike out section 3, page 3, line 14, changing section 4 to section 3.

Strike out all after the word "entry," in line 24, page 3, down to and including the word "patents," in line 4, on page 4, and insert:

"And before the expiration of five years and obtaining a patent therefor from the Government, as in other cases directed by law on making proof of settlement and cultivation as provided by the law heretofore in force granting pre-emption rights."

Page 4, line 5, change section 5 to section 4.

Page 4, after "repealed," in line 8, insert:

"Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the 1st day of July, 1885, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitations, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed."

Page 4, after line 8, insert:

"SEC. 5. That hereafter no public lands of the United States not heretofore offered at public sale, except abandoned military or other reservations and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public auction or be subject to private entry."

Strike out section 6.

At the end of the bill insert the following section:

"SEC. 6. That section 2288 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2288. Any person who has already settled on the public lands either by pre-emption or by virtue of the homestead law or any amendments thereto, and any person who shall hereafter settle on the public lands by virtue of the homestead law or any amendments thereto, shall have the right to transfer by warranty against his own acts any portion of his pre-emption or homestead for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads across such pre-emption or homestead; and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads."

At the end of the bill insert the following section:

"SEC. 7. That an act entitled 'An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries on the public lands,' approved March 3, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

At the end of the bill insert the following section:

"SEC. 8. That wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States by reason of grants made to aid in construction of railroads or other works of internal improvement, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, or order of the Land Department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and said lands have been purchased, in good faith at said price, or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the Land Department have issued certificates or patents thereon in accordance with such purchase or entry without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction, and where, on the 25th day of January, 1885, there were no conflicting claims thereto or settlements thereon, all such entries, and the certificates and patents issued thereon are hereby confirmed and declared valid and legal. And all questions relating to such conflicting claims or settlements shall be subject to adjudication and final decision in the Department of the Interior, and the proper judicial courts; and in case there is any actual settlement on said lands in good faith under the homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States made prior to January 25, 1885, the rights of such settlers shall prevail against any previous entry at the price of $1.25 per acre."

Amend the title so as to read:

"An act to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] moves to suspend the rules and take this bill from the Speaker's table and refer it, with the Senate amendments, to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. A second has been demanded. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. COBB, and the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. VALENTINE, to act as tellers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

Mr. VALENTINE and Mr. MAGINNIS. I object.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 85.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the tellers report ayes 92, noes 85. The ayes have it, and there is a second. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate—fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] will be recognized to control the time in support of the motion, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] to control the time in opposition to it.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy the time of the House for only a few minutes. This bill which is proposed to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands has been amended by the Senate in some essential particulars. I do not believe the House fully understands the provisions of the bill. It provides for amending the homestead law so as to require the proof necessary to a patent to be made twelve months before the patent issues. That amendment is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the object of it is to enable the Department to inquire into the question whether fraud in the homesteading has been committed. The bill also provides for the repeal of the timber-culture law and for the repeal of the pre-emption law. The pre-emption law is somewhat similar to the homestead law. The homestead law is left standing with the amendment which I have indicated, giving to each actual settler one hundred and sixty acres of land. As the law now stands he may become the owner of one hundred and sixty acres more under the pre-emption law, and then he may become the owner of one hundred and sixty more under the timber-culture law, making in all four hundred and eighty acres. Now, the knowledge and experience of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and of the Interior Department are to this effect—you will find it fully stated in three or four of the last reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office—that under the pre-emption law and the timber-culture law lands are constantly being "gobbled" up and passing into the hands of monopolists.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If that be the object of the bill why could you not easily provide that a man who takes up one hundred and sixty acres under one of those laws shall not take up land under the others?

Mr. COBB. Yes; and at the same time leave the imperfections of the three laws untouched.

Mr. VALENTINE. Correct them.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Why not correct the imperfections?

Mr. COBB. Instead of giving to the settler one hundred and sixty acres definitely under the homestead law, the gentleman would have him apply under the homestead law or the pre-emption law or the timber-culture law.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I would have the timber-culture law repealed.

Mr. COBB. The Secretary of the Interior has said that frauds innumerable have been committed under the timber-culture law and the pre-emption law, and I can take the gentleman into Kansas and Nebraska and show him whole townships owned by capitalists under the timber-culture law, and there is not one stick of timber on them.

Mr. VALENTINE. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Why not take means to prevent those frauds instead of bringing in such a bill as this?

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I insist and submit to the House that the better way to get rid of the frauds committed under the pre-emption and the timber-culture laws is to repeal the laws themselves, leaving the homestead law, which was intended to be sufficient to supply the needs and demands of actual settlers. One hundred and sixty acres of land is enough, and I submit that we ought not to allow individuals to procure more than that under these laws. Our public lands are rapidly passing into the hands of private owners. A few acres now exist in the public domain compared with its extent thirty years ago. Those few acres ought to be preserved intact for actual settlers and their homes in the future. I insist, sir, that no greater evil, no greater wrong, has been done to the future of this country than has been done under these laws. More than 10,000,000 of acres of the best lands in the country have been taken up through fraud and perjury and subornation of perjury under the pre-emption and the timber-culture laws, as the evidence shows. Now, I say the best way to remedy these wrongs is to repeal the laws themselves. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has stated in his report that under existing laws it is impossible to prevent these frauds. He tells you that he sends his agents into the territories or the sections where these public lands are to ferret out frauds, but that the parties who have committed the frauds sometimes buy up the agents, and in that and other ways escape the law. Now, in order to prevent parties from evading the law I believe the best thing to do is to repeal the timber-culture and the pre-emption laws, and leave the homestead act, so that actual settlers who in good faith seek homes on the public domains can still obtain them.

Mr. Speaker, I will occupy no further time unless some gentleman wants to ask a question.

Mr. BUDD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question if he will permit me.

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUDD. How is it that the Committee on Public Lands did not on the last suspension day call up one of the forfeiture bills?

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that that is the gentleman's business exactly, or that it is my business to answer the question. He can put his own construction upon the facts. I am doing my duty now. That is all I have to say.

Mr. HENLEY. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] will yield I will answer the question. No land-forfeiture bill could be taken up and passed on suspension day for want of time.

Mr. BUDD. I will state to the gentleman that we did have the time; the committee was passed, and no bill was called up.

Mr. HENLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. If he will inform himself he will discover that it was impossible in the time we had to call up any land-forfeiture bill.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] whether the great frauds in connection with the public lands have not been perpetrated mainly under the homestead law instead of the pre-emption or the timber-culture law?

Mr. COBB. No, sir.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the entire Estes Park and the valuable lands around Lake Tahoe have not all been taken up in that way? Have not the great frauds in the West in connection with the public lands been perpetrated under this "wise, humane, and wholesome law"—the homestead act?

Mr. COBB. No, sir. I deny it entirely; and the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office will bear me out in this denial.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to ask further whether the trouble is not in an improper execution of the laws as they now exist, rather than in the laws themselves?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is the point.

Mr. COBB. That may be; but it is claimed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that he can not enforce the pre-emption law so as to prevent fraud. He has been appealing to Congress for four years to repeal that law and save the public lands. I deny the statement of the gentleman from Ohio. I say he is mistaken in stating that the lands to which he refers were taken up under the homestead law. While there may have been some frauds under the homestead law, the great body of the frauds have been committed under the pre-emption and timber-culture laws.

Mr. CONVERSE. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion right there?

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri). Six minutes.

Mr. COBB. I can not yield further.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to correct the gentleman's statement.

Mr. COBB. I can not yield further.

Mr. PAYSON. Will my colleague on the committee [Mr. COBB] yield to me to answer the question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE]?

Mr. COBB. Yes; I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio that the great fraud in connection with the Estes Park, by which that entire tract was taken up by the Earl of Dunraven, was not consummated under the homestead law, but under the pre-emption law. I have in my desk papers to prove this statement, and I shall be glad to submit them to the gentleman from Ohio. The whole fraud in connection with the Estes Park was perpetrated under the pre-emption law.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to state—

Mr. COBB. I can not yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana declines to yield further. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] is recognized to control the time in opposition to this motion.

Mr. COBB. I reserve the residue of my time, intending to yield to my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, the question now before the House is one of great importance to the country, especially to that portion where the public domain is now located. If the bill before the House should become a law it will wipe out the present pre-emption and timber-culture acts and amend the eighth section of the homestead law relative to the commutation of homesteads.

We who live in the West—and I have lived upon the public domain or adjacent to it all my life, and am perfectly familiar with these laws and the system which has grown up under them—we of the West are opposed to the repeal of these laws, because we believe they are beneficial to that section and to the whole country.

I believe—indeed, I think I can say I know—that this cry which has come up, commencing in a small way as it did until it has almost become a shout, for the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture acts has come directly from two sources. First, it has come from the great railroad corporations of the West, who desire to sell their lands but can not do so at a price beyond $1.25 an acre so long as the Government permits the actual settler to go there and enter land at that price. The railroads of the West desire this legislation repealed so that they may advance the price of their lands. Next, it is desired by the great "cattle-kings" of this country. There is a fight going on to-day in my State, and in fact in all the Western States, between the actual settlers and the "cattle-kings" for supremacy. When we go upon the frontier and under the timber-culture act plant ten, twenty, thirty, or forty acres with timber whereby we reclaim those lands and make them agricultural, the "cattle-kings" turn out upon those lands their herds to eat the trees as they sprout from the ground. These "cattle-kings" are anxious to have this law wiped out, that their cattle may roam over those prairies undisturbed by the settler.

When the poor homesteader comes there with all he has in a wagon drawn by a pair of oxen, and sits down with his family, handles his spade and plow, gathers together a temporary hut in which he puts his family, then they send out their cowboys to drive him off. But, sir, they can not drive off the men who go there with sufficient capital and who reside upon the land a year or six months, pay for it, and are backed by friends, influential financially as well as otherwise, who gather around them other homesteaders and establish a settlement which defies the efforts of the cattle-kings. Those are the men who open these Territories to actual settlers.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I speak the sentiment of the West when I say that these laws ought not to be repealed. These laws, and especially the pre-emption laws, have been those under which the West has been settled. I am in favor of a homestead law. If the law has not been enforced, if fraud has been practiced in reference to the public domain, then change it. To practice fraud a man must commit perjury, and if he does that, he can be sent to the penitentiary. Enforce the law criminally against these people, and there will be no trouble on this account.

How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. VALENTINE. I wish to say simply that the fault is in the execution of the law and not in the law itself. I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska, this is legislation of vital importance to our section of the country. It is indeed only legislation in the interest of the cattle organizations of this land, and I am astonished that men come upon the floor of this House professing to be in favor of legislation in behalf of the settlers and yet advocating this bill. What will be its effect if adopted? What will be the consequences precipitated upon the country if this bill becomes a law? Repeal the provisions of the statutes which we have already given the people by which opportunities are afforded the pioneer of acquiring title to the public domain; strike them down, and say the people shall only acquire title under the provisions of the homestead law, and what is the effect?

There are thousands of acres in my own State, there are thousands of acres in Nebraska, there are thousands of acres in Colorado, there are thousands of acres in every Territory of the West which can not be taken under the homestead law. Compel the settler to settle on one hundred and sixty acres of that arid land and live there until he can secure the benefits and title under the homestead law, and he can not avail himself of it. It is impossible to make a living on one hundred and sixty acres of that land in many cases. That is true, as I have said, in every Territory in the West. Repeal the pre-emption law, strike down the timber-culture act, abrogate the desert law, and strike down all provisions by which settlers may obtain title to the public domain except the homestead law, and all that vast domain will be reserved for occupancy by the cattle companies of the country; and hence I charge that this proposed legislation is in their interest, and that they are organizing and pressing for its enactment.

Who else is demanding or asking for the repeal of these several statutes?

Have you had a petition from a settler anywhere asking for all this? Are they memorializing for this legislation? There is a concurrent resolution pending in the Legislature of my own State at this time asking for the sale of a large tract of land in Kansas at 50 cents an acre, and not to the speculator but for the people. But there is no legislation or memorial pending there or in any other Legislature of the West, so far as I can learn, asking for a repeal of the timber-culture and pre-emption laws. Instead, however, you find the people who have gone out upon the prairies of the West, cultivating and reclaiming them, building them up, paying taxes, and contributing to that wonderful growth, opposing this legislation.

It is under the pre-emption law the West has grown up and thrived and prospered as it has and constructed those grand Commonwealths. But now, if it shall be the disposition of this Congress to say that no acre of our great domain shall be disposed of or title obtained thereto except under the homestead law, the cattle companies will possess themselves of thousands of acres, and graze their vast herds without let or hindrance and smile at our simplicity.

They will organize at once for the occupation of thousands of acres of land that are not adapted to agricultural pursuits, but are of some value for grazing purposes, and will keep out the homestead settler and, under the provisions of this bill, will feed their herds and grow fat upon land owned by the Government, and from which the community and State get no tax or return. Strike down every provision of law under which title may be obtained to the public domain except the homestead law, and large sections of our great West will remain Government land to be possessed in the manner I have suggested; and the honest pioneer is wronged, the community and State suffers, the Government realizes nothing, and only the cattle companies prosper and rejoice at our legislation.

It is said that fraud has been practiced under these several statutes. Concede it; but set up against that what has been effected—the material growth and prosperity secured under these several laws—and the picture is all with us. The Government has got its money for the land. The property passes to individuals and becomes subject to taxation. Homes are made, industry is encouraged, and good is done to the country. I would, however, improve the legislation. I would enact laws which will protect against fraud, but give to the honest pioneer the right to choose between these several statutes. I am in favor of extending the provisions of the homestead law to every acre of the public domain. I would give to the settler the right to secure a title to his home by continuous occupation and cultivation under the homestead law, if such should be his interest or desire; but I would also give to him these other statutes and the right of electing between, that all portions of our great domain may be occupied and owned by our honest yeomen who are struggling to secure homes for wife and little ones and those dependent upon them. If the homestead law can be amended so as to prevent fraud, so that those other statutes—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to call attention to one statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] that he could go into Nebraska and Kansas and show whole townships fraudulently entered under the timber-culture act. Let me say, under the timber-culture act there can not be any more than one-fourth in every section of the public domain. That can not be true, therefore. I yield for three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE].

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office has not stated that for the last five years 90 per cent. of pre-emptions have been fraudulently made?

Mr. VALENTINE. If so, most of them are in the timber lands of Minnesota.

Mr. WASHBURN. The timber lands of Minnesota and the prairie lands of Dakota Territory.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, I hope, if this bill is to pass, we shall have more consideration than is likely to be given in the closing hours of this session. My own observation, which runs through two years in connection with the public lands, is that the great stealing which has been carried on under this Government has been through its land system, and a large portion has been through the homestead law. The trouble is not with the laws themselves. The homestead law, the pre-emption law, the timber-culture act are each and all wise and wholesome laws, but the trouble is in the execution of these laws. What we want is reform in the administration. The thing to be done, Mr. Speaker, is to turn the rascals out and put in honest men to see that these laws are enforced as they were intended to be and as they were in former times.

I desire to repeat what I said a few moments ago—that my investigation as to Estes Park showed that every acre of that land was taken from the Government without the payment of a single dollar. If it had been taken under the pre-emption law we would have received $1.25 per acre for the ten or twelve thousand acres in that park, but we never received a cent to pay even for the survey of the land. The same is true of the fine timber lands about Lake Tahoe, amounting to millions of acres. Not a dollar went into the Treasury for the purchase of those lands, but men of straw filed homestead claims, made the necessary affidavits, transferred their titles to the mill companies, timber merchants, land companies, and thus the frauds amounting to millions were perpetrated upon the Government.

I saw more than a million acres of timber land around Lake Tahoe, which were in possession of five companies, for which the Government never received one dollar, although the Government had paid for all the expenses connected with the surveys, and when I saw the lands about 1880 they would have brought under the hammer in cash at least $15 per acre.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VALENTINE. I yield now to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] for two minutes.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Public Lands state that they urge the adoption of this measure for two reasons: First, because under the present land laws a settler, they say, can take advantage of three different laws; and secondly, on account of frauds claimed to be perpetrated under the homestead or pre-emption laws. These are the two reasons which they urge.

The proper answer to the suggestions made by the committee is, that if they simply want to confine a settler to one hundred and sixty acres of land instead of permitting him to take advantage of other land laws to acquire additional lands, all that is necessary for them to do here is to bring in a bill saying that the settler who has taken advantage of one of these acts and gets his one hundred and sixty acres of land shall not be entitled to the privileges of the other to acquire one hundred and sixty additional acres. That would cure that evil, which knocks the ground from under the committee on that proposition.

The next ground on which they propose to repeal this beneficent act made by our fathers in 1801, and under repeated Democratic administrations down to 1861, is on the ground of alleged or attempted fraud. Now, that there may be fraud committed under the act is very true; but why not amend the laws so that these frauds can not be committed?

Would not that seem to be the more reasonable policy? And I would like to have people who talk about fraud take the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and point me to the case of one single conviction of any person, or any prosecution under that Commissioner or his agents, for any frauds committed under any of the land laws, which would have been the case if it was true, as they state, that their purpose is to prevent fraud.

Now, sir, there are hundreds and thousands of acres which can not be taken up or entered upon for cultivation in these desert or arid lands—

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MAGINNIS. No, sir; I can not yield for a question.

Under the desert-land act these arid lands, where there is no water, a man to make a settlement would have to build a ditch costing him $500 or $1,000 or $1,500 to convey the water to his farm and irrigate it. For the purpose of doing this he must have sufficient land to enable him to construct his ditch so that he may reclaim the land and make it valuable; otherwise it is worthless. I repeat, then, if there are frauds committed under the act, amend the act so as to prevent it. But if you repeal the laws in such manner as you propose you prevent settlement, and there is no way of getting title except through the railroad companies. This act should be entitled "An act in the interest of the cattle-kings and to double the price of railroad lands," which are the only lands settlers can buy if you pass this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB. I now yield two minutes to my colleague from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will not be deceived as to the matter in issue. It is a question between the disposition of what remains of the public lands, under the homestead law with proper amendments under this bill to secure its efficiency, or the disposition of your lands through agencies to speculators. I repeat, it is an issue between the disposition of what remains of your public land under the homestead law or to speculators upon the public lands; and no gentleman who has made the subject a study can entertain any doubt upon that point.

On the 21st day of January a year ago the gentleman from Nebraska, the gentleman from Kansas, the gentleman from Ohio, and others, declared in favor of the policy by their votes, and the House too with great unanimity, of securing what remained of the public lands to actual settlers under the homestead law. But yet gentlemen are here on the floor of the House insisting that the law under which we are assured by the Commissioner of the General Land Office 90 per cent. of all the frauds have been committed shall still remain in force. I appeal to the friends of the homestead law to stand by the Public Lands Committee; for that agency and that alone can put a stop to the enormous frauds by which you build up these great landed estates.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB. I will now yield two minutes to my colleague on the committee from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the time of the gentleman has been exhausted.

Mr. COBB. I thought I had five minutes of my time remaining and yielded two to my colleague from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was under the impression that the gentleman had yielded to the gentleman from Ohio a portion of his time.

Mr. COBB. No, sir, I did not. That was yielded by the other side. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, and I would like to ask how much time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER. According to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana he has five minutes remaining.

Mr. PAYSON. This whole proposition may be very simply stated. The proposal in this bill is simply this and this alone: That the public domain which is yet remaining shall be disposed of only under the provisions of the homestead law and in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to each individual, and existing law which conflicts with this scheme we propose to repeal. There is all there is of it.

The statement made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] that this legislation is in the interest of the cattle-kings in this country is his assertion alone. When gentlemen undertake to say here that frauds are not being perpetrated to any particular extent under the pre-emption law, let me say to those gentlemen that there has not been a sundry civil appropriation bill reported for the last four years that has contained an appropriation of less than $90,000 to ferret out these frauds.

Mr. STRAIT. Under the homestead law.

Mr. PAYSON. I deny it. It is under the pre-emption law, and the action recommended here by the Public Lands Committee has been recommended for the last four years by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

When my friend from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] says that the proper method is to turn the rascals out from this land, we of the Public Lands Committee say: "Let us lock the doors and keep the rascals out in the first instance."

What gentleman can stand here in the light of public sentiment and assert that the American people are in favor of the continuation of a scheme which allows the public lands to be taken by the thousands and thousands of acres by speculators to be sold afterward at an increased price to actual settlers? No man dares do that.

Mr. STRAIT. It does not do that.

Mr. PAYSON. It does do that.

Mr. PERKINS. The Commissioner of the General Land Office acknowledges under the homestead act frauds are perpetrated the same as under the pre-emption law.

Mr. PAYSON. Precisely, and we extend the provisions of the law to meet that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB].

Mr. BUDD. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUDD. During the discussion of this question the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB], the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, yielded to the House for any question that might be asked. I thereupon asked him the question, why on the 16th of this month, when the Committee on Public Lands was called for a motion to suspend the rules, as is shown by the Journal of that day, a copy of which I have, no such motion was made; and with the politeness which characterizes him he informed me it was none of my business. Thereupon the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] answered the question, stating that they had no time. For the purpose of showing that it was my business, that it was the business of the House, and that they did have time, and that the committee was then called after an anti-monopoly speech by one of the members, I simply read from the Journal of the 16th.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see any question of personal privilege whatever. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BUDD. I suppose it goes into the RECORD now, Mr. Speaker.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 256) granting a pension to Mary A. Land;
A bill (H. R. 891) granting a pension to Reuben J. Ebbberman;

A bill (H. R. 7002) for the relief of Harriet L. Stevens;
A bill (H. R. 7026) granting a pension to Jeremiah P. Swartzell;
A bill (H. R. 7292) to increase the pension of Jacob Wiener;
A bill (H. R. 7373) for the relief Sarah A. Burchfield;
A bill (H. R. 7696) granting a pension to Thomas D. Fitch;
A bill (H. R. 7769) granting pension to Joseph R. Dodds; and
A bill (H. R. 7869) granting a pension to Emeline L. Fitch.

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] to suspend the rules.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask that the question be taken by tellers.

Mr. WASHBURN. I think we had better have the yeas and nays.
Mr. COBB. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether I have not some time remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB], having five minutes, yielded two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and two to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]; but the gentleman from Illinois occupied the whole time.

Mr. COBB. I did not yield the whole time to him.

Mr. PAYSON. I did not intend to take it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did take it, notwithstanding.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were ordered, more than one-fifth of a quorum voting therefor.

Mr. COBB. I think we may as well have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 57 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 92, not voting 66; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above stated, and was received with applause on the Republican side.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to yield to me for a moment while I make a request for unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post-Office appropriation bill and to refer it with the Senate amendments to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and the bill with the Senate amendments was so referred.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HANCOCK, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8279) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on that bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 127) to authorize the printing of the reports of the Bureau of Ethnology;

Joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the printing of the reports of the Geological Survey; and Joint resolution (S. R. 129) to authorize the printing of the reports of the Geological Survey.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 320) authorizing the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1883 and 1884.

Also a bill (H. R. 48) to provide for the erection of a building to contain the records, library, and museum of the Medical Department of the United States Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to a bill (S. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and consider the same for four hours, which time shall be occupied in debate on the clauses relating to the suspension of silver coinage and the World's Industrial and Cotton Exposition, three hours to be occupied on the first-named clause and one hour on the second, said time to be equally divided; and said bill shall be subject only to amendments to strike out or amend said clauses, after which the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. BLAND. I demand a second.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this resolution be adopted can a point of order be made on the new legislation contained in this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary question. If this resolution be adopted will more than a majority vote be required to pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. It will require a two-thirds vote to adopt this resolution; if it is adopted a majority vote, after the consideration of the bill in the manner provided, can pass it.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I rose for the purpose of demanding a second upon this proposition, and supposed that I was entitled to recognition in accordance with the usage of the House, which has been so long in existence as to have, I believe, almost the force of law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] applied to the Chair for recognition for this purpose. The Chair informed him that he had already been applied to in connection with this question, and had agreed to recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. BLAND. The Committee on Appropriations had no jurisdiction to bring this subject of silver coinage before the House; it is a matter belonging to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. KEIFER. A number of members of the Committee on Appropriations are opposed to some features of this bill.

Mr. RYAN. I have made this point, with the greatest respect to the Chair, and the statement the Chair has just made is correct in every particular; but it has been the practice of the House, so far as I am aware, on questions of this character to allow a division of the time between members of the committee. To this bill in its present form I am opposed, as are many other members of the committee on this side of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I can obviate this difficulty, if I may be allowed to suggest that in the present condition of things the gentleman from Missouri be recognized to control the time in opposition to the coinage clause. For one, I am willing that there shall be, besides the four hours' debate, an additional half hour, to be under the control of members of the Committee on Appropriations who are opposed to this proposition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is fair.

Mr. KEIFER. That changes the practice of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. The gentleman suggests that unanimous consent be given that this debate shall continue for one hour instead of thirty minutes—

Mr. RANDALL. No. The provision of the resolution states that there shall be three hours' debate as to the coinage clause, to be equally divided—

The SPEAKER. But the present difficulty is about the debate on the proposition now pending.

Mr. RANDALL. I make no suggestion about that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. My suggestion was designed to meet the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. BLAND. As this subject of silver coinage belongs to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, it is entirely proper that a representative of that committee should control the time in opposition to the proposition.

Mr. KEIFER and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. BLAND. Is debate now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not; but, as the Chair understands, an attempt is being made to effect some arrangement.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] insists upon claiming the recognition accorded him by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that. But gentlemen have been making an effort (which the Chair was, of course, disposed to indulge and hoped might be successful) to make some arrangement.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the regular order. We all understand this matter.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] controls the time in opposition to this proposition, members of the Committee on Appropriations who are opposed to this bill will be, so far as I know, left without one minute of the fifteen.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] simply took the floor as an individual member of the House and moved this resolution. It is not a resolution reported from the Committee on Appropriations. Before the resolution was presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania the Chair, upon application of the gentleman who is at the head of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, informed him that he would recognize him to control the time in opposition to the motion.

Mr. KEIFER. This resolution is authorized by the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think the House clearly understood my proposition—

Mr. REAGAN. I object to any statement now.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a point of order. I submit that this resolution is just as bad as the section of the bill, inasmuch as its effect is to change existing legislation. We have now a law providing that so many silver dollars shall be coined each month. If this resolution be passed it makes a change in that respect.

The SPEAKER. The purpose of the resolution is to suspend the rules.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Are all points of order reserved on this bill?

The SPEAKER. They were when the bill was reported. This is a proposition to suspend the rules and consider the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. If this resolution be adopted does it amount to a waiver of the point of order as to the suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar on the part of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest, by unanimous consent, fifteen minutes be allowed to the gentleman from Kansas, as this seems to be a three-cornered question.

Mr. COSGROVE. Can this resolution be divided so as to require the suspension on each proposition?

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rule is not divisible.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. BLAND were appointed as tellers.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 59.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. BELFORD. When we come to a division of the time allowed I wish to know who has the right in this representative council of the nation to parcel out that time—whether it is to be done by the Speaker or some other gentleman who has not a silver mine in his State at all?

The SPEAKER. The practice has always been to give control of the time in opposition to the gentleman demanding a second and the time in support to the introducer of the proposition.

Mr. BELFORD (at 2 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) moved that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes not counted.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] desired some time at this point.

Mr. CANNON. He is not here, and I should be glad to have a minute or two.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask consent at this time to present a substitute for the fortification bill reported this morning, in order that it may be before the House printed when that bill is brought up.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LIABILITY OF OWNERS OF VESSELS.

Mr. DUNN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8925) to amend and re-enact section 2249 of the Revised Statutes, relative to limitation of liability of the owners of vessels; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAND. If the opening is imposed on this side will we not have the close of debate?

The SPEAKER. That is not provided for in the rule. Under the rules applicable to ordinary proceedings the gentleman introducing a proposition has a right to open and close debate. There is no rule about debate under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to whom I wish to yield is not in his seat, and for one I am willing to go at once to the question.

The SPEAKER. If nobody proposes to address the House [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"], the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. CASSIDY, Mr. BELFORD, and Mr. MILLS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND. If this resolution be passed will it take a two-thirds vote or only a majority afterward to pass the silver clause or the clause in reference to the New Orleans Exposition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that if this resolution be passed, which requires a vote of two-thirds, then the bill, whatever may be included in it, can be passed by a majority of the House.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 118, nays 152, not voting 54; as follows:

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion to suspend the rules was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I ask to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WELLER. I object. This is a very important matter, and gentlemen should see that they are properly recorded.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WILLIAMS with Mr. OCHILTREE, for this day.

Mr. FYAN with Mr. BRAINERD, on this vote.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, with Mr. MORRILL, on this vote.

Mr. MCADOO with Mr. GEORGE, for to-day.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. TOWNSEND with Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire.

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. STRUBLE, on this vote.

Mr. CRISP with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, on all questions relating to the suspension of the coinage of silver in the sundry civil appropriation bill. Mr. STEWART would vote "ay," Mr. CRISP "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word if the House will allow it. [Cries of "Go ahead!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Recognizing the significance of the vote which has just been taken, and knowing that the issue was distinctly made as against the silver clause of this bill, being aware also that a majority has declared against that proposition which under a direct vote to strike out would have carried, I therefore now assume to myself the responsibility, believing that the members of the Appropriations Committee if I had an opportunity to confer with them would unanimously sustain me, of proposing to move to suspend the rules in manner as has been stated in the resolution, with everything connected with suspension of coinage of silver eliminated from the bill and from the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLS. What becomes of the New Orleans proposition?

Mr. RANDALL. That is left in the bill.

Mr. RYAN and Mr. KEIFER demanded a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the demand for a second, but will first endeavor to secure order on the floor. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is his purpose to leave in the bill that portion of it relating to the New Orleans Exposition, and to modify the resolution so as to limit the time to one hour's discussion on that proposition, as contained in the original resolution?

Mr. RANDALL. That is the proposition. I do not attach any significance to the last vote as applying to that part of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. One hour will be ample on that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be modified as suggested by the gentleman and will be read by the Clerk, on which the gentleman from Kansas demands a second.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House. This is simply a resolution, which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill of the House 8256, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and to consider the same for one hour, which time shall be occupied in debate on the clause relating to the World's Industrial and Cotton Exposition, said time to be equally divided; and said bill shall be subject only to amendment, to strike out, and amend said clause, after which the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that the silver clause in the bill will be omitted.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let the resolution so state.

Mr. RYAN. I desire the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a moment—

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. The resolution of the gentleman alludes to this bill which I hold in my hand, and it makes no exception as to the silver clause which the bill contains. If, then, that resolution is passed will it not pass the silver clause with the bill?

The SPEAKER. The resolution passes nothing.

Mr. HAMMOND. But if that resolution passes then the silver clause will be a part of the bill and become as much a law as any other part of the bill if it should pass.

The SPEAKER. If passed by the House it would.

Mr. HAMMOND. Therefore I submit to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he omit that clause from the bill.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty, the Chair thinks, can be obviated if the gentleman will add a clause to the resolution providing that the part of the bill relating to the coinage of silver shall be omitted.

Mr. KEIFER. That is stricken out.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is not stricken out. The gentleman speaks of striking it out, but it is a part of the bill referred to in his resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask, then, consent to strike it from the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Do it yourself and then offer it in that form.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to take any responsibility in the matter that may be necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is this bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to make a certain modification.

Mr. PAYSON. Is it in order for the gentleman to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. It is, of course, by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYSON. To strike out a provision not in the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is in the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. It is in for consideration. I am in favor of the motion the gentleman makes; but I want his motion made in such a shape that there can be no question in reference to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to strike from the bill the lines to which he has referred.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I embrace in the resolution the motion to strike out. I now modify the resolution so as to strike out those lines from the bill.

The SPEAKER. That will be done.

Mr. BLAND. That is satisfactory.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I make the point of order that it is not competent for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike from this bill at this time these lines.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not done so or attempted to do it except by unanimous consent. That was objected to. He now embraces in his resolution a proposition which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and consider the same for one hour, which time shall be occupied in debate on the clause relating to the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, said time to be equally divided; and said bill shall be subject only to amendments to strike out or amend the clause relating to the suspension of silver coinage and the clause—

Mr. RANDALL. That is not correct. I move to suspend the rules and consider this bill which I hold in my hand and now send to the desk; and these lines relating to the suspension of silver coinage are not in this bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is the way to do it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. On that I demand a second.

Mr. RANDALL. With the understanding that a separate vote will be taken on the clause relating to the New Orleans Exposition, and that thirty minutes for debate shall be allowed on each side.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I understand that the portion of the bill from line 829 to line 841, inclusive, is stricken out.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; that is the bill I offer.

Mr. RYAN. I demand a second. But I desire the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for a moment to ask whether he is not willing to so modify his motion as to allow one hour's debate on each side on the exposition question?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. RANDALL. If I thought that that would facilitate business I would consent.

Mr. RYAN. I think it will.

Mr. RANDALL. I consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. Do I understand correctly that the separate vote on the New Orleans Exposition is to be a majority vote?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir. I modify my motion so that there shall be one hour on each side.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman agree that other portions of the bill shall be subject to amendment without debate?

Mr. RANDALL. I can not. That would destroy the object I have in view in moving to suspend the rules, because it would practically open the bill to amendment. It is important that this bill should go to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state the question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves to suspend the rules and consider the bill which he has sent to the Clerk's desk, with the right of one hour's debate on each side on the clause relating to the World's Exposition at New Orleans and with the right to take a vote on striking out or amending that clause, to be decided by a majority.

Mr. KEIFER. Or to amend it.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; or to amend it.

Mr. RYAN. On that motion I demand a second.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he will not consent to allow some time for the consideration of the clause relating to the Yellowstone Park and the clause relating to marshals and bailiffs? It strikes me those two clauses ought to be amended.

Mr. RANDALL. I will be willing to give the gentleman from Kentucky five minutes of the fifteen allowed me under the rule in regard to a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. A second has been demanded and the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. RYAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate—fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the rule there will be fifteen minutes for debate on each side of the motion to suspend the rules, and then after the vote is taken two hours of debate will be allowed on the proposition as to the New Orleans Exposition. The first debate is the thirty minutes' debate.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I find that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and myself are not agreed as to what was understood when he promised to yield to me. The request I made, and which I thought was granted, was that I might discuss and move to amend the clause relating to the Yellowstone Park at line 1211, and also the clauses in regard to bailiffs and marshals at lines 1946 and 1997.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not agree to that.

Mr. RANDALL. I said I would give the gentleman from Kentucky five minutes to discuss this subject under the rule which allowed fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. But I desire to amend.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not agree to that.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman to agree, or I should certainly have contended for a division. If I am to occupy my five minutes in discussion, with no power of amendment as to those clauses, I shall occupy them in relation to the New Orleans matter. I think it is fair to have the clause relative to the New Orleans Exposition read, that the House may understand what it is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right.

Mr. WHITE. I do not desire, however, that it shall be read in my time.

The Clerk read the clause referred to, as follows:

WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL AND COTTON CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

For further aid to the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, $300,000, the same to be immediately available, and to be used first in liquidating the indebtedness now outstanding of said exposition, preference being given to such debts as constitute a lien upon the buildings and machinery on the exposition grounds; said sum to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The discussion under the rule allowing thirty minutes for debate will now begin.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I regret that no opportunity has been offered to amend the clauses providing for bailiffs and marshals, and also the clause relating to the Yellowstone Park. But any talk on those subjects would result in nothing, as no amendment can be offered. I therefore shall occupy the remainder of my time in opposition to this clause appropriating $300,000 to the liquidation of the indebtedness of the New Orleans Exposition and to the payment of its preferred claims. We are called upon here to set a precedent for the Government to become security for the mismanagers of that great exposition. That it has been mismanaged the New Orleans papers themselves bear witness, by telling us of the meetings that have been held, of the resolutions that have been proposed, and have only been laid aside lest they should stop this appropriation.

In those resolutions we see the misappropriation of the money and the lack of confidence in the management of the funds. One gentleman speaking there—a gentleman who had a right to speak—tells us that the two millions and something over have been "dumped into the river." Here is a proposition for the benefit of preferred creditors. Who are the preferred creditors? Where are they? Are they in Pennsylvania? Are they in New York? Are they in Massachusetts? Are they in Kentucky, or are they in New Orleans? If we appropriate this $300,000, who will guarantee to us that at the end of the next three months there will not be an indebtedness of a million to be liquidated? Where is the guarantee that these are just claims even against the management of the exposition? How do we know that there is not a Credit Mobilier within that management? That the management has been bad everybody knows. That the show down there has not paid expenses everybody knows. The gate fees, except during the week of Mardi Gras, were not sufficient to pay the current expenses.

Will any gentleman rise on this floor and give us an itemized statement showing for what this $300,000 is to go? Will the Louisiana delegation, will the friends of the exhibition, tell us that? The exhibition might as well have been put away off on the frontier—you might as well have put it at Pierre, Dak., you might as well have had it at Bismarck, Dak., you might as well have held it at Seattle, in Washington Territory, as at New Orleans, and with as good a chance of its success. Then, think of the management of it! And above all, think of the disrespect that was shown the old Liberty Bell, when the chief traitor of this country was sent out to escort it.

A MEMBER on the Democratic side. Bah!

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Oh, you may "bah." The majority on that side naturally "bah." I am speaking of what every one knows to be a fact. If the Liberty Bell were back in Pennsylvania, is there a gentleman from Louisiana here who believes it would be permitted to go to New Orleans again?

As a member on this floor, under oath, responsible to my constituents and my country, and exercising the right to say, so far as my vote goes, whether this money shall be taken from the Treasury or not, I say that I would like to know first where it is going and what it is for. I would like to know that these claims are honest. I would like to know that this is not setting a precedent under which you propose to sink millions in your show down there as you have already sunk millions in your Mississippi project.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to occupy any more of the time. If there be no objection we will go immediately to the debate as provided in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. That may be done unless some gentleman desires to occupy the fifteen minutes, or a portion of it, in opposition to the motion.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to advocate this appropriation and to do it now on the threshold. I remember very well the morning on which the House appropriated the million dollars which we gave as a pledge of the good faith of the Government when it invited the nations of the world to take part in that exhibition and send their people to see the greatness of the Southern section of our country. I remember it, because I had heard that, owing to the recall of the money advanced by the Government to the great Centennial Exhibition, I would oppose any Government aid in this case, and, though suffering intense physical torture, loitered on the floor until the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] would give me time to say that I bade the exposition Godspeed, that I wished well to every effort which might be made in its behalf, and that I did so regardless of whether the Government should ever receive back one cent of the million dollars I desired to see appropriated.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KELLEY. I have but five minutes, and I propose to make my own speech and not that which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] would like me to make.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Possibly your speech will be just what I want.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I propose to sustain and vote for this appropriation now, in like disregard of whether there has been mismanagement or whether there has been a failure to receive the patronage that was hoped for, or whether there is a prospect that even a dollar of the money will come back to the Treasury. Our faith is pledged to every nation of the world that this exhibition shall not fail in the midst of its career and for the want of Government support. We, sir, should remember where that exposition is, and what it has already done for the honor and the glory and the strength of our Republic. Northern men and Southern men of enterprise know each other better now than they probably ever have done since the Revolutionary war and the few years that succeeded it. They have become acquainted in fostering a great industrial enterprise to the glory of our country.

We are attempting to negotiate reciprocal treaties for the sake of promoting our trade—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I ask for a minute or two longer.

Mr. RANDALL. I give the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. KELLEY. We are attempting to negotiate reciprocal treaties for the sake of promoting our trade, but I believe, in all honesty and sincerity, as the result of my familiarity with the industries of the country and of the manner in which, in these newer times, they are being interlaced, that this exhibition will do more to promote the harmony of our country, to strengthen our Government, and to advance our industries, than all the treaties that have been sent to the Senate, or that are under consideration by the executive department of the Government.

And I should fail to represent not only the wishes of my constituents but the great industrial energies of my State if I did not appeal to Congress to supplement the aid which it has already given to this exposition by giving that which is now tendered in this bill.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. KELLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. If at that exposition at New Orleans you see many meritorious and desirable products of the labor of foreigners who should propose to exchange those articles for the products of the labor of our people, would you be willing to vote for a law which would remove the barriers and let us have that trade?

Mr. KELLEY. I will meet the gentleman at Philippi [laughter] or in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means just after the election of Speaker of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. RYAN obtained the floor and said: I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to protest against this method of passing under a suspension of the rules general appropriation bills carrying such amounts as this bill carries. If there is any matter upon which the care and vigilance of individual members of the House should be exercised under their responsibility to their constituents, it is upon the items of a bill like this. We are not sent here to waste our time in frivolous disputations upon unimportant matters or to vote for public buildings in advance of the need for them, and then when the last hours of the session come to excuse ourselves from scrutinizing the items of such bills as this in order that they may pass under a suspension of the rules on the ground of want of time, after time has been wantonly consumed and wasted. I claim, sir, that it is the duty of this House to sit here, if need be, day and night, and to go through with each and every one of these appropriation bills, discussing and understanding the items.

Why, sir, here is a bill carrying $22,000,000. It is a question of $22,000,000 of taxation. This money must all be taken by taxation from our constituents throughout the country. How are we to justify ourselves to them or to the country in the future if we repeat and confirm and make permanent as a practice in legislation that bills like this are to be passed upon in committee and practically in subcommittee, the body of the committee knowing nothing of the items, and then are to be brought in here and voted in solido. For one, sir, whatever others may do, I shall never vote in favor of passing an appropriation bill of this kind under suspension of the rules.

Mr. RYAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill as an entirety. It appropriates for the New Orleans Exposition $300,000. This is an absolute gift; the money will never be returned to the Government. In connection with the money already given this is a vast fund appropriated out of the Treasury of the country to carry on an enterprise of this character. I shall vote for this bill the more cheerfully because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] will propose an amendment which will secure the payment to those who have just claims against this exposition. I desire to protect the interests of those individuals and to protect the honor of my Government. Yet I vote for this appropriation under protest; for I believe that the money already given has not been judiciously and properly expended in the management of this affair.

I regret for one reason that this bill is not subject to consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because I find in it a provision for the sale of the arsenals at Allegheny, Pittsburgh, Augusta, Ga., Kennebec, Me., and Indianapolis—all proposed by the Committee on Appropriations and without any recommendation from the Committee on Military Affairs. There is some secret influence or some power behind the Secretary of War that impels him to make year after year these recommendations to Congress. What that influence is so far as the State of Pennsylvania is concerned I well know. It is an effort to grasp from the Government there a property worth $3,000,000 by a little coterie, a little ring, which wants to get that property without an equivalent compensation. The Secretary of War I acquit of all blame in this matter; for I know him to be a high-toned and honorable man; but I do know that he is being made the instrument of an infamous ring, which seeks to take this money from the Government.

That very ring sold a few years ago for $37,000 a property known as the marine-hospital property which was worth more than $100,000; and that ring went to a member of the ring itself and bought as a marine-hospital site for $30,000 a bare lot which was not worth $5,000. This legislation—unconsciously on the part of the Secretary of War, unconsciously on the part of the Committee on Appropriations—is calculated and intended to promote the object which this ring has in obtaining this vast property from the Government without giving for it adequate compensation.

Mr. RANDALL. My colleague [Mr. BAYNE] will allow me to say that the provision to which he refers is inserted in this bill after repeated recommendations from the Secretary of War.

Mr. BAYNE. I am aware of that.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The proposition has never been approved by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BAYNE. The proper committee to consider this question, as my colleague must admit—

Mr. RANDALL. I think there are proper safeguards thrown around this proposition. I do not believe for a moment that the Secretary of War would permit the sale of this property without obtaining for it the highest possible price.

Mr. BAYNE. I am satisfied the Secretary of War does not intend to do anything but what is right, but this is no time to sell this property at Pittsburgh, and it will be a great mistake if this proposition is permitted to become a law.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent to fill a blank on page 3 by inserting $225,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

Mr. LONG. It provides for the sale of the old court-house in Boston, and that fixes the minimum at which it will be sold.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BAYNE. Does this come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is occupying the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is this provision in reference to the New Orleans Exposition to be subject to amendment or not?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly it will be open to amendment. I will now yield for one minute of time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to say I voted against the former proposition, not upon the ground stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] on the silver question, but because I am opposed to passing an appropriation bill in this way under a suspension of the rules, and upon the ground so succinctly stated just now by the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

There are some things in this bill which I believe should not become the law, and there are many things not in the bill which, in my judgment, should be there. I believe it is unjust to the country. I believe it is unjust to the members of the House that the Committee on Appropriations should hold back a bill like this until the close of the session and then give the members of this House no opportunity to examine and discuss the different items in the bill.

Mr. RYAN. I now yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy five minutes, but I should feel I was doing injustice to this occasion if I did not repeat and reiterate what I said upon the passage of the last appropriation bill under suspension of the rules.

It seems to me, sir, that this is a most extraordinary spectacle. Here is a bill containing eighty-six pages and 2089 lines of printed matter and carrying $22,346,749.74, every word and line of which is to have no discussion and no vote except the $300,000 appropriation for the exposition at New Orleans.

Is that what the House of Representatives is for? Is that why we have been contending, a large number of us, for the right to originate appropriation bills—for the right to pass eighty-six pages of printed matter without examination, without reading, and without knowledge? Is this the way the business of this country ought to be carried on?

I am surprised that this preliminary time has been employed in advocating the exposition at New Orleans or discussing other matters of that kind. Every minute of it ought to be employed in commenting upon this.

Mr. LEWIS. Did not the gentleman vote for the suspension of the rules to put the silver clause in it?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I did, because I regarded it as a vote on the silver question, and for the same reason I may vote for this bill now. As I was about to explain, when the somewhat previous gentleman from Louisiana interrupted me, I was about to say, one of the worst things about such a presentation is that it forces gentlemen to vote on this subject and become, as it were, participes criminis in its favor, because otherwise they may take upon themselves the responsibility of an extra session of Congress.

I say that is the worst part of the whole business that I am obliged to do what the gentleman from Louisiana has been kind enough to remind me I have done. It is because this House is placed in a few days before its close in such a condition that it can not review the public expenditures.

And another point of irritation with me is it comes from the hands of gentlemen who have reduced the function of this House almost entirely to auditing accounts. They have reduced us to this kind of business, and then they will not let us do this. Why surely the farce of this plan and system of the transaction of public business can not any further go.

We passed a deficiency bill carrying between three and four million dollars, but that was a mere bagatelle, and here is one that carries $20,000,000, and, rich as the United States is, it is a large sum.

Now I have made my complaint about the matter and I hope some explanation will be vouchsafed the House, seeing how extraordinary the circumstances are, and that some gentleman will give an explanation that will justify the action of the House.

Mr. RYAN. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. RYAN. I will give one minute to my colleague [Mr. ANDERSON.]

Mr. ANDERSON. I will only occupy half a minute to say upon good authority, if this bill should reach the Senate by Saturday that body will have time to pass it. I do not want an extra session, but I do not want eight gentlemen, in whom I have great confidence—that eight gentlemen on the Appropriation Committee shall year after year, for last year they did the same thing—put the thumb-screws upon us, forcing us to suspend the rules and pass this bill. I will not vote to pass it, but on Saturday, after we have had a chance to consider the bill, I will be ready to vote on it.

Mr. RYAN. I concur in everything that has been said in regard to the impropriety of passing a bill of this kind under a suspension of the rules. On the 9th day of this month I called the attention of the House to the peril which seemed to me to be imminent. It seemed to me then to be a physical impossibility almost to pass the appropriation bills in a regular and orderly way. It has already been developed to be a physical impossibility. It is apparent to me now, as it must be to everybody, that a bill of this character, covering eighty-five pages, covering appropriations for the entire domain of civil service, can not be considered under the five-minute rule in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union without making it almost certain that we shall have to have the Forty-ninth Congress convened in extra session. It is for this reason that I yield my objections to passing a bill of this kind under a suspension of the rules. I do it to avoid a greater peril—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, in season and out of season I have warned the House as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that unless we had the right of way with our appropriation bills we were in danger of an extra session; and repeatedly the Committee on Appropriations has been denied the right of way in this House and voted down.

Now it is manifest by past experience that if this bill is to pass and go to the Senate in time to become a law before the 4th day of March we must proceed in the manner I have suggested.

In the Forty-seventh Congress, when we came to consider the sundry civil bill in detail, as gentlemen now propose or desire to have it done, it took eight days; and in the second session of that Congress it took six days. The question is, then, whether it shall pass in this way, or whether it shall not pass at all, with the consequences that will necessarily flow from it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time for general debate on the motion to suspend the rules has expired. There will be now two hours' debate upon the clause relating to the New Orleans Exposition.

Mr. KEIFER. That comes up after the suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair on examination of the original resolution finds that it was mistaken. The vote on the suspension of the rules will be first taken, and after that, if the bill shall be taken up for consideration, there will be two hours' debate.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to know whether this would be the proper time to make the point of order that this New Orleans appropriation is not legitimately a part of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

Mr. BISBEE. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment which I think the chairman of the committee will accept.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will repeat that the bill is not yet before the House. The first question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill taken up for consideration in accordance with the resolution that has been read?

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say that I should not object to the amendment I understand the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BISBEE] proposes.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know if the rules are now suspended and we proceed to consider the bill, whether one part of that bill will be carried by a two-thirds vote and another by a majority?

The SPEAKER. There will be but one vote upon its passage. It will be acted upon as an entirety.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, there were, on a division—ayes 118, noes 38.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays. Let us see how many gentlemen are willing to put themselves on record on a yeas-and-nays vote in favor of passing a bill of this character.

Mr. KEIFER. The bill is not being passed by this vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 29 members only voting therefor. So (no further count being demanded, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the clause of the bill in relation to the World's Cotton Centennial Exposition.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that lines 1417 to 1424, inclusive, be stricken out. I refer to those lines which give peremptory orders to the Secretary of War to sell certain arsenal property.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no such authority from the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. There is objection to that.

Mr. BISBEE. I ask unanimous consent to amend the bill from line 402, page 17, after the word "Georgia," to insert the words "Saint John's River, Florida." I understand the chairman of the committee has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. That was intended, I think, to be put into the bill. The money is appropriated for the lighting of that river, and of course it ought to be put in.

There being no objection, the amendment was incorporated in the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to inquire whether it is in order to have the bill read?

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman can demand its reading before the vote is taken.

Mr. ANDERSON. Can it be called for after the debate?

The SPEAKER. At any time before the vote is taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I will throw no obstruction in the way of that.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry as to whether amendments can now be offered before the general debate begins?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks they can after this paragraph is read. Two hours are allowed for debate on this particular paragraph. The Chair thinks after the debate has closed amendments may be offered or they may be offered now.

Mr. THOMAS. Amendments may be offered to other sections of the bill?

The SPEAKER. No; only to the one section.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent to amend the bill by striking out all after the word "Indiana," in line 1422, and before the word "and" where it occurs the second time, being the following words:

And Kennebec arsenal, Maine.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee have not authorized me to accept such an amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is objection.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am requested to ask unanimous consent to insert at the end of line 2031 what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

One chief page, Alvin H. Pickens, $900.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not the authority to accept that, although I think it is right. He is a good boy.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it is right, and it can be put on in the Senate.

Some time subsequently Mr. CONNOLLY withdrew the objection.

There being no further objection, the amendment was incorporated in the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire now to make a point of order on this clause relating to this New Orleans Exposition.

The SPEAKER. The House by a two-thirds vote has directed the consideration of that.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I make the point of order that it is not germane to this bill, and that even if the rules have been suspended it must be considered under some parliamentary procedure. I therefore make the point of order that this proposition for New Orleans is for an expenditure not previously authorized by law, that it is not germane to the bill or appropriate to it, and consequently not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already ruled that the House has suspended the rules by a vote of two-thirds and directed this particular matter, by being specially mentioned, to be considered and voted upon in the House, which of course precludes any question of order as to the right of the House to consider it.

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the clause in this bill which appropriates $300,000 in aid of the Cotton Exposition now being held in the city of New Orleans; and I desire to say to the members present that what I shall say to-day is in no spirit of enmity toward that exposition nor in any spirit of sectionalism. You will all remember that I did everything in my power to get the Congress of the United States at its last session to make the loan of $1,000,000, and the RECORD will bear me out that I went so far as to state that that loan should be made even if none of it should be repaid. But I wish to state to this House now, and I think I can prove it to the satisfaction of every member here, that the loan which we made at that time was obtained under false pretenses; that it was obtained upon statements that were claimed to be facts which are now admitted not to have been true. And I shall further prove to the House, I think, that the money already given has been expended in such a manner as not to warrant the appropriation of any more money to be expended by the men at present managing that exposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the first place, every member on this floor will recollect that we voted the loan of $1,000,000 upon a direct assurance of the gentlemen in the vicinity of New Orleans—and they will not take it as an offense if I give their names—Mr. ELLIS, Mr. MONEY, and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, all of whom assured the House that $700,000 had been raised by the people of New Orleans and vicinity, and had been actually paid in, and that they expected the city of New Orleans to give $100,000 in addition to that amount, and also that the State of Louisiana would donate another sum—$50,000, or perhaps $100,000.

Mr. Speaker, I know those gentlemen will not think for a moment that I claim or even insinuate that they misled the House purposely. There is not one of those three gentlemen whom I have named in whom I have not unbounded confidence as being men of honesty and honor. Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia, and he will excuse me for naming him, pressed this question very hard upon those gentlemen, as the RECORD I have here before me will show. He asked them what guarantee he had that any amount had been subscribed or had been paid in. Mr. MONEY answered (I read from the RECORD of that date):

There are already $700,000 cash subscribed to this enterprise; and this sum is being increased day by day. In addition there are all the receipts of the exposition, the gate-money, and so on, which must be greater than the expenses.

Mr. BLOUNT said:

If the gentleman will allow me, I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi if $700,000 as a matter of fact has been paid in.

The gentleman's question was thus answered:

Mr. MONEY. I am told by the general director that is true. Mr. ELLIS. Nearly $750,000, and increasing all the time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE further on stated the same thing.

Now if it is possible to make a statement more complete than that I am unable to conceive the language in which it can be done. Was that true? I have no doubt the managers of this enterprise told those gentlemen they had this amount raised. But what was the fact?

I have here the report of the general manager of this exposition made to the President of the United States. He shows that instead of $750,000 having been subscribed and paid in at that time there was in fact only $384,168 pledged at all; and that the $100,000 spoken of from New Orleans was afterward given and the $100,000 from the State of Louisiana was afterward donated, so that if the $750,000 had been paid in at that time as stated, the people of Louisiana would have raised from $900,000 to $950,000, instead of the $584,168 now claimed for them.

Ah, but stop! The city of New Orleans subscribed $100,000. Did she pay it? How? Why, I suppose in cash. On what condition, Mr. Speaker? On condition that the exposition should occupy a park belonging to the city of New Orleans, and that they should improve that park by a public building costing $50,000, and by underdraining and artificial lakes, &c. And this report of those gentlemen shows that while they got from New Orleans $100,000 they turned around and paid out for her benefit in improving this park over $130,000, so that New Orleans, instead of being out $100,000 for the purpose of inducing the people of this country to come within her city limits and make this great exhibition a success, has already got in improvements $30,000 more than she paid in. And Mr. Burke, the man who manages this thing, stated to our committee that the building the cost of which is a part of this $130,000 does not belong to the United States as security for the $1,000,000 loan, but belongs to the city of New Orleans.

Mr. POTTER. Has not the Government a lien on it?

Mr. HERR. We have no lien upon it. The arrangement was that it was to belong to the park and to be the property of the city of New Orleans. It is a part of the permanent improvement of the property belonging to the city.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, if these people—I will use the term I mean—had been honest with us and had raised the money they said they had, that exposition to-day would be on its feet and would not be here begging for a further appropriation to keep in it the breath of life. But what have they done with the money that we have given them? That is a conundrum. I defy any man to take their report and show what has been done with it except in a general indefinite way such as does not admit of any accuracy whatever or of any verification. They furnished to us a statement of their indebtedness. I will say to the members of this House that this exposition has had good success in getting into debt; the statements rendered leave no doubt as to that.

I hold in my hand a list of the stated amounts which they claim that they owe. It covers one hundred and fifty items, running from $8 up to $30,000 each.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HERR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. How much of that is due in Pittsburgh, Pa.?

Mr. HERR. I will come to that immediately. They furnish another statement, Mr. Speaker, in which they attempt to show where this indebtedness is due. I wish to call the attention of the House to that statement, from which it appears that they owe in Saint Louis, Mo., $7,400; in Grand Rapids, Mich., $1,800; in New York, $10,300; in Boston, $1,200; in Baltimore, $2,500; in Newark, N. J., $5,000; in Pittsburgh, Pa., $76,500; in Ohio, mainly in Cincinnati, $45,700; in Chicago, $4,250. Then there are premiums awarded which are due mostly to parties living outside the State of Louisiana, $25,000, none of which have been paid. There is also due to the Electric Light Company $25,000. And then there is the broad statement that they owe in New Orleans and vicinity $164,772.

Now, it is utterly impossible for me to tell just how much of that is due to people in and about New Orleans. I have learned, however, that one item of a little over $7,000 is due to people living in Mobile, Ala. No account has been rendered that will enable us to tell how much money they have put into any particular building, but it must be evident to anybody who examines these accounts, as I have tried to do, that the bulk of this indebtedness is for the material purchased in the States outside of Louisiana, while the management owes but little for the work and material furnished by the people in and about New Orleans. They also bought a railroad which cost over $61,000. It is a road four or five miles long, and from all I can learn of little value after the exposition closes. This railroad, we are told, will be a part of the assets belonging to the United States as security for the $1,000,000 loan.

I find another trouble. When I come to take the items of the account rendered as to debts due outside of the State, I find that they do not correspond at all with the same items given in the general list. There is not on the two papers, so far as I can find, a single account that agrees with itself on both lists. As stated on one paper each item varies from $500 to $2,000 from the statement on the other paper. That leads me to fear that there is not any great accuracy even in these apparently official statements. Now, Mr. Speaker, what I complain of is this: We loaned to these people $1,000,000; it was done in good faith. We loaned it upon their statements to this House, through their general agent, that they had already raised $750,000, and would raise more. They come now and ask us for more money, saying that they are in debt, but they furnish no statement from which any man can get an intelligent idea of what has been done with the money they have already had, and they admit from the start that all that has been raised, including the donations from the city and State, is only $584,168. One thing, however, is clear and certain—they have managed to leave the men who furnished them with their roofing, with their shafting, with their iron and steel, with their chairs and their settees, and all their furniture; they have managed to leave all those men unpaid who furnished the material that has gone into the exposition buildings. They come to this House now and ask for $300,000 more; they ask for $500,000, but our committee has restricted them to $300,000, and they propose what? Why, that that money shall be distributed first on the debts that are a lien under the laws of the State of Louisiana. What does that mean? I will be frank. I fear it means that every man on the ground—living right there in New Orleans—will get his proportion of the $300,000, while the creditors in Pittsburgh, in Ohio, and all over the country where there is $204,000 at least, I think about $235,000 due, will not get a dollar.

Again, they leave the men who have taken their stock there, their cattle and their horses, their exhibits in general, from all parts of the United States on the promise that they should receive certain premiums if the quality of their goods entitled them to such premiums. The managers of this exposition have permitted these men to take their stock there and have made them awards of premiums, but have paid none of them. That is to say, the very men who have made the show a success, so far as the exhibits are concerned, have been to all the expense of getting their stock and wares there under a solemn promise of receiving certain premiums, have so far received simply an award but no money.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information only?

Mr. HERR. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. This proposed preference is to be given to such debts as constitute a lien upon the buildings and machinery on the exposition grounds. Why does the gentleman say that that would exclude non-resident creditors? It would not under the Laws of Georgia.

Mr. ELLIS. Nor would it under the laws of Louisiana; but I did not want to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. HERR. I know nothing about the laws of Louisiana in that regard, although I have tried to learn them. But I find that laborers and men who furnish material who are right on the spot have an advantage in regard to payment. There is no doubt about that, is there?

Mr. ELLIS. The laborer and the material-man are paid first.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish to inquire whether in paying off the liens the lien on that building which is to belong to the city is to be paid?

Mr. HERR. I do not understand that there is any lien on that building. They have paid on that as they went along. There is no report of indebtedness on the city building. But, mark you, this matter as the bill now stands is left open to judicial decision. I am not acquainted with the lien laws of Louisiana; but I do know that up to this time those who are concerned in the management of this enterprise have succeeded in not paying these men from abroad; and my friend from Georgia well knows that a man from a distance is at a great disadvantage in enforcing even a lien. The amendment which I shall propose to this bill is intended to provide against all such difficulties; and I do not believe the gentleman from Louisiana will object to it.

Mark, Mr. Speaker, what Congress has already done for this exposition. We loaned it $1,000,000, every cent of which has gone into Louisiana, into these buildings and other expenses, they tell us. Secondly, we gave $300,000 on account of the exhibits that the United States Government has sent down there. Now if we give them $300,000 more that will make $1,600,000 that we have put into the lap of the people of New Orleans and vicinity. But that is not over one-third of what really goes there. Every man who pays his 50 cents at the gate leaves at least $3 or $4 at the hotels and other places in the city. If a man gets off with $3 or $4 per day he is lucky, in my judgment.

Now this whole amount aggregates several millions; and I say it is no more than fair that the American Congress, if it is going to contribute any more money, should see that it goes to pay the debts of the people who live abroad, the people away from this center, and who have to work at arms' length in order to get their pay, and leave the management to take care of their own people in New Orleans and vicinity.

I am aware that in saying this I am compelled to speak somewhat against the present management of that exposition. I have letters by the half hundred here telling me that the management is such as to absolutely preclude men from abroad from getting any money either for premiums or material; and among them all there is not a single writer who does not advise against paying any more money to the present management. Several of the gentlemen who came here asking for this appropriation said in so many words, "If you give this money, for God's sake give it so that it will do some good to the men who are now in trouble." The amendment which I propose to offer is as follows:

For the purpose of aiding the World's Industrial and Centennial Cotton Exposition, now being held in the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, not to exceed the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, and to be used, first, in the payment of the indebtedness now outstanding of said exposition which is due to persons, firms, or corporations living and doing business outside of the State of Louisiana, including debts due to foreigners or foreign nations, and such as are due to States and Territories from said exposition.

Their statement shows that they owe Territories and States a little over $17,000. I propose that this shall be paid.

Secondly, in payment of all premiums heretofore awarded or which shall be hereafter awarded by said exposition in accordance with lists of awards heretofore published.

This will take probably about $67,000. It will secure the payment to people who have taken their stock and material at great expense and gone down there to make the exhibition a success.

Said money—

I hope you will all give attention to this—

Said money to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall make proper rules and regulations for the form and verification of vouchers in proof of such indebtedness; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to detail to the assistance of the Secretary of the Treasury a paymaster of the regular Army, who shall carry out the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury and disburse said funds in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. What are the total liabilities?

Mr. HERR. The total liabilities are $436,060, but subject to a decrease, leaving actually about $346,000.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that the mechanics' lien law of Louisiana gives preference to the workingman, who, if the contractor fails to pay him, may under the mechanics' lien law of that State file lien after lien, piling them up one after another; and thus this entire sum may be absorbed unless some such amendment as that proposed by the gentleman from Michigan shall be adopted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, Mr. ELLIS, and others, sought to interrupt Mr. HERR.

Mr. HERR. I can not yield. I want to close my remarks, because there are other gentlemen who wish to talk. I desire to say that from the best information I can get the indebtedness, after deducting cash on hand, is about $346,000.

The question may be asked why it is that these premiums have not been paid by the gate-money? For this simple reason: While the gate-money has been in excess of expenditures to the amount of quite a number of thousands of dollars—

Mr. LONG. The current expenditures.

Mr. HERR. I mean in excess of the current expenses, for several days, it turns out that in February last there was a loan effected, I do not recollect for how much.

Mr. LONG. Sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. HERR. Sixty thousand dollars, perhaps—and a lien was given on the gate-money to pay the parties who furnished the money in the city of New Orleans. So the exposition to-day is just in this fix: It is out of funds with the exception of gate-money receipts. The gate-money receipts are pledged to the parties there in New Orleans to pay for borrowed money. They owe outside of Louisiana, in my judgment, two hundred and thirty-five or two hundred and forty thousand dollars. Their premiums will amount to about $67,000.

Mr. ELLIS. Why does not the gentleman state that fairly. The impression he would leave on the House is that all the gate-money is pledged.

Mr. HERR. What is it?

Mr. ELLIS. State it fairly. The gentleman would leave the impression on the House that all the gate-money is pledged for debt there. That is the impression you leave, and you know it is not true.

Mr. HERR. What is not true? Did they not borrow the $60,000, and did they not pledge the gate-money as security for its payment?

Mr. ELLIS. There was $60,000 borrowed, and $18,000 has been paid back day by day, and since we received the statement $9,000 more; and that is the end of the business.

Mr. HERR. That is precisely what I tried to state.

Mr. ELLIS. No; you said the gate receipts were pledged to the indebtedness in New Orleans.

Mr. HERR. I said, or intended to say, that until the $60,000 were paid that indebtedness was a lien on those gate receipts.

Mr. ELLIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HERR. Except for the payment of current expenses. That is the statement as it was made to me.

Mr. ELLIS. The record does not bear you out.

Mr. HERR. How much is pledged? Let us get at the facts. Let us understand this matter before we go on.

Mr. ELLIS. Sixty thousand dollars originally, and when we received the statement $18,000 had been repaid.

Mr. HERR. Well!

Mr. ELLIS. Since that it has been repaid under agreement at $1,000 a day, which makes twenty-five or twenty-six thousand dollars that have been paid.

Mr. HERR. Very well; they are not paying these debts outside of New Orleans or any premiums, are they, until the $60,000 shall all be repaid?

Mr. ELLIS. They are paying a special loan.

Mr. HERR. That is just what I said. The gentleman has taken three or four minutes of my time and he comes out just where I came out. We can not differ about the facts.

Mr. ELLIS. I will give you more out of my time.

Mr. HERR. I have stated it as it is. There is no use of trying to look at this in any other way than straight in the face.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman's statement was unlimited.

Mr. HERR. I stated that $60,000 was borrowed in New Orleans.

Mr. ELLIS. A temporary loan.

Mr. HERR. A temporary loan, if you please; but to secure its payment the managers pledged the gate-money, as I understood it—that is, all over and above the current expenses, which had to be taken out first. But to conclude: The exposition owes about $230,000 outside of the city of New Orleans for material furnished to put into these buildings. The premiums, if I mistake not, amount to $67,000. By my amendment I propose, if we give this money, we shall protect the parties who have been looking somewhat to the protection of the National Government by paying these premiums and leaving the gate-money, leaving the buildings, leaving everything to secure the people who live right around there and can protect themselves. My desire is to relieve the managers from embarrassment by paying all their outside debts and securing the payment of all their premiums.

I say this is a fair proposition and one which should be accepted in good faith by the members representing this exposition.

Mr. ELLIS. If they accept it, will the gentleman vote for the appropriation?

Mr. HERR. Yes, if you will make it so the money will go to these people. I will do it regretfully, but I will do it. Will you put it in the bill in that way?

Mr. ELLIS. I will see. [Laughter.]

Mr. HERR. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield five minutes, which is all I can spare, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, in these five minutes I desire as well as I can to recall the House to what I said a year ago on this bill and to awaken it, if possible, to the dangers which lie before us in entering upon this policy. We were told here a year ago this was a loan for which sufficient precedent was found in the loan for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence as the city of Philadelphia in 1876. We were told there was no doubt this money would be paid back; we were assured with all the eloquence, earnestness, and persuasion of the honorable member from New Orleans [Mr. ELLIS] that we were in no danger of losing anything in loaning this money. It was not then the most important objection with me that we were to lose it, nor is it now that we are to lose what is given in this bill, but my objection lies in the fact that we are in this way entering upon a course which will overthrow and annihilate the principles of our Constitution.

It is changing this Government into one of patronage, converting the States and people of the United States into beneficiaries and supplicants. If it shall go on, it is introducing into the affairs of this Government, under control of political parties which from time to time may have possession of this Government and this Congress—it is introducing an element of influence, of patronage, and of destruction, I had almost said, of the fundamental principles of the Government itself.

This Government, sir, is one of prescribed and limited powers. To maintain and carry out these powers it may lay taxes and raise revenue, but beyond this it has no power to lay taxes, and can not lay them except in disregard and disobedience of our Constitution. It has no power to patronize States or the people of the States. Let it assume and exercise this power as governments of unlimited powers may and do exercise it, and the end of constitutional liberty is not distant.

Why, sir, if there is a doubtful State to be carried four years hence in some other part of this Union what are we to do but to get up another exposition and vote millions there to make the State solid? Can there be any doubt but that this element of patronage, this power to lay taxes and dispose of the public funds in this manner, so as to provide States with the ability to carry on such exhibitions as this, is an element that must undermine the very foundation of the Government itself if persisted in.

Sir, I said a year ago, and I repeat now, that there can be no justification for giving this amount of money that can not be urged with equal cogency and reason for almost every other State in this Union that we may want to carry four years from now for political reasons. Four years from now California's vote may be doubtful, and it will be said that if you inaugurate a great exposition there and let the light of our great commerce shine over the Pacific Sea and extend to the nations of the West we shall be promoting the growth of this country and exercising the constitutional power of the Government in promoting commerce. That argument can be made with equal reason in that instance as in the case now before us, and that argument will be, if the eloquent and able member from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] shall then be here, in the exact line of the eloquent persuasiveness with which he addresses this House to-day.

Now, sir, I protest if we are to give this money at all, that with equal reason and justice we may be called upon to do the same thing in every seaport in this land. Ay! we may be called upon to grant the same at Buffalo, upon the lakes, upon the Pacific shore, and throughout all the States of the country, introducing this as a new element in the government of our country. I regret to see it entered upon under Democratic auspices and by a Democratic Congress. I regret to see this Congress introduce the doctrine that we may lay taxes upon the people of this country in order to provide money to bestow favors where it pleases the administration and the power that has charge of the Treasury of the nation to bestow them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERR. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ELLWOOD].

Mr. ELLWOOD. Mr. Speaker, my object in taking the floor to make a few remarks is simply to prepare the way for an amendment which I shall propose to offer at the proper time. As the gentleman who has just occupied the floor has said, from a statement made here by that committee at New Orleans, that they had raised $750,000, this House was induced to appropriate in aid of that exposition the sum of $1,000,000.

I do not hesitate to say, sir, for one moment that had it not been for the fact, as we were assured, that $750,000 had been raised by donation this House never would have appropriated a million of dollars for any such purpose. Now on a statement of that sort that a donation of that amount had been made this Congress, as I have said, appropriated $1,000,000. That money was appropriated with certain conditions. It was appropriated with the understanding in the first place that $750,000 had been raised, and with the million of dollars appropriated by this House should be used to erect buildings not to exceed in cost that amount, and for this reason that when these buildings were completed they would be free from indebtedness. More than that, right in the act itself of the first session of this Congress they make another reservation, that all the receipts from that exposition above the legitimate expenses are to be given to liquidate the indebtedness of the Government loan.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I make this point, that right in the face and eyes of that provision of law this board of managers has created an indebtedness that they had no right to create, and have enlarged and extended that fraud by pledging the very receipts for its payment that had been already pledged to this Government. For fear that this fraud would be perpetrated upon the Government, the House required the directors of the exposition to give a bond that this money should be judiciously invested according to the act passed at that time; and I propose to offer a resolution here with reference to that bond.

I am no lawyer, but I state this fact without fear of contradiction, that the bond as given under the statute as it now stands, that no indebtedness should be made over and above the donation of $1,000,000, and then this indebtedness created by them against the very surplus that was to pay that loan, that these bondsmen have not done their duty and should be held liable for the $300,000 of the bond. My idea is, then, that we collect the $300,000 and pay these premiums if necessary. I do not care, sir, to take up the time of the House, but I shall move an amendment at the proper time and at the right point, that a committee of three members, on which I will not accept a position, shall be appointed to investigate this whole transaction and report to this House previous to the 10th day of December. When that report is made, if we ought to pay any more for that exposition—if we are to be defrauded out of any more money—let us appropriate it when that report gives us the facts.

Mr. HERR. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. MILLARD. I desire to occupy the attention of the House but for a single moment. If I thought this additional appropriation would make the exposition a success I would not oppose the measure. But I do not believe at this stage and at this season of the year that there is sufficient money in the national Treasury to make the exposition a success.

I hold in my hand a letter written by an exhibitor, one of the leading citizens of my State, who has been present at that exposition from the commencement, representing one of the largest industries of this country, and he gives briefly the reasons why the exposition can not be made a success by any appropriation or by any action on the part of Congress. I ask, in order that the House may be possessed of the facts, that this letter be read. I make it a part of my remarks.

The Clerk commenced to read the letter sent up by Mr. MILLARD, which is as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 3, 1885.

Hon. STEPHEN C. MILLARD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I do not now propose to ask of you a favor which if granted will interest me more than any citizen of the United States generally.

I have been in attendance at this New Orleans Exposition since early in December last. I have been a close and careful observer of the manner in which it has been managed and mismanaged. It now seems that the present board of management have run their full length. All moneys placed in their hands so far have been disposed of. I do not know, but I assume that it has been properly and honestly disbursed. They are also in debt to the amount of nearly $400,000. Neither buildings nor grounds are completed, and they have insufficient means to light the building or furnish power to run the machinery already in place, to say nothing about a very large quantity of heavy machinery not yet placed and ready to be operated. The means of conveyance to and from the grounds by horse-cars and steamboats is insufficient to handle a sufficient number of visitors to even pay running expenses, besides being slow, tedious, and unsatisfactory in the extreme.

While there are many interested largely in the exposition, still hoping that it may be carried through to success, I am satisfied that the great majority of the heaviest exhibitors would be more than glad if they could honorably withdraw within the next twenty days under the most favorable circumstances which can now be looked for. Scarcely one can be found who would not use all the means at command to have it closed at once rather than that Congress should attempt to bolster it up by putting more money in the hands of the present management.

In my humble opinion (and I believe that will be found to differ but slightly; if at all, with the opinion of every honest and intelligent man here having knowledge of the situation), but one course can be pursued at this late day in order to set the great circus on its feet again and achieve even a partial success.

The present management must be compelled to give an accurate and exact accounting, as far as in their power, and surrender the entire control over to the Government of the United States.

At least $500,000 must be forthcoming for immediate use; the best man in the United States be placed in charge, with full power to push everything to completion at once, to arrange with Southern railroads for rates to visitors not to exceed 1 cent per mile, and thus restore confidence to exhibitors, citizens of New Orleans, and to the people of the United States.

Within the next twenty days rapid transit must be provided between the principal part of the city and the exposition, sufficient to handle at least 50,000 visitors daily in addition to the present mule-cars and river boats, which are insufficient to handle more visitors than are required to pay running expenses, saying nothing about the tediousness and great discomfort of this means of transit.

This is what should have been done nearly two months ago, and in fact there is some reason for doubting the propriety of trying to recover at all at this late day. Still if prompt and decisive action is taken at once, I have every reason to believe that there are so many people throughout the United States who ought and would under the new state of things come here and pay their money at the gates of the exposition, as to enable the Government to pay all outstanding claims, in addition to running expenses, and also get back the greater portion of the moneys advanced. As things are, if no help is given, not a dollar of the debt will ever be paid, and the Government can not hope for the return of a single cent of the original loan. Unless a change of some kind is made for the better, I doubt whether running expenses can be met with the daily receipts from this time on, certainly not after the 1st of March.

If the management can not be taken entirely out of the hands of the present board at once, and the requisite funds be forthcoming and an entire revolution worked within the next twenty days, it would be far better that the whole thing go into the hands of a receiver at once, and exhibitors allowed to withdraw their exhibits and go home.

I trust that you will deem this a matter of no little importance, and do what you can to prevent the Government from being imposed upon in this connection.

If I can get away from here before Congress adjourns will see you at Washington.

Sincerely, yours.

Before the reading of the letter was concluded,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERR. I yield one minute more for the Clerk to continue the reading.

The Clerk continued the reading of the letter. Before he had concluded,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The extension of time has expired.

Mr. HUTCHINS. What is the date of that letter?

The CLERK. February 3, 1885.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask that the whole of the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. HERR. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], and I desire to reserve the rest of my time until I hear what may be said on the other side.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has also promised to give me three minutes, and has agreed that I may use that time now. I may not desire to use the eight minutes, but I ask that the gavel shall not fall if I trespass up to that limit.

When the proposition was originally made, with very much doubt as to its propriety, but relying on the promises then made and the representations before me, I voted for the loan of the $1,000,000. I shall not vote for this $300,000. All the reasons for my not doing so I can not give. Some of them have already been given, though not just in the form in which I would present them.

The honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] announced that he was in favor of the proposition, to save the national honor. I began to watch the development to find wherein the national honor was involved. But there has been no word uttered that has made any such impression upon my mind. The honor of this nation will be intact whether that $76,000 due to Pittsburgh shall be paid or whether it shall take what it can find in the assets of the company with all the other debts.

This is not a proposition to protect national honor. The debate here shows just the contrary. That is the first appearance of it, but only the first appearance. The proposition urged here by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] is that it is settled that the United States will undertake to pay the debts which this corporation may be unable to pay. The contest is between the local creditors and the foreign creditors. I know no authority for paying either. Gentlemen who sold their wares from Ohio and Pennsylvania and New York to that corporation sold them as they sell goods to other corporations and persons and took all the risk of insolvency in the debtor and of bad collection laws in the locality.

Mr. BAYNE. Will my friend from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. HAMMOND. I can not yield.

Mr. BAYNE. I can disabuse the gentleman's mind of that impression.

Mr. HAMMOND. I can not yield. The contest here, they say, is as to who shall have this money after the $300,000 shall be appropriated. If I were going to make choice in that particular I should give it to the laborers who put together the machinery and who built the houses and who beautified the grounds, even though they may live in and around New Orleans. But I will tell the gentleman they do not all live there. That city did not furnish and could not furnish the force for this great work. They have come from all parts of the country to reap the daily reward of their toil, and those day-laborers should be preferred in this instance just as they are preferred in the lien laws of my State and your States, where, in the last resort, when but few debts can be paid, there is a just discrimination between those who can not afford to lose and those who can afford to lose.

I desire to say before I close one other thing. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] perhaps was correct in his declaration as to the sentiment of this House on the silver question. And yet he had no authority to assign the reasons of any gentleman voting but his own. These two propositions of silver coinage and this $300,000 were coupled together when that vote was cast. Many various reasons influenced different persons in that vote.

I desire to say one other word. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] painted in colors not at all too strong the bad practice of passing appropriation bills under a suspension of the rules. But he did paint entirely too strongly the reasons which he thought impelled the bad practice to-day. I may be pardoned for saying (for I have had a large part of the suffering while I was a witness in that chair for the past two weeks) a word as to the reason why there is now no time to legislate in the regular way.

Mr. HERR. I understand the gentleman is now talking in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am, and I am talking against your side of the House on the left of the Chair that wasted so much time on the river and harbor bill. I do not believe that I could utter a sentiment which will more cordially receive the indorsement of every honest man than the one I have just uttered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is a good time to quit, with that last sentence. Mr. HERR. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five minutes of the hour remaining. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] is recognized.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Speaker, the proposition now before Congress is not an original proposition for the making of an appropriation in aid of the New Orleans Exposition, nor did it originate with this Congress. By an act of the Forty-seventh Congress the Government was fully committed to this matter, and I desire now to call attention to certain passages of that act. After the "whereases" I find this:

Be it enacted that a World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition be held in the year 1884 under the joint auspices of the United States Government, the National Cotton Planters' Association of America, and the city where it may be located.

Then it provides that the management of this exposition shall be appointed by the President of the United States upon the recommendation of these two boards; so that the management of the exposition are officers provided for by act of Congress. What more did Congress do? In the ninth section of the act it is provided that the President be "requested to send, in the name of the United States, invitations to other governments to be represented and take part in said World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, to be held in some city of the United States to be hereafter selected."

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will the gentleman permit a word?

Mr. FOLLETT. Certainly.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to say to the gentleman that the debate at the time when that bill passed shows that it passed under assurances from the promoters that the exposition should be without expense to the Government; and I can produce the debate.

Mr. FOLLETT. Whatever the assurances were, that is the law, and in that act the Government of the United States is committed to this exposition and its honor is committed by the invitation to the other nations of the world, as well as to our own States and Territories, to participate in that exposition. We sent those invitations abroad, and to-day there are twenty-nine foreign governments which have exhibits in that exposition; and the Republic of Mexico, our nearest neighbor, has expended over $500,000 in connection with the exposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FOLLETT. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. If we discharge our obligations to those foreign nations, why have we not done all that is required of us?

Mr. LONG. There are no obligations.

Mr. HISCOCK (to Mr. FOLLETT). What are our obligations?

Mr. LONG. We owe them nothing.

Mr. FOLLETT. No money obligation, but the obligation of good faith on our part to make this exhibition what we represented to them it should be when they incurred this expenditure in coming to our shores and advising us of their products.

Mr. MILLIKEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FOLLETT. No; I can not stop; I have not time. What more have we done? There are forty-six States and Territories represented there. Every State and Territory of the Union, with the single exception of Utah, has an exhibit at that exposition, and those exhibits have been prepared and sent there, of course, at large expense. In yesterday's Ohio papers I find a little report made by the speaker of the Ohio house of representatives, who has recently visited the exposition. There was a charge in Ohio (as there is upon the floors of Congress) that there had been bad faith, maladministration. It was alleged that men who had been intrusted with the representation of their States and Territories had violated their trusts. Thereupon the Legislature of Ohio (just as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] is doing here to-day with reference to the management of the exposition) discredited the management of the Ohio commissioners and their good faith in the expenditure of the money which the State of Ohio had appropriated and which was still further to be appropriated, for $47,500 was asked as an additional amount. The speaker of the house of representatives went to the exposition for the purpose of satisfying himself, and this is what he says, as reported in the Ohio papers:

The report had been pretty generally circulated that the money expended by the Ohio commissioners to make the display had not been judiciously handled, and as the speaker had had the appointment of a portion of the commission, he wanted to be satisfied that he had not been imposed upon in the confidence he had reposed in the members of the commission which he had selected. The speaker is of the opinion that the five days which he spent at New Orleans were the most profitable of the time which he has given to the State. His statement before the conference committee in regard to the item of $47,500 in the appropriation bill for the New Orleans Exposition will, no doubt, result in a settlement of all differences between the two houses on this subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Ohio is not alone in this, nor has Ohio the largest or the most expensive display in that exposition. As I have said, forty-six States and Territories are there represented, and the $5,000 allowed by the management of the exposition to each State and Territory is but a mere fraction of the expenses which they have incurred. The management of this exposition have met with obstacles that no human foresight could have anticipated. For sixty days after the exposition was opened there were incessant rains, such as even New Orleans had never known before. Those rainy days have but just closed. The 9th day of February was the first day that the gate receipts equaled the expenditures, and this was not from any fault of the management; for I insist that the management has not only been honest—its showing will satisfy any business man who gives the matter attention that it has been not simply honest, but economical to the very last degree.

I have here a few figures in the way of comparison between the New Orleans Exposition and that at Philadelphia; and there is not one who has visited the two expositions who does not admit that the exposition at New Orleans is much larger in its proportions than was the exposition at Philadelphia. I will read a few of these figures. At Philadelphia there were twenty-five States and Territories that made exhibits; in New Orleans there are forty-six. In Philadelphia the area of space for State exhibits was 21,711 square feet; in New Orleans there are 327,198 square feet. In Philadelphia the cost of buildings was $5,242,295; in New Orleans $989,211—less than one-fifth of the cost of the buildings at Philadelphia. In Philadelphia the cost of fitting up the grounds, of which my friend from Michigan has spoken so eloquently, was $922,780; in New Orleans $130,803. So I could go through with this comparison from beginning to end, showing that it is largely in favor of the management of the New Orleans Exposition, while at the same time the Philadelphia exposition was under the control and management of an honored citizen of my own city, Cincinnati, who was supposed by reason of his prior experience to have a peculiar fitness for that work.

I take the liberty of incorporating in my remarks these comparative statistics in full:

Twenty-five States and Territories were represented at Philadelphia, and only a few of that number by exhibits, the representation being chiefly by buildings for headquarters. Forty-six States and Territories (all except Utah) are represented at New Orleans by very full collective exhibits of their natural resources. Space occupied by State exhibits at Philadelphia, 21,711 square feet; at New Orleans, 327,198 square feet—an area fifteen times greater at New Orleans than at Philadelphia; proving most conclusively the value of expositions to the States and Territories.

CONSTRUCTION.

Cost of buildings at Philadelphia, $5,242,295; at New Orleans, $989,211. The construction at Philadelphia was principally of iron, designed with a view to ornament and safety. The construction at New Orleans was designed for ornament and area, with extraordinary precautions and appliances for safety.

IMPROVEMENT OF GROUNDS.

The cost of preparing the grounds at Philadelphia, such as grading, drainage, bridges, fences, &c., amounted to $922,782; at New Orleans the cost was but one-seventh that sum, or only $130,803. This includes the expense of drainage, canals, and pipes, gravel and shell roads and walks, excavations for three artificial lakes, extensive asphalt walks, fountains, planting eight thousand ornamental and forest trees, &c.

Motive power at Philadelphia, 2,440 horse-power; at New Orleans, 5,937 horse-power. Nineteen hundred horse-power is required at New Orleans to light the buildings and grounds by electricity, a power that was not required at the centennial, which was held before lighting with electricity had come into practical use.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

There were none at Philadelphia. At New Orleans there are 4,000 electric incandescent lamps, 1,350 electric arc lamps, 5 electric towers, 73 dynamos. Motive power for electric light, 1,900 horse-power.

TELEPHONES.

At New Orleans the exposition grounds and buildings are connected with each other and the city by telephone, there being twenty-four stations at the exposition itself. This system of communication had not come into practical use in 1876.

MACHINERY EXHIBITS.

At the centennial the space actually occupied by machinery was 527,523 square feet; at New Orleans the total space occupied by machinery is a trifle larger, being 533,990 square feet.

Now I wish to call attention to the law which was passed last winter. Gentlemen say that law was passed upon the assurance that $750,000 should be paid in. Why, sir, the law itself shows upon what assurance this money was to be paid by the Government. It was to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury "upon being satisfied that $500,000 had been contributed and paid in." This had to be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Not a dollar could be paid out to the New Orleans Exposition until the Secretary of the Treasury was satisfied that New Orleans had done what in the law we said she ought to do to entitle her to this appropriation.

Mr. HERR. Was not that $500,000 to be—

Mr. FOLLETT. Let me read the language of the law itself. I am not construing it:

Provided, That the said sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States on the drafts of the president and secretary of the board of management of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition authorized by order of said board, one-third of the amount immediately after the passage of this act upon being satisfied that $500,000 has been contributed and paid in to the said board for the purposes of the exposition by the contributors to and shareholders of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, and the remainder in four monthly payments thereafter upon being satisfied that each of the prior payments has been faithfully applied as required by this act, and for this purpose he shall have free access to the accounts and all transactions of said board.

That is the law.

Mr. HERR. But that was to be paid exclusively of the donations—

Mr. FOLLETT. Whatever may have been the gentleman's reason or any gentleman's reason in voting at that time, "thus saith the law" for which they voted; and the law concludes the man who voted for its passage.

Mr. HERR. Now let me ask whether that was not understood to be $500,000 over and above the donations from New Orleans and the State of Louisiana?

Mr. FOLLETT. Not at all. If so, how could the Secretary of the Treasury have paid over the money? He could not make payment until satisfied that the law had been complied with.

Mr. HERR. If that is not so, how came gentlemen to talk about $750,000 all the while in the debate?

Mr. FOLLETT. It is a matter of utter unconcern to me what may have been the assurance given by the friends of the measure that more than this $500,000 would be contributed from other sources. All that Congress asked of them, all that the law required of them, was the contribution of $500,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

I append to my remarks the acts of February 10, 1883, and May 21, 1884, on this subject:

An act to encourage the holding of a world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition in the year 1884.

Whereas it is desirable to encourage for celebration the one hundredth anniversary of the production, manufacture, and commerce of cotton, by holding, in the year 1884, in some city of the Union, to be selected by the executive committee of the National Cotton Planters' Association of America, an institution for the public welfare, incorporated under the laws of Mississippi, a world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition, to be held under the joint auspices of the United States, the said National Cotton Planters' Association of America, and of the city in which it may be located, and in which cotton in all its conditions of culture and manufacture will be the chief exhibit, but which is designed also to include all arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine; and

Whereas such an exhibition should be national and international in its character, in which the people of this country and other parts of the world who are interested in the subject should participate, it should have the sanction of the Congress of the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition be held in the year 1884, under the joint auspices of the United States Government, the National Cotton Planters' Association of America, and the city where it may be located.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States may, upon the recommendation of the executive committee of the National Cotton Planters' Association of America, appoint six United States commissioners, and upon the recommendation of the majority of subscribers to the enterprise in the city where it may be located, may appoint seven United States commissioners, who, together, shall constitute a board of managers of said world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition.

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States may, on the recommendation of the governors of the various States and Territories of the Union, appoint one commissioner and one alternate commissioner for each State and Territory, whose functions shall be defined by the said board of management.

SEC. 4. That all of said commissioners shall be appointed within one year from the passage of this act.

SEC. 5. That the said board of management shall hold its meetings in such city as may be selected for the location of the said exposition by the National Cotton Planters' Association of America as aforesaid, and that a majority of said board of management shall have full power to make all needful rules and regulations for its government.

SEC. 6. That said board of management shall report to the President of the United States a suitable date for opening and closing the exposition; a schedule of appropriate ceremonies for opening or dedicating the same, and such other matters as in their judgment may be deemed important.

SEC. 7. That no compensation for services shall be paid to the commissioners or other officers provided by this act from the Treasury of the United States; and the United States shall not be liable for any of the expenses attending such exhibition, or by reason of the same.

SEC. 8. That whenever the President shall be informed by the said board of management that provision has been made for suitable buildings, or the erection of the same, for the purposes of said exposition, the President shall, through the Department of State, make proclamation of the same, setting forth the time at which the exhibition will open and the place at which it will be held, and such board of management shall communicate to the diplomatic representatives of all nations copies of the same and a copy of this act, together with such regulations as may be adopted by said board of management, for publication in their respective countries.

SEC. 9. That the President be requested to send, in the name of the United States, invitations to the governments of other nations to be represented and take part in said world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition, to be held in some city of the United States to be hereafter selected as aforesaid.

SEC. 10. That medals with appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions, commemorative of said world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition, and of the awards to be made to exhibitors thereof, be prepared at some mint of the United States, for the said board of management, subject to the provisions of the fifty-second section of the coinage act of 1873, upon the payment of a sum not less than the cost thereof; and all the provisions, whether penal or otherwise, of said coinage act against the counterfeiting or imitating of coins of the United States, shall apply to the medals struck and issued under this act.

SEC. 11. That all articles which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at the said world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition, to be held in the year 1884, shall be admitted without the payment of duty, or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles as shall be sold in the United States, or withdrawn for consumption therein at any time after such importation, shall be subject to the duties, if any are imposed on like articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation: And provided further, That in case any articles imported under the provisions of this act shall be withdrawn for consumption, or shall be sold without payment of duty as required by law, all penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be applied and enforced against such articles, and against the persons who may be guilty of such withdrawal or sale.

Approved February 10, 1883.

An act to make a loan to aid in the celebration of the world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition.

Whereas by the act of Congress entitled "An act to encourage the holding of a world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition in the year 1884," approved February 10, 1883, in the city of New Orleans, under the joint auspices of the United States, the National Cotton Planters' Association of America, and the said city of New Orleans, a world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition is to be held, universal in character, comprehending all arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine; and

Whereas by said act Congress declares that such exposition should be national and international in its character; and

Whereas under said act a board of management has been duly constituted and incorporated under the laws of the State of Louisiana, the members of which have been appointed by the President of the United States, upon recommendations made in the manner set forth in said act, and therefore are a duly qualified and commissioned United States board of management, clothed with full and adequate powers to perform any and all acts essential to the proper and necessary management of the affairs of the said world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition in the manner and form prescribed by said act, and duly authorized by the sanction of the Government of the United States to raise the capital necessary to carry into effect the provisions of said act of February 10, 1883; and

Whereas the President of the United States, in compliance with the terms and requirements of said act, has extended, in the name of the United States, a respectful and cordial invitation to the governments of other nations to be represented and take part in the said international exposition; and

Whereas the preparations designed by the world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition, and in part executed by the board of management, are in accordance with the spirit of the act of Congress relating thereto, and are on a scale creditable to the Government and the people of the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the public Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a loan to the world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition, to be used and employed by the board of management thereof to augment and enhance the success of the world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition in such manner as said board of management may determine and in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the said sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States on the drafts of the president and secretary of the board of management of the world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition authorized by order of said board, one-third of the amount immediately after the passage of this act upon being satisfied that $500,000 has been contributed and paid in to the said board for the purposes of the exposition by the contributors to, and shareholders of the world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition, and the remainder in four monthly payments thereafter upon being satisfied that each of the prior payments has been faithfully applied as required by this act, and for this purpose he shall have free access to the accounts and all transactions of said board: Provided further, That no greater amount shall be expended or liability or indebtedness of any kind incurred upon buildings, grounds, and preparations than the aggregate sum that may be paid in, by the subscribers to the capital stock and by donations and the amount of the loan provided herein: And provided further, That in the distribution of the amounts that may remain in the treasury of the board of management after the payments of the current expenses of administration the amount of the appropriation hereinbefore made shall be paid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend or percentage of profits or assets shall be paid to the holders of said stock or contributors: Provided further, That the Government of the United States shall not, under any circumstances, be liable for any debt or obligation created or incurred by the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, or its board of management, or for any sum whatever in addition to the amount appropriated by this act; and that adequate space to be determined by the President of the United States for such exhibits as the Government of the United States may see proper to make at said exposition shall be furnished free of all charge by said board: Provided further, That no sum shall be paid to the said board of management of said exposition until after the president, secretary, and a majority of the members of said board shall have executed a bond, with good and solvent security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of $300,000, to sufficiently secure the safe-keeping and the faithful disbursement of the sum hereby appropriated, and for the faithful observance of this act with regard to the limitation of expenditures and liabilities as fixed herein, and for the repayment to the Government of the United States of the surplus of proceeds of said exposition remaining after payment of the current expenses of administration, said repayment in no case to exceed the loan herein appropriated and provided for: And provided further, That the receipt of the loan herein made or any part thereof by said board of management shall be a full acceptance of all the trusts, conditions, provisions, and obligations of this act by the said board of management and by the corporation created under the laws of the State of Louisiana and designated as "The World's Industrial Cotton Centennial Exposition."

Approved, May 21 1884.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] for five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, we have done a great deal for this World's Fair and Cotton Exposition at New Orleans, but in doing what we have in the way of a loan of a million of dollars to that fair and afterward $300,000 to get up an exhibition, we have done the very thing expected in connection with our partnership arrangement which was previously made, and we have done the very thing which binds us, not legally, because the Government of the United States is never bound legally, but with the strongest kind of moral obligation, to do something more. And the doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, is how we are to do that thing. We have induced most of the civilized nations of the world to send exhibits to this world's fair, and we owe an obligation in a large degree to these nations of the world—we owe it to them to see that this exhibition or world's fair shall not be a failure.

Ay, Mr. Speaker, we owe something more, and that is to the dignity and greatness of the United States, that this fair shall be a success. We can not afford to degrade our national character in this matter by stepping aside at this moment and letting the creditors seize the property belonging to the exhibition and put an end to it in disgrace and humiliation not only to the management at New Orleans, but to the whole of the United States. We owe it to the individual States and Territories of this country, all of whom have been induced to send exhibits at large expense to this fair—done of course in their own interests, but with the understanding that the President of the United States had proclaimed to the people of the United States, ay, and to the people of the whole world, that there was to be a fair there, and it was to be sustained and maintained by the United States.

I have listened, Mr. Speaker, to the representatives of some of the States of this nation who have spent much time at this world's fair; I have listened to their appeal for help to sustain the dignity of the country and the various interests centered in that fair. The great educational exhibit down there is said to be worth to America—and if it goes mostly to the South all the better—worth to the United States all that has been put into it. It has been furnished by the people who have gathered it all over the country, some of it separate exhibits of States, and others supplied by the United States, all being concentrated there and made valuable to this country and perhaps to the world.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. If I had more time I had many other things to say.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want in the outset of my remarks, which will be very brief, to state that I intend to vote for the passage of this bill under a suspension of the rules; but I desire now to invite the recollection of the House, and those members who were here a few Congresses ago, and especially yourself, Mr. Speaker (Mr. Cox, of New York, in the chair), to the vote upon the proposition for a loan to the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876. It will be remembered, after the bill passed allowing us $1,500,000 as a loan to that great enterprise, which culminated in a world-wide success, that a year or two afterward another bill passed Congress by which that loan was exacted from the men who had originated that great exposition, and it was repaid, every dollar of it, to the Federal Treasury.

Now, sir, I simply desire to refer to that fact, and I regard this as a most appropriate occasion for doing so. I stand here as a representative in part of the great city of Philadelphia, with the full knowledge that I can not go back to my constituents having voted against this proposition. I, with my colleagues on this floor, represent a community generous and liberal in the extreme, and particularly so in all matters pertaining to the great industries of our country. We represent constituents filled with pride of the country and its resources, and we represent constituencies and citizens who are alive to enterprise and alive to progress, as is fully shown in the history of this country; and hence I shall vote for this proposition.

I should fail in my duty to them if I voted in opposition to it, although, in fact, and as a measure of justice to those who so liberally expended their private means to make the Philadelphia exposition of 1876 a success, I should be glad to see adopted an amendment providing—

That whenever it is ascertained that the loan of $1,000,000 and the additional loan of $300,000 is not to be repaid by the World's Cotton Exposition at New Orleans, then this loan of $1,500,000 which was made to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, and the payment of which was exacted, shall be considered due and payable to the finance commission of the said Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia.

That would be only an equitable proposition, and it is one that I hope the sense of justice of the Government will one day approve.

But, sir, I shall not do anything here that will jeopardize the passage of this measure. If this House is not yet prepared to do this act of justice to my constituents, I shall still feel it my duty to support the appropriation for the New Orleans Exposition. This Government has lent its aid to that enterprise. All the States of our Union and the great nations of the earth have accepted the invitation to participate and have sent on their exhibits. Shall we now withdraw, and have disastrous failure if not national disgrace to follow?

Permit me to say, sir, that Philadelphia was the originator of this great exposition business. The enterprise and public spirit of Philadelphia originated the Centennial Exposition, which for six months in the year 1876—from May 10 of that year, when the exposition was opened, until the 10th day of November, when it was closed—enabled us to illustrate to the country and to illustrate to the world the progress, the enterprise, the industry, and the wealth of this country side by side with the exhibitions of foreign nations; and we were permitted in that manner to show to them that American ingenuity and American genius were equal and superior in many respects to the ingenuity, enterprise, and progress of the nations of the Old World.

I want to state this, sir, in behalf of this great manufacturing commercial center of Philadelphia. It is due to that city and to its enterprising people that these facts should be kept before the country. I want also to mention here that the three hundred contributors that went to New Orleans and who are there to-day from Pennsylvania and from the city of Philadelphia are there to enable the country and the world to see something of the wonderful resources of that State and of that city which I in part represent. Those people, the people who honor me by sending me here to occupy a seat in this Hall, would not indorse my action did I not vote to extend this further assistance of $300,000; and if it be necessary to give it away, as well as to give away the million of dollars that we appropriated a short time ago to New Orleans, even in the face of the fact that Philadelphia was required at the completion of her great exposition to return the million and a half of dollars that the Government had given for that purpose, I would still feel it my duty to support it, and know that they will indorse and justify my action in doing so.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LORE. Mr. Speaker, when the original proposition was before the House for the loan of $1,000,000 to aid the New Orleans Exposition I offered an amendment that a bond should be executed conditioned for the unconditional repayment of that money. This House voted a loan of $1,000,000 for the exposition. Without that $1,000,000 there would be no exposition, and the nations of Europe and the nations of South America and our sister States in the Union would not have been induced to take their exhibits to New Orleans at a large expenditure of money and time and at great sacrifice to themselves.

That gift and the countenance this Government gave to the exposition made it possible that it should be held. Now, if I understand the situation, without this additional appropriation of $300,000 for its support the exposition will fail. The question now presents itself by thus inviting these people, by thus creating that which would not have been without Federal aid, do we not become a party to deception, to the procurement of goods under false pretenses?

Mr. FINDLAY (from his seat). The exposition of goods.

Mr. LORE. My friend suggests the exposition of goods. Yes; we procured the exposition of such goods by such pretenses. I did not believe the original loan wise, nor would I support a like appropriation if it were a new proposition. But the honor and faith of the nation is now pledged, and we can not without national disgrace now withhold this aid. I shall vote for the appropriation on these grounds.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, the value and importance to our people and to the country of a world's exposition like the one at Philadelphia in 1876 and the one now going on at New Orleans can not be estimated by thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars. There is going on in all the leading countries of the globe new inventions and progress in the fields of art, agriculture, and manufacture. Sometimes one country and sometimes another is in advance in some branch of industry, and these great expositions, bringing the products and handiwork of all nations together in competitive exhibition, at once enlighten and stimulate the whole people to greater progress.

Our exposition in 1876 not only inspired our established industries to renewed energy and effort in improvement, but new branches of industry were established, and have since prospered and have given employment to our artisans and added wealth to the country. I am willing, therefore, to vote additional aid to the New Orleans Exposition provided it is restricted to the conditions proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR]. It is right and proper that the creditors who live at long distances from the institution and have received no pay whatever should be made special creditors so far as this donation is concerned.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What right have we to pay these claims any more than to pay the creditors of any one else or to pay my debts?

Mr. RUSSELL. As the gentleman from Ohio has well said, the national honor is involved.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What assurance have we that this sum will pay the bills and maintain the national honor?

Mr. RUSSELL. We must meet the emergency as it is presented to us. With the restriction provided for in the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] we know it goes so far as it may in liquidating existing claims.

Their experience, so far as their financial condition is concerned, is the experience of every other like scheme, or I may say the experience of almost every undertaking of magnitude. It is difficult in an exposition of this kind to estimate the full cost, there are so many elements of uncertainty. In fact, in any large enterprise they seldom keep the expenditures within the first estimate. If the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] is accepted I shall vote to donate the $300,000 recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ELLIS. I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] will now occupy the remainder of his time.

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in the few moments left me that in my effort to divert this money to a fixed channel I simply sought to do what I believed will best serve the interests of the people, who have the good of this exposition at heart.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have in my pocket letters from several men who have property on exhibition down there. One man writes me that he has paid in getting his horses to that exhibition $930; that he has been awarded over $1,600 premiums, not one cent of which can be realized, and that he is in trouble for means to remove his property and get it home, unless some provision is made for the payment of these premiums.

I want it well understood by this House that I do not claim we are ever going to get the $1,000,000 back that we loaned. We did not look for it. I might further say that a proposition was made to the management that is now in charge of that exposition to take the entire property and raise this $300,000, and that the Government release the $1,000,000 to them and give them the whole property if they would do that and let the Government get clear from this out. That proposition was rejected, for the simple reason, I suppose, of their inability to raise that amount of money which is needed now to go on with the enterprise.

I shall make this proposition as a substitute for the section; but if there is objection on the part of some of my friends on this side of the House, I shall submit it in such a form that the money shall be paid through an agent of the Secretary of the Treasury, detailed by the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of an Army officer. I am satisfied to make that amendment. All I want is that this money shall be paid to the parties who have been induced to go there from all over the United States in the payment of the premiums and the indebtedness so that they shall get their pay; otherwise I can not vote for the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HERR. I offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana has twenty minutes to close debate.

Mr. ELLIS addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ELLIS. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he desires it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. In view of what I have said I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORN]. I do not want any one to conclude I am not in favor of voting this $300,000.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule of the House the time for debate is now closed.

Mr. RANDALL. I have a suggestion to make, and that is that gentlemen who desire to submit amendments will send them up to be printed in the RECORD, and then that after the bill has been read the House will adjourn. I recognize the fact that many members of the House were here until midnight last night, and we now have been in continuous session for seven hours. I think it is nothing but reasonable to make this order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Let us vote on the amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. That can not be done, as many members have gone away.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests that members having amendments to offer will submit them so they may be printed in the RECORD for information and then the bill will be read, after which the House will stand adjourned.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. ELLIS. It is of course understood that all points of order are reserved.

Mr. O'HARA. Can amendments be offered outside of this measure?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent. The amendments will be printed in the RECORD for information.

Mr. ELLIS. To save all rights I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The amendments are not now offered, but are sent up to be printed in the RECORD for the information of the House.

The following amendments were submitted under the order of the House:

By Mr. HORN, as follows:

For the purpose of aiding the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition now being held in the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, not to exceed the sum of $300,000, but so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, and to be used first in payment of the indebtedness now outstanding of said exposition which is due to persons, firms, or corporations living and doing business outside of the State of Louisiana, including debts due to foreigners or foreign nations and such as are due to States and Territories from said exposition; secondly, in payment of all premiums heretofore awarded or which shall be hereafter awarded by said exposition in accordance with the lists of awards heretofore published; said money to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall make proper rules and regulations for the form and verification of vouchers in proof of such indebtedness, and shall detail a proper agent of his Department to disburse said funds as directed by said Secretary, who shall make a detailed statement of his transactions to the Treasury Department.

By Mr. POTTER, as follows:

Strike out from the commencement of line 2084 to the end of line 2041, inclusive.

By Mr. GEORGE D. WISE, as follows:

In line 2022, after the word "Smith," strike out "assistant librarian" and insert "and Asher Barnett, assistant librarians;" and in line 2023, after the word "dollars," insert "each;" so that it will read: "To pay William H. Smith and Asher Barnett, assistant librarians, House of Representatives, for additional services during the first and second sessions of the Forty-eighth Congress, $600 each."

By Mr. ELLWOOD, as follows:

Strike out lines 2032 to 2041 inclusive and insert:

"A committee of three members of the House shall be appointed by the Speaker to inquire into the expenditures by and money received by the managers of the World's Industrial Cotton and Centennial Exposition. The said committee are hereby empowered to administer oaths, to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to send for persons and papers; and it shall report the result of its investigation to the Forty-ninth Congress on or before December 10, 1895."

By Mr. KRIEGER, as follows:

Strike out in lines 2028, 2029, and 2040 the words:

"Preference being given to such debts as constitute a lien upon the buildings and machinery on the exposition grounds."

And insert in lieu thereof the words:

"And if said sum is not sufficient to pay such indebtedness in full, then the same shall be paid pro rata."

By Mr. SMALLS, as follows:

On line 1906 strike out the word "twenty-two" and insert "twenty-three."

On line 1916 strike out the word "thirteen" and insert the word "fourteen."

On line 1914 add the word "five hundred" after the word "thousand," so as to read "ten thousand and five hundred dollars." In the same line strike out the words "in all, forty-nine thousand dollars" and add "for a force-pump $400, to be immediately available; in all, $51,900."

By Mr. THOMAS, as follows:

Amendment to come in after line 1032:

"To reimburse Commander A. G. Kellogg, United States Navy, for personal effects destroyed by the burning of the United States light-house tender Lilly, $1,000."

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians, of Minnesota, subsequent to June 1, 1861, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 13th instant, requesting me to inform that body, if not incompatible with the public interest, what were the reasons which moved me to appoint commissioners to examine and report upon the California and Oregon Railroad from Redding northwardly, I transmit herewith a communication on that subject, addressed to me on the 24th instant by the Secretary of the Interior, setting forth the practice under which my action was taken.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 25, 1895.

BAR OPPOSITE LICKING RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of surveys and examination of bar in the Ohio River opposite the mouth of Licking River; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL CRUISER AND DISPATCH BOAT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy for completing the new naval cruiser and dispatch-boat; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DESTITUTE AMERICAN CITIZENS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, informing the House of assistance being rendered by that Department to destitute American citizens at Livingston, Central America, and asking approval of his action by Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PENNSYLVANIA WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of allowance of the twelfth installment of the Pennsylvania war claims; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF CONGAREE RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of the results of the survey of the Congaree River; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PLATES—MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, requesting the return of the original copies and plates of the report of the Mississippi River Commission, for the purpose of having blue prints made therefrom.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be complied with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FINERTY, for the remainder of the day, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. HUNT, during the night sessions of the House, on account of ill-health.

To Mr. GLASCOCK, for the rest of the day, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. JOHNSON, for the rest of the day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BEACH, from attendance on night sessions for the balance of the session, on account of ill health.

To Mr. BLANCHARD, for to-day, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw papers in the following cases:

To Mr. DINGLEY, to withdraw from the files of the House the papers accompanying House bill 6311, there being no adverse report.

To Mr. CULLEN, papers in the case of Mrs. Mary Ripley, without leaving copies on file.

To Mr. SKINNER, of New York, to withdraw from the files of the House the bill (H. R. 1072) for the relief of Robert Tillson and Maitland Boone, with accompanying papers, there being no adverse report.

To Mr. PETTIDONE, to withdraw papers on file in support of the bill for the relief of David W. Harrison without leaving certified copies, the same no longer being necessary, as the relief sought has been granted by the general act in regard to the reissue of lost Government checks.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 78) for the erection of a public building at La Crosse, Wis.

PENSION BILLS.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, it was ordered that Senate pension bills on the Speaker's table be taken therefrom and appropriately referred.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. HARDEMAN to print remarks on the bill to aid in the support of common schools; and to Mr. EVANS to print remarks on the deficiency bill.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House the Clerk will now proceed to read the bill, after which the House will adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is an appropriation made by this bill of $85,199.12 for the public building at Fort Wayne, Ind. After this bill was prepared, as the House is aware, the House increased the limit of the appropriation for that building. I ask unanimous consent therefore to reduce that amount in the bill to $60,000. I think in fact the whole appropriation ought to be stricken out.

Mr. LOWRY. I have no objection to the correction being made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I refer to line 82 of the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Before giving consent I ask if that increases the amount which was appropriated the other day for this building?

Mr. HOLMAN. This reduces the amount fixed in this bill from $85,000 to $60,000. It is an increase of the amount appropriated the other day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not know why it is in here at all, as we passed a bill a few days ago for this purpose.

Mr. KEIFER. What is the limit of the building now? I would like to ask whether $60,000 will exceed that limit?

Mr. LOWRY. This reduction is made for the purpose of fixing the amount at the limit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not object to this reduction.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I do not care whether it is a reduction or not, I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] does not understand the point. I hope he will withdraw his objection. We ought not to duplicate this appropriation.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I would like to ask unanimous consent to report a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to recognize the gentleman, but the House has made an order with regard to the bill under consideration which the Chair must execute.

Mr. ENGLISH. I ask unanimous consent to strike out, in lines 1421 and 1422, the words "Indianapolis arsenal, Indiana," where they occur in the paragraph authorizing the Secretary of War to sell certain arsenals.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HEPBURN. I renew it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

During the reading of the bill the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. DUNHAM (interrupting the reading). I rise to ask if unanimous consent can not be given to dispense with the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The House has just by unanimous consent ordered the bill to be read.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent now to dispense with the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it understood that as soon as this is read the House will adjourn?

The SPEAKER. That is the order of the House. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR (interrupting the reading). I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WELLBORN). That request has already been submitted and objection was made.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There are not forty members of the House present.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not entertain that motion. The order of the House is that the bill shall be read and that the House shall then adjourn.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. And the force shall be carried out.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. When it is plain beyond question that there is no quorum present can I not object to this business proceeding?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The order of the House has been made that the bill shall be read.

Mr. DUNHAM. Can the bill be read to the House when it is known there is not a quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The order of the House is imperative. The Clerk will continue to read.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I would like to hear the order of the House read.

Objection was made.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Would it be in order for the Clerk and the Committee on Appropriations to repair to the committee-room and there finish the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If an order has been made to read this bill would it not now be in order to make a motion to reconsider that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not, because the order of the House has been partly executed.

Mr. HEPBURN (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated that that motion is not in order.

Mr. HEPBURN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal. The order of the House must be executed.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I wish to inquire of the Chair is not a motion to adjourn always in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order while the House is executing the order of the House, that this bill shall be read and that the House shall then adjourn.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has announced repeatedly that the only thing in order now is the reading of this bill, the House by unanimous consent having ordered that it be read.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the Chair permit me to remind him that the occupant of the chair did entertain a proposition to change the text of that bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This occupant of the chair did not.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is not that the fact as I have stated it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that was done before the reading of the bill began.

Mr. LONG. And it was done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to members of the House that if the Clerk is not interrupted the reading will soon terminate. The Chair will further say that under the order of the House as soon as the reading of this bill is completed the present occupant of the chair will declare the House adjourned.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then those of us who are here need not stay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter that members must determine for themselves. The Chair, of course, will not undertake to determine it for them.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. In the course of the reading of this bill will the occupant of the Chair entertain any request for unanimous consent to change the text of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not entertain any such request.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. That will do; then we can all go home.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill in extenso. And then, under the previous order, the House (at 7 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Petition of 84 citizens of Connorsville, Ind., on the subject of polygamy in Utah—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. YOUNG: Petitions of A. B. Carter and of C. M. Ayers, widow of Tredwell S. Ayres, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, asking reference of their claims to the Court of Claims for rehearing under the provisions of the Bowman act—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. KEIFER: Of George P. Mulford and 45 others, of Urbana, Ohio.

By Mr. LACEY: Of Wallace E. Wright and 16 others, of Coldwater, Mich.

By Mr. RANDALL: Resolutions of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in relation to the Mexican pension bill.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 27, 1885.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suggest, while we are waiting for those members of the Senate who occupy most of the time of it while in session—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is not yet called to order. The Chair will, however, call the Senate to order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was suggesting whether this might not be an opportune time, while waiting for members of the Senate who generally occupy most of the time of the Senate while in session, to ask for the consideration of a bill which will provoke no discussion. Therefore I ask unanimous consent—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nothing is in order at this time except the reading of the Journal, and that is not in order until a quorum has appeared. [After a pause.] The Chair will now direct the Journal of yesterday's proceedings to be read.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SUPPLIES TO MINNESOTA SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate for further consideration the bill (S. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for leave to move at this time that a message be sent to the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill named by him. Is there objection to receiving the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to it. If there be no objection it will be agreed to. It is agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to take up now the naval appropriation bill, which is ready for the Senate. I will state the reason why I make the request at the present time. I do not anticipate that the bill will take much time in the Senate. I do not think the trouble with the bill will be here; but Senators know how for the last two years much time has been consumed in conference between the two Houses on the naval appropriation bills, and therefore it is very desirable that the bill should be sent to the House as soon as possible. If I can get it through this morning I should hope to get a conference to-morrow; and if there are protracted conferences we shall be able at least to bring the disagreements in conference before the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to make a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. I ask consent at this time to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his request?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

ROUND VALLEY INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs, who were instructed by the Senate to investigate the condition of affairs in the Round Valley Indian reservation in California, have attended to that duty, and instruct me to submit a report in writing, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs at this time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator submits a report in writing on the subject referred to the committee named by him, which will be printed and placed on file. The Senator from Maine is now recognized.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOWEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Maine to yield for morning business.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous, for the reason I have given, to get the naval appropriation bill through the Senate early to-day.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I trust the Senator from Maine will not press that bill, at least until committees have had an opportunity to make their reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It only requires a single objection. Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I shall have to object at this time, because the appropriation bills can force themselves before the Senate for consideration at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Of course I am entirely aware that at this time, except by unanimous consent, I can not get the naval appropriation bill before the Senate. I want Senators to realize the almost intolerable position the Senate is put in on appropriation bills, in the last five or six days of a session with the great bills appropriating for the uses of the Government tumbling in upon us to be considered by the Appropriations Committee, after having been passed under a suspension of the rules elsewhere, and it is essential in the largest degree to the comfort of the Senate and in order to save an extra session that every possible advancement shall be given to the appropriation bills. I know that Senators are desirous of going through with the routine business and making their reports and getting them off their hands; but if Senators believe, or if any one Senator believes, that that is more important now than to dispose of the naval appropriation bill, of course I can not go on. If the objection is made now, I give notice that at the end of the routine morning business I shall move to take up the bill; and with that, of course, I leave it to the Senate.

Mr. BOWEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I object.

Mr. BOWEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. As objection is made it implies the regular order of morning business, which is not yet commenced, and with the permission of the Senator from Colorado the Chair will lay before the Senate certain communications from the Executive Departments.

Mr. BOWEN. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the request of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Colorado to object. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] objected.

Mr. BOWEN. I merely wish to present an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill when I can get the floor for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an appropriation estimate, received from the Secretary of State, for the relief of Sampson P. Bailly, late United States consul at Palermo; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an appropriation estimate, received from the Secretary of the Navy, for completing the ordnance of the new steel cruisers; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an appropriation estimate, received from the Secretary of the Navy, for the repairs of the stone dry-dock at the Brooklyn navy-yard; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State recommending an appropriation for the compensation of William Schuchardt for services rendered in procuring testimony to be adduced before the United States and Mexican Claims Commission; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.

[Twenty-fourth session. S. P. No. 204. Introduced by Mr. Billson, February 5, 1885.]

A joint resolution urging upon Congress the immediate enlargement of the lockage of the Sault Saint Mary's Canal.

Whereas it appears from the report of General O. M. Poe, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, that the commerce through the Sault Saint Mary's Canal, at its present rate of increase, will within four years outgrow the utmost capacity of the lockage system of said canal:

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That we hereby respectfully urge upon Congress the necessity for immediate and liberal appropriations for the enlargement of the lockage of said canal.

Resolved, That the secretary of state forward a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

C. A. GILMAN,

President of the Senate.

JOHN L. GIBBS,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved February 20, A. D. 1885.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Department of State:

I hereby certify that I have carefully compared the foregoing with the original now on file in this department, and that it is a true and correct copy thereof and of the whole of the same.

Witness my hand and the great seal of the State this 24th day of February, A. D. 1885.

FRED. VON BAUMBACH,
Secretary of State.

Mr. McMILLAN. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota of the character just read from the desk, and I will ask its proper reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand it to be identical with the one presented by the Chair?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the joint resolution will be referred, without reading, to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Los Angeles, Cal., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of Albert Bouldin, Martha Bain, H. W. Hinkle, Henry Klinge, and M. A. Triplett, of Washington, D. C., praying compensation for damages to their property resulting from public improvements in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON presented a petition of Presley Smith and 87 others, citizens of Morgan County, Indiana, praying for the repeal of the act limiting arrears to those who applied for pension prior to July 1, 1880, and that Congress pass other legislation favorable to the soldiers of the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB presented two petitions of citizens of Kansas and other States, praying for the construction of a wagon-road from Caldwell, Kans., to Wichita Falls, Tex.; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 1618) to provide for the construction of a court-house and post-office at Clarksburg, W. Va.;

A bill (H. R. 2123) for the erection of a public building at Wichita, Kans.;

A bill (H. R. 870) to provide for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, Miss., for use as a post-office, United States court, and for United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3593) for the erection of a public building at Chicago, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 3343) for the erection of a public building in the city of Auburn, N. Y.

A bill (H. R. 1321) for the erection of a public building at Reading, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 4067) to change the limit of appropriations for the public building at Louisville, Ky.; and

A bill (H. R. 2949) for the erection of a public building at Port Townsend, Wash.

Mr. MAHONE. Now I hope that it will be the pleasure of the Senate to take these bills up and pass them. I ask unanimous consent that they may be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6089) for the relief of Moses F. Carleton; and

A bill (H. R. 6533) for the relief of Dr. Thomas J. Jones.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2975) granting a pension to Marion D. Egbert;

A bill (H. R. 200) granting a pension to Thomas Jeffries;

A bill (H. R. 1866) granting a pension to Calvin L. Knick;

A bill (H. R. 6357) granting a pension to Christian Bauman;

A bill (H. R. 8189) granting a pension to Mrs. F. M. Norton;

A bill (H. R. 7485) granting a pension to Alexander Weide;

A bill (H. R. 7718) restoring John Snyder to the pension-roll; and

A bill (H. R. 2607) granting a pension to Mary B. Holmes.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2528) for the relief of James McKinley, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2421) for the relief of John Snyder, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CULLOM. I am also instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1862) for the increase of the pension of James Buchanan, to submit an adverse report thereon, and to state that the party claimant since the bill was introduced has died, and that the widow of the claimant is now seeking a pension through the regular channel in the Pension Office. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (H. R. 8069) granting a pension to Catharine Helton;
- A bill (H. R. 7434) granting a pension to Sylvester Greenough;
- A bill (H. R. 7000) for the relief of Clark G. Maine;
- A bill (H. R. 7938) granting a pension to Amanda Allen;
- A bill (H. R. 7502) granting a pension to Richard W. Barnes;
- A bill (H. R. 7803) granting a pension to L. W. Pitts;
- A bill (H. R. 4216) granting a pension to David N. Bryan;
- A bill (H. R. 1901) for the relief of Harrison Mitchell, late of Company K, Forty-eighth Indiana Volunteers;
- A bill (H. R. 8090) granting a pension to Albert Harper; and
- A bill (H. R. 389) granting a pension to John Boyle.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

- A bill (H. R. 7805) granting a pension to Capt. Vincent Phelps; and
- A bill (S. 1323) to increase the pension of David I. Whitman.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (S. 1811) granting a pension to Anne T. Dicks;
- A bill (S. 2359) granting a pension to M. Louise Butler;
- A bill (S. 2448) for the relief of Sally C. Mulligan;
- A bill (S. 2654) granting a pension to Charles F. Hildreth;
- A bill (H. R. 5998) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan C. Harrison;

- A bill (H. R. 1710) granting a pension to George W. Bean;
- A bill (H. R. 7810) granting a pension to Rosanna Riley;
- A bill (H. R. 5330) granting a pension to Octavia A. Newhall;
- A bill (H. R. 7853) granting a pension to Margaret Flaherty;
- A bill (H. R. 8048) to increase the pension of Ferdinand Hercher;
- A bill (H. R. 5378) granting a pension to Henry Milkey;
- A bill (H. R. 8082) granting a pension to Lina J. Stearns;
- A bill (H. R. 5300) for the relief of Charles Milk;
- A bill (H. R. 3947) granting a pension to Joseph Raible; and
- A bill (H. R. 4393) for the relief of Lient. Nathaniel Johnson Coffin.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2661) granting a pension to Miss ——— Gill, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7538) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Blake, to report it adversely; and I submit the views of the minority favoring the passage of the bill. I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee, and, if there be no objection, the views of the minority will be received and printed.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Ann Atkinson, granddaughter of George Mason, of Virginia, praying for an increase of pension, submitted a report thereon accompanied by a bill (S. 2665) granting increase of pension to Ann Atkinson; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon and moved their indefinite postponement; which was agreed to:

- A bill (S. 144) granting a pension to George W. Bean;
- A bill (S. 1894) granting a pension to Octavia A. Newhall; and
- A bill (S. 2193) granting a pension to Ferdinand Hercher.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (H. R. 7177) granting a pension to William H. Kinman;
- A bill (H. R. 7178) granting an increase of pension to John O. Gardner;

- A bill (H. R. 7503) for the relief of Daniel McAlpin;
- A bill (H. R. 2085) granting a pension to Joseph McIntosh;
- A bill (H. R. 8187) granting a pension to Chaney G. Darrah;
- A bill (H. R. 4458) granting a pension to Harlan Jackson; and
- A bill (H. R. 7340) granting a pension to John Sperr.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (S. 2546) granting a pension to Charlotte C. B. Hatch;
- A bill (S. 2620) granting a pension to Thomas H. Boaz; and
- A bill (S. 2619) granting a pension to Martha Hughes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to say in connection with these reports that immediately after the naval appropriation bill, which will be called up this morning, shall have been acted upon, I shall ask that the Senate bills reported favorably from the Committee on Pensions may be considered, for the reason that the House Committee on Pensions will meet this afternoon for the purpose of considering Senate bills so that they may be passed to-night in the House, and this will probably be the last and only opportunity to pass the few Senate bills which are reported from the Committee on Pensions this morning. I will ask the clerks to retain the Senate bills and not send them to the Printer, so that they may go into the hands of the House committee after their passage by the Senate.
